Evidence of H. A. Reeves' non-reform. He is a traitor and ought to go back to Fort Lafayette for the winter.

HONORABLY DISCHARGED.

Jacob A. Appley, esq., of Southold, a well-known citizen who was arrested in New York City a short time ago charged with complicity in the alleged preparations to send the bark Augusta (of which he is owner) on a slave voyage and confined in Fort Lafayette by order of Secretary Seward was released on Tuesday, the charges against him proving to be frivolous. He reached his home on Wednesday. He tells a hard story of the fare and treatment dispensed to the unfortunates confined in that infernal bastille.—Greenport (L. I.) Watchman.

We never knew of a man sent to prison as a criminal who did not consider his fare and treatment "hard." Offenders are generally arrested "for nothing," at least they always say so.

Judge Flanders, as true and loyal a Democrat as the State contains, is a martyr to freedom of the press, being held in custody at Fort Warren without even the color of law.

We find the above in the Greenport (L. I.) Watchman, edited by Mr. Reeves recently released under mistaken clemency from Fort Lafayette.

THURLOW WEED, Esq., Astor House, New York.

MY DEAR WEED: It is not in my judgment expedient for me to engage in correspondence on the subject referred to in the within letter. You can say to the police commissioners that Murray not Kennedy made the arrest, and if need be you can tell Mr. Bergen that Colonel Ludlow did not recommend the arrest but it was made on other demands, he knowing nothing about it.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. SEWARD.

P. S.—Please return the papers.

[Inclosure.]

BROOKLYN, October 15, 1863.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: In a conversation some time since with Thurlow Weed he stated that the evidence in regard to Ludlow's recommendation of the arrest of Reeves would come out upon the case of the police commissioners and thought I had better get a resolution passed by that board asking for the evidence, which he said he had read in the State Department. That resolution passed and I am informed is now before you. It was in your defense that I made the statement that Ludlow was the cause of the arrest, he stating that the cause of the arrest was a political attack made in a paper edited by Reeves.

Ludlow has denied even recommending the arrest or having anything to do with it, and has tried to prove it by a letter from Mr. Webster. I think it is due to truth and justice, to history and to me that the facts should be placed before the world. Amongst your most malignant maligners has been this same Ludlow, and Weed knows that he has made charges against both you and Weed of the most outrageous character. I ask this as a matter of justice, and there can be no good reason why so base a scoundrel as this same Ludlow has proved himself should be sheltered by your Department. The arrest at the time was highly censured and the friend who excused you and put the blame where it belonged should not be left in the position of making false charges. Therefore I hope you will consider it a matter of duty to answer in full the resolution sent to you by the police commissioners. You will pardon me for saying that I think your own friends demand that the whole truth should be made known. It was arrests of this kind, counseled by leading, pretending Democrats, that has given hope and life to the miserable copperheads of this State. The true history of this arrest is undoubtedly the history of many and if made public will do much to put down this miserable faction and cause the election I think of a Union senator for the First district.

Yours, &c.,

A. J. BERGEN.

Case of Cyrus F. Sargent.

Cyrus F. Sargent was arrested by order of the Secretary of State by U. S. Marshal Clarke, of Maine, about September 5, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren. He was charged with having a contract to furnish rebel regiments with supplies; with being engaged in building a vessel to carry war material to the insurrectionary States; with denouncing the Government and avowing sympathy with treason, and with intending to leave the State of Maine for the insurrectionary States and affording aid and comfort to the rebellion. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 6, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Sargent on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will do no act hostile or injurious to the United States during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released November 10, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

YARMOUTH, ME., August 30, 1861.

HON. W. H. SEWARD, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to inform your Department that Cyrus F. Sargent and Octavius A. Hill, members of New Orleans firms, representatives of the ship-owning and slave-holding interests and contractors for supplying regiments in the rebel army, are now in this town denouncing the Government and boldly avowing their sympathy for treason.

It is their intention to leave in a few days for New Orleans. If it is thought desirable to arrest them the authorities of Portland will attend to the matter when ordered so to do by the Government. I have given information to General Scott, to whom I am not entirely unknown. To him I would respectfully refer you for additional particulars. The Department can rely on the correctness of these facts.

DEAR SIR: The friends of Cyrus F. Sargent have requested me to write to you in connection with a petition† which they have signed to that effect asking that the cause of his confinement in Fort Lafayette may be investigated, and if not inconsistent with the public welfare upon his taking an oath of allegiance that he may be discharged. I have no personal acquaintance with Mr. Sargent and no personal knowledge of the cause or circumstances attending his arrest, but I am acquainted with many of those who have signed his petition and know them to be loyal and respectable, occupying high social positions, whose statements and wishes are entitled to consideration, and as Mr. Sargent is claimed to be a citizen of Maine and a resident of the district which I represent I have thought it not unreasonable for me to comply with their request so far as to call your attention to his case and inform you of the high social position of many of the signers of his petition, and to express the hope that you will cause the desired investigation to be made at the earliest day practicable.

Yours, with respect,

C. W. WALTON,
Member of Congress, Maine.

PORTLAND, October 1, 1861.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I am requested to state to you the character of the petitions‡ to be forwarded to you with reference to the case of Cyrus F. Sargent. The petition signed by Eleazer Burbank and others contains the names of many gentlemen known to me as among the leading Republicans and most zealous and ardent friends of the Government; that signed by R. G. Blanchard and others, though as I am informed signed mostly by Democrats yet contains the names of several gentlemen of high respectability, and who I have no doubt give their warm support to the Government in its present struggle. Both together embrace a large number of the people of Yarmouth, Mr. Sargent's place of residence.

I can see no good reason why their request should not be granted, but as I know nothing of the facts do not assume to judge the matter.

W. P. FESSENDEN.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I this day received the papers relating to the application of Cyrus F. Sargent, a prisoner of war in confinement in Fort Lafayette, for release. I have addressed letters to the persons furnishing the information upon which the arrest was made with a view of taking their testimony and shall take such other evidence as will be offered, after which and as soon as the case can be investigated I will report to you and return the papers.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE F. TALBOT,

U. S. Attorney for District of Maine.

PORTLAND, October 12, 1861.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: The friends (family) of Sargent have requested me to call your attention to the petitions heretofore forwarded to you for a speedy examination of his case as they feel confident that it will result in his release. Their anxiety is occasioned by the situation of his family, he having four young children who having lost their mother need his personal supervision. I write this merely to comply with their request that I would again call your attention to the matter.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

W. P. FESSENDEN.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

I send by next mail depositions and report in case of Cyrus F. Sargent. My conclusion is that his further detention is not necessary. Domestic reasons for early release.

GEORGE F. TALBOT,

U. S. District Attorney.

OFFICE OF THE U. S. ATTORNEY,
Portland, November 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Having been by your letter of the 3d ultimo requested to examine the papers upon which Cyrus F. Sargent, of Yarmouth, in this State, late of New Orleans, La., was arrested together with such as were submitted to you asking his release and such additional testimony as might be offered and to report my opinion of the merits of the case I have complied with your request, and have the honor to submit my report together with the papers transmitted to me and such affidavits as I have deemed it advisable to take.

I am informed that the prisoner Sargent, whose wife deceased last May, has under his care a family of young children now requiring his special attention on account of the serious illness of one of them. I have therefore telegraphed to you the conclusion to which I have arrived upon examining the case in order that his detention in prison might not be attributable for a single day to mere delay in forwarding a report and the evidence to Washington.

The information upon which Sargent's arrest was ordered appears to be a letter from William G. Hoben of August 30 ultimo and a letter of D. L. Eaton of September 11 ultimo, referring to George Woods, of Pittsburg, Pa., as authority for its statements. The charges in these letters are these: First, he was one of a business firm who had a contract for the supply of rebel regiments; second, they were building a vessel at Yarmouth to carry material (of war) to the coast of Texas; third, while in Yarmouth they denounced the Government and avowed sympathy with treason; fourth, they were about to leave the State with the purpose of going to New Orleans.

Proceeding to investigate the grounds of these charges, I addressed letters to Messrs. Hoben, Eaton and Woods recapitulating the information accredited to them and asking them to state such facts in support of these charges as were within their own knowledge, or to refer me to persons who had knowledge of such facts whose affidavits might be taken, at the same time assuring them that all communications and affidavits should be regarded as confidential. From Mr. Hoben I received no reply, and it appears from Mr. O. B. Pratt's affidavit that he has been absent from Yarmouth about six weeks and is now supposed to be in Washington. Messrs. Eaton and Woods have replied and I forward their letters as a part of my report.

Mr. Woods appears to have no knowledge whatever as to either of the charges except that he completely negatives the second. He refers, however, to Capt. Calvin Humphrey, late of the ship State of Maine, and to the postmaster at Yarmouth as persons likely to have knowledge of facts tending to substantiate the first and third charges. Captain Humphrey as appears by the affidavit of Mr. Ingraham is absent on a voyage from Europe to the Chincha Islands, and I judge that the friendly nature of his relations with the prisoner and the sympathy for the rebel cause attributed to him by Mr. Woods will not authorize the expectation that his testimony when obtained will be any more conclusive against the prisoner than that already obtained. However that may be it does not seem to me expedient to suspend a decision of the case to await his uncertain return and doubtful testimony.

I have taken the testimony of the postmaster referred to in Mr. Woods' letter, Mr. Otis B. Pratt, of Yarmouth, and forward it as a part of the case. In reference to the first charge he seems to have no actual knowledge. He had heard one Joseph Gooding say that Sargent and Hill had a contract to supply the rebel army, but Gooding communicated this as information obtained in this State during the last summer and not as what he had learned at the South; and indeed it appears that he left the South previous to the taking of Fort Sumter. In reference to the second charge Mr. Pratt's information is hearsay; and if it were sufficient evidence it is evidence only of a wish of Sargent & Hill to load Gooding's vessel with supplies for the rebel army—a wish not followed by any attempt or overt act to accomplish it. The statement of Pratt goes far toward discrediting the supposition of any such attempt or act. There appears to be nothing in the affidavit of Mr. Pratt tending to sustain the third charge other than that the prisoner was in political sympathy with the Breckinridge branch of the Democratic party in this State and openly expressed the opinions which that party expressed and continue to express with reference to the rebellion, the war and the Administration. So long as such declarations are unaccompanied by treasonable acts it is certainly not the policy or purpose of the Government to interfere with them. Pratt affirms that he heard nothing of a treasonable nature said by Sargent or imputed to him by others. I should have sought out this Captain Gooding and taken his affidavit but for his absence at sea.

Mr. D. L. Eaton's letter in reply to mine is under date of October 22 ultimo and is appended to this report. He admits that he has no actual knowledge in reference to the charges.

Such are the results of my efforts to make certain and definite the accusations upon which the Government ordered the summary arrest of the prisoner, and such may be considered at this stage the whole strength of the Government's case.

I now turn very briefly to comment upon the testimony offered in behalf of the prisoner's release. It consists of the affidavits of Elias H. Sargent, Ammi Storer, Sylvanus C. Blanchard and Ferdinand Ingraham, which I transmit* with this report. Elias H. Sargent is a partner in the firm of Sargent & Hill, and states expressly that neither he nor the prisoner had knowledge that the member of the firm left in New Orleans was concerned in furnishing military supplies to the rebels, and that if such member was concerned in that business neither of them gave any consent to the enterprise. It appears that if anything of the kind was done it was after the return of the Messrs. Sargent to the North, and after communications between North and South had been interrupted by the war. Whatever responsibility might under ordinary circumstances rest upon the head of the commercial house for acts done by his partnership and in part upon his capital or credit the extraordinary state of the country at the time, arresting travel and interrupting correspondence, would seem to relieve him in this case. This is all there is in this part of the testimony relating to particular acts of the prisoner.

Mr. Ammi Storer's affidavit undoubtedly states the extent of Sargent's mere political sympathy with the rebels. The affiant is understood to be of the same political school and was therefore in a position to elicit his confidence. He seems to have expressed himself as a considerable party of our fellow-citizens have done without any disguise and without consciousness of liability to punishment or inquisition. Doubtless his political prejudices in favor of the movers of the great rebellion were further stimulated by his business relations with the

* Omitted; substance stated in this report.

South and by his temporary residence there. Nothing of this kind, however, unaccompanied by overt acts and no virulence of party feeling however insidious and dangerous should subject him to restraint at the hands of a just and liberal constitutional Government.

The other charges do not seem to be alluded to in these affidavits nor does the case find any evidence tending to sustain the fourth charge of the accusation. Reviewing the whole matter my opinion is that there is not sufficient evidence accessible to the Government to warrant ordering Sargent to be put upon his trial for treason, conspiracy or any other offense, and that it does not appear that he is such an enemy to the Government as to demand his further detention as a prisoner of war. At the time his arrest was first ordered the posture of public affairs was such that the proceeding summary as it was tended to strengthen the cause of the Government, and was approved by the great mass of our citizens under the prevalent belief that the Administration was in possession of some facts showing his complicity with treason. At that time hopes were cherished by a portion of our citizens that a political demonstration might be made at the polls which would paralyze the Administration in its efforts to subdue the rebellion and would compel it to offer some ignoble and unjust concessions to the armed traitors. The loyalty of the people has disappointed all such hopes. The feeble demonstration at the polls of hostility to the war policy of the Government showed the impracticability of this political diversion in favor of the rebels. Summary and severe measures seem to be no longer required and the Government may for the present safely rely upon the patriotism and devotion of the great mass of its citizens.

While the unhealthy political associations of Sargent and his Southern connections seem to justify the requirement from him as the condition of his release of a renewal of his oath of loyalty and perhaps his subjection for a period to such surveillance as may not be incompatible with his liberty his immediate release from imprisonment will be an act of clemency and justice likely to influence him favorably and to strengthen the Government in the respect and confidence of the people of Maine, and it may not be improper for me to pledge my own vigilance and that of the subaltern executive officers of the United States in this district that this act of clemency shall not be hereafter abused to the peril of the State.

I have the honor to be, with highest esteem, your obedient servant,
GEORGE F. TALBOT,

Attorney of the United States for the District of Maine.

WASHINGTON, October 22, 1861.

GEORGE F. TALBOT, Esq., U. S. District Attorney.

SIR: On my return from a visit to Maine I found on my table your letter of the 9th instant touching the case of Cyrus F. Sargent, now confined in Fort Lafayette. But for my absence it would have been answered before.

In answer to your inquiry as to my knowledge of the facts alleged in the information communicated, I have no authority but that which I gave at the time of submitting the facts in the paper which you have quoted. The allegations and the name of my informant were written by me on the same slip of paper and passed to Hon. Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior. I have not met Sargent for years, but in the course of friendly correspondence with Prof. George Woods, of Yarmouth, now of Pittsburg, he stated the facts which I deemed it my duty to communicate. Knowing Sargent to be a slave-trader, that his property is almost all in Southwestern Arkansas, and that his denunciations of the Government were as malignant as his expressed wishes for the success of the Southern rebellion appeared to be devout and hearty, it seemed to me not amiss to have him in keeping. I should add, however, that I know the latter fact, to wit, that of his hostility to the United States from hearsay, the truth of which I have no hesitation in accepting.

In a recent visit of a week in Portland and vicinity I did not meet a man, woman or child who spoke of the arrest of Sargent who did not consider it the best thing the Government had done in that vicinity. The people recognize in Sargent an enemy to his country, and they base their judgment upon the tone and tenor of his general conversation in the town where he lived and in the places where he resorted. Doubtless Mr. Woods can give you the data for his statements.

With great respect, I am, your obedient servant,

DANIEL L. EATON.

GEORGE F. TALBOT, U. S. Attorney.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 9th caused me much surprise as my letter to Mr. D. L. Eaton was on other business, and the information in it in relation to the strong secession feeling in Yarmouth was communicated to him as one interested in Yarmouth without any intention on my part or even suspicion of informing the Government. Besides I have already suffered greatly from this secession party in Yarmouth and had and still have no desire further to provoke them, well knowing their tyrannical disposition.

My informant as to the Messrs. Sargent and Hill—four partners—was Capt. Calvin Humphrey, late of ship State of Maine, seized in New Orleans, now of ship Reaper, on her way from England to Akyab. Captain Humphrey is a most reliable man, very friendly to above named firm with which he was well acquainted in New Orleans. He returned last summer from that city favorable to the Southern side. He came from New Orleans through Mississippi in company with one of the firm, Mr. Andrew J. Hill, who was on his way to see the two regiments with which they had a contract to supply with all they wanted. This fact was known generally in Yarmouth without being communicated by me, and probably the postmaster in Yarmouth can recollect their admission of it in store of A. L. Loring, where both Sargent and Hill talked, and of the circulating by said Sargent of disloyal newspapers and can tell the name of a man in Yarmouth who says he was offered inducements to fit out a vessel to run the blockade.

The second matter was rumor, not of building a vessel but of being engaged in fitting out in Portland the ship Sam Locke, owned by said Sargent, Sam Locke, of New Orleans, and others. This was spoken of freely in Portland and Yarmouth and was stated by me as rumor. The information and very much more than I can give can be obtained in Yarmouth, and my affidavit will be of no use it seems to me. If so it can be given here.

Respectfully, yours,

GEORGE WOODS.

Case of Algernon S. Sullivan.

Algernon S. Sullivan, of New York City, was arrested by order of the Secretary of State dated September 7, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with disloyalty; with assisting in transmitting contraband correspondence to the insurrectionary States; with holding treasonable correspondence with said States and with attempting to thwart the plans of the officers of the United States. Sullivan was counsel for Captain Baker,* of the rebel privateer Savannah. An intercepted letter from him dated August 23, 1861, and addressed to Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, Secretary of State, Confederate States of America, asks for numerous papers to be used in said Baker's defense, and he says: "I desire not to evade the high ground that the Confederate States are sovereign and that her citizens are not citizens of the United States." At the time of his arrest several letters addressed to persons in the insurrectionary States were found in his possession. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 18, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Sullivan on his taking the oath of allegiance and engaging on oath that he will do no act hostile or injurious to the United States, nor enter nor correspond with any of the States in insurrection nor be engaged in treasonable correspondence with any person whomsoever during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 21, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: One of my officers, Sergeant Ferry, of Third street, Brooklyn, obtained information that all the papers of B. F. Grove,† of 17 Park Place, New York, and 250 Adelphi street, Brooklyn, had not been obtained at the time of his arrest; made search and discovered the accompanying letters, viz: One addressed B. F. Grove, Miss H. M. Hammond, Berryville, Clarke County, Va., and one to Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, Secretary, &c., Richmond, Va. I suppose that while the ground for detaining Grove is strengthened by the letter to him that letter and the unopened one to Hunter will sufficiently implicate Sullivan to require his arrest.

NEW YORK, September 9, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Mr. A. S. Sullivan was on Saturday taken and has been sent to Fort Lafayette under an order from your Department as he was informed. He is of counsel for the crew of the privateer Savannah and as such has needed to correspond with the authorities of the secession States in order to obtain documents and evidence which are deemed necessary for the trial, and as he assures his friends his letters have gone no further than the pursuit of these objects.

I respectfully ask that you would do him the justice and would do me the personal favor to look into his case and do what you judge right in the matter, that he may not be detained unless for cause which you deem adequate after examination. He has an amiable wife and infant child for whom we have great interest. His father is a man of independence and of Republican politics, as are two of his brothers in Ohio and Indiana as I am told. I am very sure that were he ever so ill disposed, as I think he is not, his efforts would do less injury to the cause of the Union than his imprisonment. Allow me on the score of former acquaintance to ask your attention to this case and the favor of an early reply.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

54 WALL STREET, NEW YORK, September 10, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq.

DEAR FRED: I saw by yesterday's papers on my return to town last evening that Mr. Algernon S. Sullivan has been sent to Fort Lafayette. He is comparatively a stranger here and this leads me to say to you what I know of him. I have not seen him or any of his family, relatives or friends for five or six weeks past and write this entirely of my own volition and without the knowledge of any human being. I of course know nothing of what information or evidence the Government may possess in the case and do not mean in any manner to question the propriety of its course. The fact that Mr. Sullivan is a stranger here, a member of the bar in good standing and that I believe his family to be dependent upon his professional labors coupled with my surprise at the cause of his arrest induces me to write to you.

He is a Virginian by birth. Mrs. S. is also from that State; but notwithstanding these facts and the sympathies which would naturally flow from them Mr. S. has in several conversations with me during the past five or six months, and especially in the last conversation I had with him some five or six weeks since, expressed himself unhesitatingly and unequivocally in favor of prosecuting the war; that the Administration ought to be and must be sustained in so doing. I believe him to be entirely loyal and utterly incapable of intentionally committing any disloyal act. I should not have been more surprised at the arrest for this cause of our mutual friend R. B. Potter or any prominent Republican.

It occurs to me that in some of the letters said in the papers to have been written by him to the South he may have said more than was prudent or proper and may have disclosed more of our plans than he should have done. If so, it may be said for him that he is a lawyer—like many of us wanting clients. His friends are at the South. His anxiety to obtain favor there for this purpose may have led him to careless frankness of disclosure or to the expression of opinions really not his own. Should there be anything pointing to this would not justice be subserved by administering the oath and giving him his freedom? He would very certainly be sufficiently prudent in the future. Mr. Sullivan knew me as an old Tammany Hall Democrat. There was therefore no reason why he should have expressed other than his real sentiments to me. Since I began this letter I have seen two lawyers, acquaintances of Mr. Sullivan, one (F. R. Sherman) a prominent Republican, and they confirm the view I have expressed of Mr. Sullivan's sentiments.

This much I feel bound to say for Mr. S., hoping that if there is the slightest doubt of the sufficiency of the proof against him the Government will see the justice of inquiring into his case or of giving him an opportunity to exculpate himself. I will be very glad if you can find the time and inclination to inquire a little into it. I did not mean to ask your attention to so long a letter.

Pardon me, and believe me, faithfully, your friend,

JOHN S. SUTHERLAND.

61 WALL STREET, NEW YORK, September 11, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: Allow me to say that your answer to Mr. Daniel Lord in the matter of A. S. Sullivan gives the most entire satisfaction. I have known Mr. Lord all my life. He is arrogant, conceited and most of all distinguished for his overestimate of his own importance. He is withal intensely selfish, and little better than the traitors whom he encourages in their war upon the country. I have good reason for saying that Mr. Lord has done and will do all in his power to embarrass the Government, and I hope that he will yet find himself where he ought to be—in Fort Lafayette.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

E. SEELEY.

P. S.—Allow me to add that though a stranger to you I have been well known a long time to Mr. Welles, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. MCKEE DUNN, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I am requested by Mrs. Mary Sullivan, wife of A. S. Sullivan, a prisoner of Fort Lafayette (you know him—son of Judge Sullivan, of Indiana), to write to you and have you procure for her a pass from General Scott to allow her to visit her husband in the fort. Will you be kind enough to do this and write to me on receipt of this? Mr. Hudson joins me in this behalf. The woman is in trouble and is deserving of sympathy. I shall esteem it as a favor to myself if you will trouble yourself for her in this matter.

Respectfully,

D. C. STONE.

PRIVATE.]

NEW YORK, September 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington:

Never was a more righteous and just arrest made in this city than that of Algernon S. Sullivan. He has been the most malignant of all the secession rebels with the exception of the two brothers Joel and Udolpho Wolfe. Algernon Sullivan had meetings of rebels at his house, No. 84 West Fourteenth street, and when not there they were held at Udolpho Wolfe's, No. 99 West Fourteenth street. Udolpho Wolfe keeps his store at 22, 24, 26 Beaver street. If arrested you will find a tin box in his safe any time between 10 and 3. The box is not locked up and is in charge of Mr. Castle, the bookkeeper in the front office. In that box are over $500,000 in bonds, securities and demands, with at least $80,000 in Confederate bonds belonging to Udolpho Wolfe. Udolpho Wolfe is the Confederate friend in this city of Henry A. Wise. He furnished B. Donnelly (Wise's old correspondent) with capital to start and carry on the Union House at Washington. It is a nest for secessionists. Udolpho Wolfe bottles over 3,000,000 bottles of gin every year. It is nearly all sold South. He has a brother in Kentucky. All these Wolfes came from Virginia, and Wolfe in 1860 published a book about Virginia and President Monroe, whose remains were removed from this city.

Joel Wolfe is also a secessionist and is constantly with John J. Cisco, who is ignorant of his real character. From Cisco, who is innocent, Wolfe gets all the statements of the financial affairs of the United States and they are regularly transmitted by means of Algernon S. Sullivan to Jeff. Davis. Udolpho Wolfe has recently returned from Europe. He corresponded previous to his departure with Jeff. Davis and took out Burke, of New Orleans, who is his brother-in-law, and made large purchases for the Southern Confederacy. He has made arrangements secretly to ship directly to any Southern port. This is the way he advertises, but it is all a dodge:

To shipping merchants. Wolfe's Schiedam Schnapps.

30,000 cases of Wolfe's celebrated Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps for sale in bond or duty paid, put up with German, Dutch, Spanish, French and English labels.

Shipping merchants can purchase for the South American, East Indian and European markets delivered on board ship at Liverpool; London, Rotterdam or Hamburg at less than the New York price.

The schnapps is well known and sells freely in all the markets of the world.

For price, &c., apply to Udolpho Wolfe, New York; Hoffman, Dorrepaal & Co., Rotterdam; Biancone, Klee & Co., Hamburg.

Arrest him and you will find in a desk in the back room of the second floor letters from all these parties in the South. Open any of the cases of his gin that go into the West, to Louisville, and they will be found to contain orders for the rebels. He has connections in every Southern State. He has loaned Jeff. Davis $100,000 through the London bankers of Hoffman, Dorrepaal & Co.

When you arrested Sullivan you got one of the nest. Arrest Joel and Udolpho and you will strike a dozen more leaders of these really dangerous men. The securities and valuables of Joel Wolfe are generally kept in the tin box about one foot square in the front office, second floor of Udolpho Wolfe. If it is so when you arrest the book-keeper Castle there will be $1,000,000 of stocks and bonds belonging to both brothers who were formerly partners. Joel can be arrested at the subtreasury of Mr. Cisco, with whom he spends several hours nearly every day.

I regard my country more than I do my private concerns, but as my own destruction would be the result of a communication to you under my own name I will only add that all is truth in this letter except my own name, which is fictitious.

CHARLES CATLIN.

29 WALL STREET, NEW YORK, October 2, 1861.

Hon. MCKEE DUNN.

DEAR SIR: Permit me again to trouble you in behalf of Mrs. Sullivan. The order of Secretary Seward to Colonel Burke to admit her to visit her husband in Fort Lafayette—Colonel Burke construed the order to allow her several visits. With that construction she went once to see her husband and made an arrangement to take the baby to see its father. All being arranged she only stayed a short time in the fort as Colonel Burke had promised her to go again. So before she got her interview as agreed on Mr. Seward ordered Colonel B. not to admit but one visit on the same pass; so she thus is deprived of really all the benefit of the pass. Had she known of such an order at first she would not have made a temporary visit.

Will you be so kind as to trouble yourself again and have for her another interview allowed as she has been so much disappointed in the first order, and much oblige, your friend,

D. C. STONE,

MADISON, [IND.,] October 12, 1861.

W. M. DUNN, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I am still much concerned about my son Algernon, now at Fort Lafayette. Have you any information that you can give me relative to the intentions of the Government concerning him? Your last letter advised me to be quiet for a while and I have followed the advice. Can you say anything different now? If you could say to the President or to Mr. Seward that Algernon's friends will guarantee his loyalty, that you know the family to be loyal, &c., would it now have any effect? Don't you think C. B. Smith would willingly interfere for Algernon? I can get letters from B. W. Thompson, Randall Crawford, Henry S. Lane and others. Would it be best to send them on now or wait a while? Please write me.

Yours, &c.,

JERE. SULLIVAN.

SIR: In answer to your dispatch of this date, received 1.40 p. m., I have to state that Algernon S. Sullivan, a state prisoner, was released by your order yesterday evening in accordance with your letter of the 18th instant handed to me on the same evening by a deputy of Marshal Murray, from New York.

MARTIN BURKE,

Case of Robert Elliot.

Robert Elliot was arrested in the State of Maine by order of the Secretary of War and committed to Fort Lafayette September 7, 1861, and from thence transferred November 1, 1861, to Fort Warren. He was charged with disloyalty and being in open and avowed sympathy with the rebels; evidence was had of his having organized a company of his fellow-townsmen for disloyal purposes. Governor Washburn, of Maine, states in a letter to the Secretary of State dated October 30, 1861, that—

The propriety of the arrest of Mr. Elliot is I think unquestionable from the evidence contained in the papers which have been laid before me, to say nothing of many facts which have come to my knowledge from other sources, his treasonable designs and practices are in my judgment fully established. * * * The most salutary results have followed the prompt and wise action of the Government in this regard. I do not perceive, however, that the public good requires his further detention at Fort Lafayette.

An order was issued from the Department of State November 2, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Elliot on his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States. He was accordingly released November 7, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WAR DEPARTMENT, *September 5, 1861.*CHARLES CLARKE, U. S. Marshal, Augusta, Me.:

Arrest Robert Elliot and Virgil D. Paris as desired by Governor Washburn. Commit them as prisoners to Fort Lafayette.

SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

PORTLAND, *September 9, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

MY DEAR SIR: Things are not quite so bad here as your last dispatch* would seem to imply. The simple truth is that our marshal having Elliot in arrest and expecting Meade along thought that by waiting a day he could take along the whole batch, and not apprehending any interference clapped his men in jail. He was moreover under a misapprehension as to the day of sailing of the New York boat. As soon as he heard of the design to get a writ he started his men off between trains, sending men with instructions to pay no attention to the writs unless directed to them, but they were overtaken and outwitted. Arrangements had been made to seize them again if discharged and lodge them at the fort when your order to discharge them was received.

Public feeling is all right here in relation to such people, and will thoroughly sustain the Government in seizing all such people. The sorrow and disappointment at their escape was very great. It was an unlucky accident and would not be likely to occur again. I write this much in order that you may not find too much fault with our marshal, who is ardent, zealous and smart. His whole soul is in the service and he feels excessively mortified and chagrined. Our district judge (Ware) is with us heart and soul, and so are all our State judges. Clifford pretends to be right, but as you know is wholly unreliable and timid.

Our business men are embarrassed by being obliged to send to Boston for passports. As you are aware we have great intercourse with Cuba. I have been again requested to call your attention to the matter. I await your reply to my former letter before sending you a name.

Very truly, yours,

W. P. FESSENDEN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, October 4, 1861.*His Excellency ISRAEL WASHBURN, Jr., Augusta, Me.

SIR: Application has been made to the President for the release of Robert Elliot, a political prisoner held in custody at Fort Lafayette. The evidence taken in his case shows that he had not only conceived a purpose of treasonable co-operation in the State of Maine with the insurrectionary citizens arrayed in arms in other States for the overthrow of the Government and the Union but that he had even gone to the extreme length of getting up an unlawful armed force to operate in Maine against the lawful action of the State and of the Federal Government. His associates in this treasonable enterprise have since his arrest taken an oath of allegiance to the United States. This proceeding is very proper in itself, but the representations they make that they and he were loyal to the Union at the time when they were combining in arms against it cannot be accepted at least in his behalf since it appears that he is too intelligent to misunderstand the legitimate tendencies of his criminal acts. He cannot be released. On the contrary your vigilance in ferreting out the conspiracy and in arresting it by denouncing it to the Government and the country is deemed worthy of especial commendation.

If any of the other offenders are still persisting in this treasonable course you will not fail I am sure to give information to this Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

His Excellency ISRAEL WASHBURN, Jr., Augusta, Me.

GOVERNOR: I transmit for your examination certain papers* this day submitted to me, and also others which were before me when I sent the letter to you on the 4th day of October, which has been published. The Government feels confident that it can safely rely upon your judgment, discretion and patriotism in regard to the merits of the case of Mr. Elliot, and for this reason I respectfully ask for your opinion thereon. You will please remit all the papers to me when you shall have examined them.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, October 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

HONORABLE SIR: Your dispatch to Governor Washburn convinces me that you have strong evidence against Robert Elliot which was not obtained in a spirit of patriotism but to avenge vindictive personal feelings. I know he never conceived the purpose of treason nor got up an unlawful armed force to act [against] the United States Government. Could I know the nature and substance of the evidence am well satisfied I could rebut it to your satisfaction, convinced as I am that your views are too exalted to wish to retain an innocent man. One favor please—grant me an interview with him. He is chairman of the board of town officers. Some lawsuits are now pending in which the town is highly interested. It is very necessary to consult him about them. Another thing, his poor wife is about distracted and could I say to her I had seen him and he was comfortable it would be a great consolation to her.

Hoping you will grant me a pass, I remain, yours, very respectfully,
H. F. ELLIOT.

STATE OF MAINE, AUGUSTA, October 30, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 7th instant in which you ask my opinion in regard to the merits of the case of Robert Elliot, now imprisoned at Fort Lafayette. I have examined the papers accompanying your letter, as also several depositions subsequently taken, all of which will be transmitted to you. The propriety of the arrest of Mr. Elliot is I think unquestionable. From the evidence contained in the papers which have been laid before me, to say nothing of many facts which have come to my knowledge from other sources, his treasonable practices and designs are in my judgment fully established; and it was of the highest interest to the Government that the movement which he organized should be checked at the earliest moment. The most salutary results have followed the prompt and wise action of the Government in this regard.

* None of the papers referred to found.

I do not perceive, however, that the public good requires his further detention at Fort Lafayette. A large majority of the company which he aided in raising for disloyal purposes have taken the oath of allegiance and express regret that they should have permitted themselves to be led from the path of duty and patriotism, and some of them I learn have recently enlisted in the military service of the United States. Robert Elliot himself writes me that the fallacy of the opinion which he entertained not long since that peace could be secured without bloodshed is now fully apparent to him. Under these circumstances and considering that he will be subject to indictment and trial hereafter should a prosecution for his offense against the Government be deemed advisable I would respectfully recommend his discharge from imprisonment upon his taking the oath of allegiance.

It is due to the Hon. E. K. Smart that I should say that from the facts which have been made known to me I am satisfied that the charges of improper conduct made in the papers presented to you by Hiram Elliot and D. B. Preller are without foundation, nor should I omit to add that in my opinion Colonel Smart by his faithful and vigorous action in this matter has rendered a most important service to the Government.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

I. WASHBURN, JR.

SOUTH MONTVILLE, ME., October 31, 1861.

HON. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I had a long conversation yesterday with Governor Washburn as to the release of Robert Elliot. He showed me your letter to him and his reply which he had prepared to send to you. I said to him as I now wish to say to you it is not time for Elliot to be released. I live a neighbor to him and I have been well acquainted with public sentiment in our Congressional district since I had the honor to represent it in Congress four years ago. I was in the village where Elliot's family live but three days ago and I know that our best men there as well as through our county, even those who are his personal friends, think it would not be safe to have him released. His arrest and removal did us more good than anything that has taken place since the commencement of the war. His release now would I feel sure fan anew the fires of secession which have been held in check by his removal and confinement. Although he may take the oath of allegiance I am quite certain he will as heretofore do everything he dares to against the war and the Government.

Governor Washburn showed me the letters and petitions he had received from our leading men asking for Elliot's release. They are all good men but I beg to say that they all live in our cities where they can quell treason much easier than we can in our small villages and country places. I am very certain that it is not yet safe to turn traitors loose among us. If Elliot were my own father or brother and had been guilty of what he has I should want him kept safely till the war is over or nearly so. Governor Washburn has the impression that Elliot will be released before long whether he (Washburn) asks for it or not. I will only say further that in my judgment seven-eighths of our loyal citizens and best men think he should not be permitted to associate with our people again at present. I write this with reluctance but from a sense of duty to the Government. If he could be released as a favor to him and his family without being an injury to the Government it would give me great pleasure to see it done for I am a strong friend to his family, but I am a stronger friend to my country and my glorious Government.

I am, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
EBENEZER KNOWLTON.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston, Mass.

SIR: Let Robert Elliot, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

I, Robert Elliot, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law, hereby stipulating that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States nor transmit any correspondence between disloyal persons without permission of the Secretary of State, and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. Edward B. Wilder was arrested by order of A. Q. Keasbey, U. S. district attorney, at Newark, N. J., September 7, 1861, and by order of the Secretary of State committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with disloyalty and treason, having offered to instruct the rebels how to construct a formidable implement of war to be used against his Government, thus affording aid to the enemy. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 11, 1861, directing Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Wilder on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State, nor do any act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. He is one of our most highly respected merchants, of unimpeachable integrity, as firm as a rock in his Union sentiments and I am sure would be the very last man to disguise the truth to serve the best friend on earth. NEW YORK, September 11, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I take the liberty to address you on behalf of a Mr. Edward B. Wilder, now confined in Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. Mr. Wilder I have known for many years and he has during that space of time been much in my employ. Mr. Wilder has property in North Carolina where he resided for some years, and some two years since removed from North Carolina on account as I well know of his and his family's very great dislike to slavery and its institutions. This has always been his sentiment often repeated to me in conversation, and I truly believe that both himself and Mrs. Wilder possess very strong Northern feeling, they both being natives of the North.

Mr. Wilder's cousin invented a rifle battery which they exhibited to me some time since and I recommended his showing it to Government, which (by a letter I have received from him from the fort under date of 8th instant, a copy of which I now inclose) I notice he did. It is true I cannot reconcile the statement of his motives for his peculiar communication to his Southern friends that he gives in his letter to me to what I have thought to be his upright and manly character. But yet I cannot disbelieve what he names to me to have been his motive for so doing as I have always known him to possess as warm and earnest Union sentiments as my own and notwithstanding the strong appearances against him I believe him to be true to his country.

Mr. Wilder is pretty well known in this city, and others I believe would express this opinion of him as earnestly as myself. I know that Mr. Wilder is ready at the moment to subscribe to the strongest oath of allegiance to his country and its flag and I would ask the Secretary, such being the case, if he could not be relieved from his confinement upon giving proper security for his future behavior; this would give great relief to his family of a number of interesting young children, and I should myself feel under great obligation to the Secretary would he entertain this proposition.

Most respectfully, yours,

RUSSELL STURGIS.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing I have been placed in possession of and now hold two letters from Mr. Wilder—one to his wife and one to his daughter—written from Washington the day after the battle of Bull Run (Mr. Wilder was at the battle) expressing the warmest sympathy with the Government and most patriotic feelings of regret at its results, which strongly confirms the account he gives of the reasons for his letter to his son-in-law, which he says was a ruse to save his property, &c. And certainly in these letters there is every feeling expressed for his country and none for disunion. This the Secretary may rely upon and I can but hope will justify his granting the application. I hand a note from Doctor Dodge, of Newark, covering to me the two private letters I have alluded to.

R. S.

RUSSELL STURGIS, Esq.

DEAR SIR: By means of a letter written my son-in-law, N. R. Mendenhall, and which fell into the hands of the Government, I was arrested and, as the Times and Herald state, for building a rifle battery for the South. You have known me for many years and are fully aware that I am in every sense of the word a Union man. You are also aware that I own some property, mining and otherwise, in North Carolina. I accordingly wrote the letter in which I stated that I had built a machine and would be glad to dispose of it South, and that were it not for my family I would be South in order to assist in driving back abolitionists, &c. I intended it as a ruse in order to prevent the confiscation of my property, knowing that Mendenhall would make the contents known in Greensborough, N. C., and at the same time trusting to my own true and loyal feelings to shield me from suspicion, in which I erred.

Now, sir, in candor and in the presence of the Almighty I do solemnly aver that I have never built any battery for the South nor was I building or intending to build one for them. Neither have I ever in any way, shape or form furnished any drawings or information regarding the same to any parties South nor intended doing so. The battery I was building is a small 16-inch model which in accordance with my cousin's instructions would first go to Washington (perfected with self-primers) in order to exhibit it (as I did the large one now in Washington) before the President and other officers of the Government, and then to take the same to General Frémont via Chicago and Saint Louis. These are the facts and still those papers have made the above assertion.

Will you, Mr. Sturgis, oblige myself and family by having those papers state the facts, and also to write Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, stating the facts in the case? I am willing and ready to act for the Union and not talk as too many are doing, and I stated openly in Washington if the battery met with the approval of the Government and they would purchase it, to take my portion of it and at my own expense fit out and go with a troop of cavalry and offer the same to President Lincoln. These facts can be substantiated by Mr. Halsted and other gentlemen in Washington.

My family of course are in deep distress, but knowing my own innocence in the matter and trusting to my friends to aid in my release, I am content to wait with resignation their efforts. Your kindness will be ever remembered in this affair.

Yours, very truly,

E. B. WILDER.

NEWARK. September 17, 1861.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

DEAR SIR: Pardon the liberty I take in thus addressing you but do not cast my letter aside without a perusal, for I must ask a great request of you which none other but yourself can grant. Please keep my letter strictly private. None know of it here and I wish none to know it but yourself. My father is a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, but he is a true Union man. I will tell you the plain truth about his arrest. He has a rifle battery (which you may remember seeing in Washington) on which he expended a considerable amount of money. Some time since he heard all his property South would be confiscated. As Government did not take his battery he could not bear to lose his property South, so he wrote to my brother-in-law in Virginia which was merely as a ruse to save his property. That letter was intercepted and he arrested, but he is true and loyal for the Union. Before he took his rifle to Washington he received an offer from the Confederate States for it of $100,000 which he would not accept not being willing to aid the South in her rebellion.

Now, dear sir, please grant my father pardon. I beg, I entreat of you to release him. Were he a secessionist I would not ask it, but as it is I cannot bear it. Do not cast me aside without his pardon, for life is so lonely without a father. I will not ask your time to answer this, only, only send me the order for his release. Let me be the first one to say through your lips, "Father, you are free."

I will ever pray for and bless your name if you will only grant the prayer of your humble servant,

ALICE B. WILDER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 21, 1861.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: I inclose the papers relative to the case of E. B. Wilder at Fort Lafayette. I will thank you to examine and report upon the subject.

I am, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, September 23, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 21st instant inclosing documents in relation to the case of Edward B. Wilder, now confined in Fort Lafayette, is received. I have examined the papers transmitted and beg leave to report that the evidence contained in the intercepted letter from Mr. Wilder to Nathan R. Mendenhall, of Winchester, Va. (if unexplained), must be held as conclusive as to the animus of the writer. According to that he has thought, talked, written treason. He has offered to instruct the rebels how to construct a formidable implement of war to be used against his Government and directed them to whom to apply for information. This is offering aid to the enemy. It is a treasonable act, and his wife and family are all that prevent his actually taking up arms against the Government of the United States. This is quite sufficient to call for his arrest and confinement.

The testimony in his behalf by Messrs. Marshall, Grinnell, Sturgis and Dodge is clear and ample as to his general good character and integrity but it stops short of establishing his loyalty. As much can be said with equal truth for vast numbers who are now bearing arms against the United States Government. The only really pertinent testimony in behalf of Mr. Wilder is contained in the letter written by himself to Mr. Russell Sturgis. He says the intercepted letter was a ruse to prevent the confiscation of his property. He furnishes them valuable information how to arm themselves with a powerful means of destroying the armies of the Union as a ruse to cheat them into sparing his property. In plain English his motive for committing treason to his country was mercenary. The explanation may be true, which is doubtful, but it certainly is not a good defense. If instead of instructing them how to make a rifle battery he had actually sold and delivered over to the enemy and was on his trial for treason on that account the court would not allow him to prove in his defense that he made or saved money by the transaction. The man who instructs the rebels in the art of making rifle batteries which "work most admirably" to be used against the armies of the Union for the purpose of saving his Southern property will be likely to personally take up arms against his country for the same purpose unless prevented by the fear of greater penalties.

Finally the evidence of the disloyalty of Mr. Edward B. Wilder is such as to warrant and require his arrest and detention while the allegations in his defense are not established by any competent evidence and if established would not prove him to be innocent.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

I return herewith all the documents transmitted.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 24, 1861.
 RUSSELL STURGIS, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have examined the case of Mr. Edward B. Wilder and am of the opinion that he is clearly guilty of a treasonable correspondence and conspiracy to overthrow the Union. His discharge therefore would be incompatible with justice and the public safety.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEWARK, September 30, 1861.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I hope you will pardon the liberty I take in thus addressing you. I do not feel an entire stranger to you as I had an introduction to you last winter in Washington by my friend Mrs. John A. Gilmer, and I trust in the kindness of your heart you will grant me a patient hearing as I am in great trouble.

A letter of my husband was intercepted and he was arrested some few weeks ago. That letter was written to prevent the confiscation of our property South which I will explain presently. At the time of his arrest some gentlemen here of the highest respectability went before Mr. Keasbey, U. S. district attorney, and testified to Mr. Wilder's loyalty. Of course our local paper came out with a great sensational piece such as mentioning the family, number of house, &c. Some of the statements were entirely untrue. For a letter they had letters and also stated that we had a kind of sign writing for communication. I called to see Mr. Keasbey the next day and requested him kindly to correct the misstatements. He asked me in rather a sarcastic manner if he should have the letter published. I told him no as I did not wish to make any explanations through the papers. I also told him that I had been too good a Republican to be treated unfairly by my Republican brethren. He did publish the letter that day. I also asked Mr. Keasbey if I sent to him gentlemen that he knew and that were acquainted with Mr. Wilder's feelings and principles if he would report their testimony at Washington. He promised to do so. I rested on the belief that he would do what he could favorably under the circumstances. He may have done so but I have reason to think otherwise, having been informed within the last few days that he has been using his influence against instead of for us. You will know better than I whether he has merely done his duty or exceeded it. Perhaps he has been influenced by unprincipled enemies, which of course I must have as I have been subject since Mr. Wilder's arrest to a kind of loaferly persecution such as receiving anonymous, insulting letters.

I think it is very hard situated as I am here, almost a stranger, with not a relative excepting my children within 800 miles. We left the South a little more than a year ago with considerable sacrifice, fearing these troubled times and also wishing to bring up our children under Northern influence, and since our residence here our conduct has been perfectly loyal. You are aware that Newark is a manufacturing city. When the trouble between the North and South first commenced most of our factories here stopped. Consequently at the beginning of last winter our laboring poor were without work or bread. I devoted my entire time from the beginning of January till the middle of April, with the exception of two weeks spent at Washington, in relieving their necessities and providing them with work. I also used my means freely for their relief. In the month of May another call was made upon the ladies to provide comforts and hospital stores for our soldiers. I again contributed with money, time and comforts. My husband also contributed liberally toward a large flag that was raised on our church.

Now if this is disloyalty I would like to know what loyalty is. We are accused of receiving letters from the South, which has prejudiced our case here. I admit that; but they were from a Mrs. Gilmer, whom you well know is loyal to our Union if any one is South. Another correspondent is Mrs. McConnel, a friend of Mrs. Gilmer and a Massachusetts lady who is residing South, and from my daughter, wife of a gentleman in the Southern army. In these terrible times a person feels doubly anxious to hear from friends South.

Now as regards Mr. Wilder's case, he built a rifle battery which was pronounced a terrible weapon by competent judges here. As soon as it was finished he took it to Washington in hopes of being able to dispose of it to the Government. He found it required more influence than he could command to get it accepted by the Government. His cousin from Michigan was the inventor. My husband made the improvements and furnished the means for building it. The battery was brought out in his cousin's name, L. C. Wilder, as he knew there were parties in Baltimore who were watching his movements in hopes he would commit himself in such a manner that there would be an excuse for confiscating his property South. He remained in Washington five weeks, then returned home leaving the battery in Washington in the hands of an agent to dispose of it if possible to the Government or to some regiment. Just before his arrest he had commenced building a smaller one to take to Europe, being told it required less influence there to dispose of it. He has no model of any kind here, as the papers stated. You can see by these statements that it would have been simply impossible for him to dispose of it to the Confederate States, or rather for them to get it out of Washington. Had he been disloyal and wished to dispose of his battery South he could easily have done so and built it South. A few weeks before his arrest we received a letter from our daughter South. She had heard our property was to be confiscated. That intercepted letter was written merely as a ruse to save his property from being confiscated. It was well understood by some of Mr. Wilder's friends here that had he succeeded in disposing of his battery to the Government he would return immediately to Newark and raise a company of cavalry partly at his own expense. I admit that my husband is bitterly opposed to the abolitionists; he has suffered by them. He has as much faith in their love of preserving our Union as in the secessionists. I know that he has expressed his opinion freely against the abolitionists and I fear he has made himself enemies who will now use their influence against him to the extent of their power. I know that our kind friends in New York have exerted themselves in his behalf, which with this true statement of the facts I cannot but trust will procure Mr. Wilder's release. I cannot expect an answer to this, but if you only knew with what an anxious and troubled heart I send it on its mission you would at least give it a kind and early consideration. Should Mr. Wilder not be released soon I would be greatly obliged if you would give me a pass for myself and children to visit him at Fort Lafayette.

Yours, respectfully,

MRS. E. B. WILDER.

P. S.—Should you wish these statements substantiated I can easily have it done.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 1, 1861.

E. M. ARCHIBALD, Esq.,

Her British Majesty's Consul, New York.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of September 28* and hasten to reply frankly in accordance with your suggestions to that effect touching my property. The property I refer to are sundry notes now in the Branch Bank of Cape Fear, Greensborough, N. C., left by my wife and self for collection. The purchaser has no deed of this property until the notes, amounting to $3,000 with interest, and having three years more to run are paid, when a deed will be made by my wife for the same. The property was a house and some three acres in Greensborough, built with money left my wife as also some of my own. I also own certain interests in some good copper mines in the State of North Carolina, which interests were secured by the issue of stock or scrip. These mines since the rebellion broke out have suspended operations.

My daughter wrote me some time ago that it was all to be confiscated; hence the ruse that I adopted by writing that letter (to try and save it) and which led to my arrest. The writing of that letter I have regretted most sincerely, when I view it in its proper light, and I must say nevertheless that it was with reluctance that I did it against the solicitation of my wife who endeavored to dissuade me from so doing; but being out of business the future welfare of myself and family rendered it as I thought imperative. I trusted to my antecedents and the respect I had and have entertained for the Administration to exonerate me from blame when the causes for which the ruse was made were known to the public.

There is not a human being that will come forward and say that I have ever even spoken disrespectfully of the Government or in any way or manner encouraged the rebel movement. On the contrary I am and have been most anxious to see the rebellion crushed out by the strong arm of the Government, as my future success in our mining affairs depended on it. As I stated in a former letter, there are many gentlemen in the cities of Newark and New York who will vouch that my feelings and interests are on the side of the Federal Government, and I do most solemnly asseverate before my Eternal Judge that I have never for one moment entertained a thought inimical to the Government nor of giving aid or comfort to the rebels directly or indirectly; and wrongly as I have innocently acted in regard to that letter it does seem hard that for one false step taken during a period of forty-seven years (when that period, thank God, has ever been untarnished) it should be the means of my incarceration and eventual ruin of my wife and five children with none to aid or assist them during a period of long confinement for myself.

I have never been naturalized nor never for one moment have entertained the idea of abandoning the allegiance that I owe to Her Majesty, neither shall I ever do it. As stated in my former letter* I am ready and willing to adopt any measures (not derogatory to an Englishman nor affecting my allegiance to Her Majesty) which they may deem essential toward effecting my release.

I have given all the facts in the case and sincerely trust that through the kindness of yourself and Lord Lyons I may be restored to my family.

Believe me, my dear sir, with considerations of the highest esteem for your kindness thus far, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD B. WILDER.

P. S.—I have had no trial. Had I one it would not be difficult for me to prove my innocence.

E. B. W.

* Not found.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 2, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States of America.

DEAR SIR: I was arrested in the early part of September through a letter that I wrote my son-in-law which fell into the hands of the Government and sent to this place. Many of my friends in Newark and New York aware of my loyalty to the Administration have kindly interested themselves in endeavoring to obtain my release and again restore me to my family, but thus far without success. And in the anguish of my feelings at the deep sorrow in which my wife and children are resting, to say nothing of their future destitution, I write to Your Excellency.

In writing the letter that I did I must say it was on my part with reluctance and against the better counsels of my wife but I trusted too much to my past life, as every one with whom I am acquainted can readily testify to my unerring devotion to the Union. I own some little property in North Carolina, accumulated after many years of honest industry and sufficient with my daily exertions to keep my family from the iron hand of poverty. This property my daughter wrote me was to be confiscated, and in order to try and save it I wrote the letter that led to my arrest to my son-in-law who would have used it to try and save the same. It was simply a ruse which my known loyalty to the Government I trusted would be sufficient when the facts were known to exonerate me. To say the least of it it was a great indiscretion on my part; an error of the head while my heart was true to the Union. And I do now, sir, most solemnly asseverate before my Maker, before whom we all shall stand sooner or later, that in writing that letter I never for one moment meditated an act of disloyalty to the Government. My only object was to save my property. I have done wrong, for it seems my antecedents have no weight in the balance. The past history of my devotion and my present for the preservation of this good old Union under which I have lived and prospered ought certainly to mitigate my sentence of exile from those who are very dear to me and who look to me alone for their daily bread. My wife and little ones are wrapped in grief as each day closes on my captivity. Your Excellency is blessed with a family and can readily portray my feelings.

I have been told that Mr. Lincoln is humane in the plenitude of his power. If so let me beg and supplicate you for one word of yours that will send me back to my children. If my loyalty is questioned I will most cheerfully submit to any decision or decree of the Government by giving ample security or by oath. The health of my wife is such that she cannot live a great while and for God's sake allow me to spend the few remaining days that are allotted her on earth with her. Were I at heart a guilty man or if my past life can point out one act or word of disloyalty to the Government I could not and would not dare to address you on the subject of my release, but I am innocent though writing that letter having for its object as I then thought justifiable motives. Could I have been allowed a trial my past and present life's record would have declared me innocent. Your sympathy in my behalf will add greatly to my present sorrow [sic].

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD B. WILDER.

NEW YORK, *October 2, 1861.*SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington City, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I understand a strong effort is being made for the release of E. B. Wilder, of Newark, N. J., now confined at Fort Lafayette. I trust the Government will weigh this subject well before they acquiesce. One man to the writer's knowledge who is very active in his behalf ought if strict justice were meted out to be in the same inclosure. It has been more than intimated that both he and Wilder have helped the rebels to more than one envelope of fulminating powder. The time may come when I will give you my name and residence. In the meantime beware of any communications from George R. Hazewell in behalf of said Wilder.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A TRUE BLUE.

While writing I understand that Hazewell is this day soliciting letters from leading men in this city through his friend Counsellor Smith for the relief of Wilder. They are a precious pair.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 5, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq.,

U. S. Marshal for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: I have to request that you will bring the case of the prisoner E. B. Wilder, confined at Fort Lafayette, before the first U. S. grand jury empaneled for the southern district of New York.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, *October 6, 1861.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I do not feel quite easy in my mind touching my report in the case of E. B. Wilder, confined in Fort Lafayette. I do not know but he has been discharged notwithstanding that report. If not further reflection causes me to fear that I did him injustice. There was but a mere point of proof against him and that was contained in the intercepted letter. If half who are as guilty as he were imprisoned all the forts in the land would not suffice to contain them. I do not think the Government would be put in peril by setting him at liberty. Under all the circumstances I should be pleased or rather relieved of a little anxiety if you should overrule my report and set Mr. Wilder free.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, October 11, 1861.*Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let E. B. Wilder, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. Make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

I, E. B. Wilder, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law; and also that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State, and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection.

E. B. WILDER.

Case of George L. Bowne.

George L. Bowne, a member of the Florida legislature, was arrested by order of the Secretary of State dated September 7, 1861, by U. S. Marshal Chase, northern district of New York, at Cooperstown, N. Y., and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with signing the secession ordinance in the legislature or convention of Florida and with being a spy traveling through the North to gain information for Jeff. Davis. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 20, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Bowne on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released September 24, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

RICHFIELD SPRINGS, OTSEGO COUNTY, N. Y.,

August 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: G. L. Bowne, of Key West, is at Cooperstown. He signed the secession ordinance in the legislature (or convention) of Florida and has the deepest stake in the Southern Confederacy. Miss Cornell, of Cooperstown, has in her possession I know a letter from Bowne stating that he signed as above. She has a more recent letter from him asking her to destroy the first and begging her silence. This I know. He is rich and is a spy. He travels that he may gain facts for Jefferson Davis. He will be for a fortnight or more at Cooperstown where he can be arrested as a spy and should be.

Your friend and my country's,

E. BROOKS,
Of New York.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 7, 1861.

EDWARD J. CHASE, U. S. Marshal, Lockport, N. Y.:

Arrest G. L. Bowne, of Key West, who is said to be at Cooperstown. Secure his papers and send him forthwith to Fort Lafayette, N. Y., in charge of a trustworthy person.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Lockport, September 11, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On Saturday evening, the 7th instant, your telegram was received directing the arrest of G. L. Bowne and his conveyance to Fort Lafayette. Two of my deputies were charged with the execution of the order and on the next evening arrested Mr. Bowne at Cooperstown, and on the 10th instant delivered him to the custody of Colonel Burke at Fort Lafayette and took the colonel's receipt for him. The deputies found in Mr. Bowne's possession numerous papers of a miscellaneous character and some letters from friends and on business; some from Key West. Only a few have been opened and none read except the address and signature. Some of the packages of papers were at the time of seizure in sealed envelopes which have not been opened. The papers are all in my office under the seal of my deputy, Mr. Tucker, who made the seizure. Shall I examine them or forward them to you?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD J. CHASE,
U. S. Marshal.

WASHINGTON, September 13, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: As counsel of Mr. Bowne, of Key West, Fla., now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, I am anxious to have an interview of a few moments in reference to his case. Mr. Bowne is a native of Western New York, and for the benefit of his health in the fall of 1839 went to Key West and has ever since spent his winters there, returning as the summer approached to his old home in Cooperstown and there remaining until cold weather. This year he left Key West as early as March. A few days since he was arrested and conveyed to Fort Lafayette. He has no idea of the cause of his arrest further than being by order of the Secretary of State. He presumes that it grows out of the treasonable position assumed by the State of Florida.

Mr. Bowne has always been and now is a Union man and opposed to anything like secession. As a member of the legislature of Florida he opposed to the last the calling of a convention, and when it was determined to call one he refused longer to remain a member of the legislature and sat with them no more. His course all through and his influence has been for the Union both in Florida and Western New York. On this I am advised that abundant proof can be furnished from Cooperstown and Key West. My object in asking an interview is to ascertain the nature of the charges against my client and to (if possible) arrange some plan to produce the proof of his innocence of any thought, word or deed against the integrity of the Union. The importance in this case of some speedy action and release if innocent is that Mr. Bowne has for more than twenty years been a very sick man, and his confinement in Fort Lafayette for any very considerable length of time might be fatal to him.

Hoping that the Secretary will accord me an interview, I remain, your obedient servant,

P. S. L. CUMMINS,
Of Cummins, Alexander & Green, Attorneys, New York.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 14, 1861.

EDWARD J. CHASE, U. S. Marshal, Lockport, N. Y.:

Your letter of the 11th received. Send at once by post the papers to which it refers in the case of G. L. Bowne.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., September 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to lay before you the following statements in regard to Mr. George L. Bowne recently arrested in this village upon the charge as is generally understood of treason.

Mr. Bowne, now about forty-four years of age, is regarded here as one of our citizens; was born in the town of Butternut, now Morris, in this county and lived with his mother in this village during a portion of his boyhood and early manhood and ever since made his annual summer visits here as to his home. A feeble constitution and inherited pulmonary indisposition induced him about twenty years since to go to Key West as a clerk in the employment of Mr. Doubleday, a merchant of consumptive tendencies who had gone thither from this town and had found that climate highly favorable to his health. Young Bowne finding that climate agreed with him has since made Key West his business residence (he is without family) and by assiduous attention to business has accumulated it seems a considerable degree of wealth. His summers have usually been spent among us, but an increase of his asthmatic difficulties has invariably driven him South on the approach of cold weather.

Among us Mr. Bowne is universally esteemed as a man of unimpeachable character. His amiable, gentlemanly and correct deportment has secured him the respect of the whole community and very strongly endeared him to his intimate friends. In his absence and without being previously consulted he was a year ago elected to represent Key West in the Florida legislature. He is not a politician; did not seek the place, and if as is believed there has been a long entertained conspiracy in the South against our Government I am quite sure Mr. Bowne is not one of the conspirators. Whatever disloyal act or circumstance (if any) may appear against him I believe should be attributed to his yielding to the influence of politicians around him instead of following the dictates of his better feelings and judgment.

In conversation here the last two summers he has uniformly deplored the national troubles and manifested a decided preference for the Constitution and Union over any division or separation of the States if it could be maintained without too great a sacrifice of present and future interests. Doubting that it could be he has asked, "Why not let the South go?" His deportment, tone and conversation through the summer has been much less obnoxious in public than that of many I am sorry to say of my Democratic neighbors, and some of them men of mark. I am informed that several vessels in which he is more or less interested as an owner are chartered by our Government and now employed in her service.

I do not know upon what grounds his arrest is based and will not therefore presume to judge of its justice or expediency, but I do not hesitate to say that unless the nature of the evidence against him or some urgent public policy (of which I cannot judge) requires that he be tried or kept in custody I believe the interest of the Government would be subserved by setting him at liberty. If he is to be tried cannot the trial be had soon, that if not convicted he may be set at liberty before cold weather? If he cannot be tried soon nor discharged from arrest unconditionally then I would suggest that he be allowed to go at large on his parole as I have not a doubt that his parole may safely be relied upon both to return into custody at any specified time and to observe faithfully any line of conduct to which he may pledge himself. Should it be deemed necessary, however (which I sincerely hope it may not be), to keep him in custody for any considerable time then may it not be well in view of his health that he be soon removed to some place of safe-keeping in a milder climate (if he shall prefer the request). His immediate friends here seem more anxious about his health on the approach of the cold weather than about the final result.

Our friends here—the Government's friends—have urged upon me to make this communication believing that Mr. Bowne's disloyalty whatever it may have been has not been the disloyalty of a determined traitor. We beg for him and his case as favorable a disposition as the Government in justice, humanity and its policy can make.

Most respectfully, very truly, yours,

W. H. AVERELL.

COOPERSTOWN, September 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Feeling that you will appreciate my motives in addressing you I deem it needless to make excuses for intruding on your no doubt already over-occupied attention and will briefly state my object, which is to petition for your favorable consideration in the case of George L. Bowne, esq., who was arrested in this village on the 8th instant on a charge of treason. No doubt his more influential friends here and in New York City have or will appeal to you in his behalf and my action may be superfluous, but I cannot refrain from doing what I consider my duty in testifying to you that the course pursued by Mr. Bowne during the past summer has been that of a good and loyal citizen.

I cannot better illustrate what I believe to be his sentiments than by repeating the words he used at my table when dining with me about the middle of July last. On that occasion the conversation turned on the affairs of our country and Mr. Bowne said that he had heard men in Cooperstown use language against the Government which he thought was very wrong; that though he had heavy interests at the South and his sympathies were on her side that he could not feel as these people seemed to do, and that if he did he would not dare to express himself as they did. He said his first wish was for the maintenance of the Union but as he considered that impracticable he desired a peaceable separation, but deprecated the action of the South in taking Fort Sumter and thus involving the country in a civil war.

Of course if Mr. Bowne has by word or act committed treason or the interest of our country demands his confinement I have not a word to say, but if his arrest was caused by mere suspicion or from the fact of his being a member of the Florida legislature you will please allow my statement to have whatever weight you think it entitled to.

I inclose two paragraphs* clipped from our village papers, one Republican the other Democratic, but both for the Union and opposed to traitors North or South.

With the highest esteem I feel honored in subscribing myself yours, truly,

A. A. BROWN.

Should you not remember me I would refer you to your friend William H. Averell, esq.

[Indorsement.]

Mr. Bowne may be released on his taking an oath of allegiance.

[Inclosure.]

ARREST ON A CHARGE OF TREASON.

Considerable excitement was occasioned in our village last Sunday evening by the arrest of George L. Bowne, esq., on a charge of treason. The arrest was made on a warrant from the State Department at Washington by Deputy Marshal Tucker, of Lockport, and Assistant Deputy Marshal Pierce, of Rochester. The Albany Atlas and Argus having given an exaggerated statement of what occurred we will state what was done and said more in detail than would have been necessary had the simple fact of the arrest only been announced.

In the first place it is proper to state that Mr. Bowne is a native of this county and resided here till early manhood. He then emigrated to Key West, Fla., where he has been for many years and is now engaged in large commercial and mercantile transactions. Although scarcely forty years of age and unmarried, by his superior business qualifications, energy and discretion he has accumulated a large property. Being subject to severe visitations of asthma he has for several years spent the summer seasons at the North, and the last two or three years mostly in this his native county. Last year he purchased a house in this village, furnished it and has resided in it the past spring and summer, his brother who is in business here being a member of his family. Mr.

* One of the inclosures omitted as unimportant, being substantially a repetition of the other.

Bowne and his partner (Bowne & Curry) are large ship owners, much larger than any other house in Florida, and they have now some three or four vessels in the service of the Government. A year ago Mr. Bowne was elected a member of the Florida legislature for two years. He is now a member and was last winter at the time the secession ordinance was unanimously approved; and it is this fact very probably which has subjected him to the imputation of treason, at least none other is even suspected here.

Now as to his arrest. The two marshals, the sheriff and we believe a deputy went to his house and made the arrest between 6 and 7 p. m. Mr. Bowne although astonished at the charge submitted uncomplainingly and cheerfully. He delivered over his letters and papers unhesitatingly, ate his supper composedly and made his arrangements to leave promptly. Suffering under a recent attack of asthma he dreaded the night air and the marshals were requested to remain over till Monday morning. They expressed a willingness so to do but said if they did a faithful discharge of duty would require his safe custody in jail. Mr. Bowne of course preferred proceeding to Fort Plain at once.

After all things were ready and waiting the arrival of Mr. Bowne's carriage to take himself, brother and the two marshals some fifty or sixty persons assembled and most of them came into the house. On coming in one man harshly addressed the marshal, telling him that he could not and should not take Mr. Bowne from the house or village. The marshal very mildly but firmly replied that he had an official duty to perform and he should perform it; that Mr. Bowne was a gentleman and would be treated as such and he advised that there should be no disturbance or resistance. The rejoinder to this was in substance, "I am as big or a bigger man than you and can whip you." To this the marshal said: "Sheriff, arrest that man," and the arrest was promptly made. After this another man told the marshal with an oath that he should not or could not take Mr. Bowne from the house; to which the marshal replied that he had better be careful or he would be sent for, and that he must be very careful about interfering. Mr. Bowne was not in the room where this conversation took place but he soon sent word and requested the crowd to leave the house if they were his friends.

Then the marshal was told that he could not take Mr. Bowne until he showed his papers. The marshal refused most decidedly to show his papers to the crowd but that Mr. Bowne could see them or had seen them, and then again Mr. Bowne requested them to leave the house, saying he had seen the warrant and it was all right. The crowd still remained in the house and there were other harsh words and offensive language. About 8.30 the carriage came to the door and Mr. Bowne, his brother and the marshals seated themselves and drove off, the crowd groaning and using insulting language. The marshals informed Mr. Bowne and his friends that they should take him to Rochester instead of New York and the Argus states that this was said to prevent a mob, &c., whereas Mr. Bowne greatly preferred to be taken to New York.

Now this demonstration to resist the execution of process issued by the highest authority in the Government, although disgraceful and criminal to individuals and disreputable to our village, was far less imposing than the one the Argus describes. Besides it was a demonstration calculated to injure and implicate Mr. Bowne and might have resulted in serious and fatal damage to others as well as himself had it not been for the interposition of the calm but firm determination of the officers and above all the manly and noble conduct and bearing of Mr.

Bowne himself. He was not simply self-possessed but in all respects he deported himself as a gentleman unconscious of treasonable acts or complicities, and we hope and trust that his noble bearing on the trying occasion was the true index.

He was taken to Fort Lafayette in New York Harbor and we shall soon know the specific treasonable acts wherewith he is charged and cannot doubt his speedy release and return.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, September 19, 1861.

George L. Bowne being duly sworn* says: First, that he was not a member of the convention of the State of Florida which passed the ordinance of secession; second, that he was a member of the legislature of the State of Florida in the year 1860-'61, and as such member opposed and voted against the act authorizing a convention of the said State; third, that previous to his leaving New York for Florida last fall he expressed himself opposed to the secession of Florida and was uniformly opposed to it; fourth, that he is a Union man and has during the past summer so declared himself; fifth, that he is a native of this State and has resided for a number of years past during the summer months at Cooperstown, in the State of New York; sixth, that he used all his influence to prevent the secession of the State of Florida.

Case of John C. Brain.

John C. Brain was arrested at Michigan City, Ind., early in September, 1861, charged with being a spy in the service of the rebels, a member of the disloyal secret organization known as the Knights of the Golden Circle and an officer in the rebel army. He was examined before a magistrate by whom he was committed to jail for want of bail in the sum of $6,000 and was afterward sent to Fort Lafayette for safe-keeping and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. A paper was found in his possession showing that he was recognized as a sergeant in a company of State guards which it was stated would be subject to Governor Magoffin's orders "to go anywhere," and was authorized to enlist men for the same "to be called for when needed." This paper was dated Louisville, April 16, 1861. The evidence produced on his examination showed that he had been about Michigan City since the latter part of June, 1861, occasionally absenting himself for a week or more at a time in a mysterious way, no one knowing whither he went; that he disclosed to some persons that he was a Knight of the Golden Circle and made efforts to induce them to join; that he stated that the obligation of the society bound its members "to furnish all information possible;" that he also tried to induce parties to engage in conveying contraband goods, sabers, pistols, &c., to the rebel States; that he talked against the Government, alleging that it was already destroyed and that a Government like that of France was preferable; that one object he set forth as embraced in the organization of the Knights of the Golden Circle when trying to persuade persons to join the same was to aid in the "substitution of a new and different form of government;" that he was seen to have in his possession "a printed hand bill for recruits in the Confederate Army." After his confinement Brain claimed to be a British subject which claim was so far recognized that he was released on the 10th day of February, 1862, on his taking an oath not to go to nor hold correspondence with the insurrectionary States nor do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection without requiring an oath of allegiance.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

TO THE SHERIFF OF LA PORTE COUNTY, IND.

DEAR SIR: If the John C. Brain spoken of in above [following] extract taken from Chicago Journal of this date is of more than medium size, light complexion, light hair and grayish eyes, with rather exposed upper teeth when speaking, and if the said John C. Brain has at any time been engaged in getting up a railroad route book from New Orleans to New York, the said John C. Brain is an unmitigated scoundrel and swindler, and if the evidence is not sufficient to properly punish him on the charge of spy to the enemies of our Government hold him for swindling several parties of this city and Pittsburg of considerable sums of money and advise me by mail. Besides my clients I think William D. Baker, Shauley S. Millar, S. P. Rounds, proprietor of the Adams House, of this city, or a Mr. Haven, a publisher and printer of Pittsburg, Pa., would be glad to get a chance at him.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN B. THOMAS,

E. M. ARCHIBALD, Esq.,

Her British Majesty's Consul, New York.

DEAR SIR: I have been removed from La Porte, Ind., after being confined over a month in the county jail to this fort. When arrested or till now there has been no distinct charge against me and I am guiltless of any unlawful act. The soldiers who arrested me took from me over $200, giving no receipt or acknowledgment whatever. By the Chicago newspapers I learn that I am an officer in the rebel army, the only foundation for which has been my having signed the roll of a company of State Guards in Kentucky which company I believe has never been organized and I never took any oath whatever to this country or any State thereof. I am a native of London; came here in 1849; have never been naturalized or declared intentions. My uncle, William Tabram, resides in Bristol, Pa., and my mother, Mrs. John Brain, resides in Springfield, Clark County, Ohio. As a British subject I appeal to you for protection and the restoration of my money and liberty.

Yours, very respectfully,

JNO. C. BRAIN.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: With reference to the case of John C. Brain now confined at Fort Lafayette, N. Y., I have the honor to remark that from papers on file in this Department it appears that on the 16th of April last the person referred to was a sergeant in a military organization in Kentucky called the State Guard and was empowered to enlist recruits for three companies, all for the purpose of waging war against the United States; that he was arrested for this offense and is imprisoned as a person dangerous to be allowed to go at large during the existing condition of affairs in that State and in others. He is detained at a place where the writ of habeas corpus is suspended and it is conceived cannot at present be released compatibly with the public safety.

I avail myself of this occasion to offer to you a renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I hand you herewith the evidence in the case of John C. Brain. He was examined before a magistrate in La Porte County, Ind., and committed in default of bail, $6,000. A statement of the evidence together with the affidavits of Mrs. Mary Fraley are inclosed. Mrs. Fraley was boarding at the same hotel with Brain and through an intimacy with his wife was brought into contact with Brain. She seems to be a credible person. As to his nativity he is reported to me to have been a native of Springfield, Ohio. Of this I have no evidence. One of his letters* which I inclose states that he came to this country when some ten years of age. Naturalization of his father in some States would have made him a citizen. A letter to the English consul at Chicago states that his father is residing at Montgomery, Ala. I hand you a letter* from his father dated 23d of July last showing him to have been in Cincinnati at that date.

Respectfully submitted.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

In the matter of the prosecution of one John C. Brain, who was first arrested by Colonel Milroy, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

This man Brain was arrested at Michigan City after having been suspected and watched for some time. He was brought to Camp Colfax, and by order of Milroy the papers, &c., were placed in my hands, with the request to hold him by some prosecution under our statutes until his case could be fully developed. He was finally arrested on the charge of aiding and corresponding with the rebels. The examination elicited the facts, of which the following is a somewhat full statement leaving out, however, all useless verbiage:

One E. R. Young who had been on his track for some time testified substantially as follows: The first suspicion of the gentleman arose from the circumstances noticed by the superintendent of New Albany and Salem Railroad, he taking up his pass over the railroad. He pretended to be preparing memoranda for a railroad map or some such thing while in fact he did nothing as far as could be seen which showed that such was the fact. He was about Michigan City from and after the latter part of June and at times would absent himself for a week or ten days no one knowing his whereabouts. In order to learn the facts Young became friendly with him, and he explained to Young in full the society of the K. G. C.; that he was one; that the oath required him and any other member to furnish all information possible; that he could make money by carrying contraband goods, such as pistols, &c., South, telling Young just what he could obtain articles for North and what he could obtain for them in Southern cities, his knowledge showing that he had been engaged in the business; that upon one occasion he recognized a couple of ladies who came in from Chicago and went South to Louisville, and afterward informed Young that they recognized him by the society sign of recognition, he telling Young that they had numbers of sashes, caps, &c. The more full detail of this evidence he can give himself with much other information not brought out in the examination.

One E. M. Davis testified that he knew of his sounding men upon governmental questions, saying that one like France was preferable, &c.; that this Government was already destroyed, &c. He endeavored to induce Davis to institute the organization of the K. G. C., telling him fully as to the obligations, &c., and that it was to aid in substitution of a new and different form of government, explaining the condition and magnitude of the organization South.

Major Blowney, formerly of the Ninth, now of the Twenty-eighth [Twenty-ninth] Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and provost-marshal at Philippi under Dumont (colonel), recognized him as having been about Philippi during the latter part of June and fore part of July. That when there he was with one Crim, a merchant and a noted secessionist.

One Aaron Fosdick also recognized him as being about Philippi, and several others of the Ninth Regiment recognized him. Fosdick thought he was peddling some of the time.

One John Young testified to some conversations with him, but so mixed up with other matters as to be of little bearing.

One Palmer saw him have a printed hand bill for recruits for Confederate Army. Saw the evidence of his appointment or authority to recruit which was in shape of a letter.

One Mrs. Fraley could have testified to about the same but owing to prudential reasons was not called upon the stand.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

LA PORTE COUNTY, State of Indiana:

Mary Fraley being duly sworn deposeth and saith that on or about 28th day of July, 1861, John C. Brain tried to make arrangements with her to carry revolvers for him into the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, said Brain and his wife to accompany her; he, the said Brain, agreeing to give her a share in the profits and assured her that she would make $30 per month by engaging in said business; also that said Brain gave her a hand bill calling for men to enlist in the Southern army, which she read, after which she returned the same to him. Mrs. Brain, wife of said John C. Brain, told her that she destroyed said hand bill with other papers by throwing them into a vault; that said Brain told her that he knew all about the rebel army, and that he kept himself fully posted with regard to their doings, and that he would be with them within two months. He also told her that he would write and let them know when we were coming with pistols for them; that he also told her the names of a number of men who would assist her that she might avoid being arrested by the U. S. authorities.

* * * * *

John C. Brain, imprisoned at Fort Warren, Boston, was arrested at Michigan City, Ind., and examined before a magistrate in La Porte County, Ind. The evidence showed him to be a member of the secret disunion organization known as the Knights of the Golden Circle; that he held a commission in the army of the insurgents; that he was engaged in purchasing and smuggling revolvers and munitions of war into the insurrectionary States. Mrs. Mary Fraley testified that on the 28th of July he tried to make arrangements with her to carry revolvers for him into the States of Kentucky and Tennessee; also that he exhibited to her a hand bill calling for men to enlist in the rebel army. He was committed to jail by the magistrate to await the action of the grand jury, and subsequently transferred to Fort Lafayette for safe-keeping and afterward with other prisoners to Fort Warren.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you allow me to remind you of the case of John C. Brain, a prisoner in Fort Warren? In the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 13th of November last you informed me that the public safety required the detention of Brain for the present. Two months have all but elapsed since that date and he had before been more than two months and a half under arrest. You may perhaps think it possible now to release him. The letters he has written to me and to Her Majesty's consuls are those of a man of so little education that I do not think he can be very dangerous.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 13, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY DEAR LORD LYONS: I have received your unofficial note of the 11th instant in regard to John C. Brain. You may recollect that he was arrested on a charge of having been enlisted in the military service of the insurgents and of having given them aid by supplying them with revolvers. His treasonable practices took place in part at least in the State of Kentucky where order has not been restored and whither if released he would probably return. Under these circumstances it is not deemed advisable yet to discharge him.

Permit me, however, to inquire what proof you have other than his own assertion that Brain is a British subject? Upon this point a doubt has been raised.

I am, my dear Lord Lyons, very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

UNOFFICIAL.]

WASHINGTON, February 4, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

MY DEAR SIR: On the receipt of the unofficial letter which you were so kind as to write to me on the 13th of last month I requested Her Majesty's consul at Boston to make the inquiries necessary to enable me to give you further information relative to the claim of John C. Brain, a prisoner in Fort Warren, to British protection. The consul has sent me in reply a letter from Brain himself.

In that letter Brain states that he was born at Ball's Pond, Islington, London, in the year 1840, on the 30th of May; that his birth is registered at Saint Mary's Church, Islington, in which church his father and mother were married and he himself was christened; that in the month of May, 1849 or 1850, his father and mother brought him to America in the ship Ivanhoe, a Black Star Line packet; that to the best of his knowledge his father never claimed or exercised any rights of citizenship in the United States; that he himself has certainly done nothing to throw off his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain.

Brain emphatically denies having enlisted in the military service of the enemy of the United States; having supplied the enemy with revolvers; having committed any act of hostility to the United States, or having been guilty of any offense against the laws. He declares his perfect willingness to stand his trial on any charge of the kind.

He affirms that his imprisonment which has already lasted five months is telling fearfully on his health, and he says that in order to obtain his release he is willing to swear (saving his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain and his rights as a British subject) that he will not enter any of the seceding States or do anything hostile to the Government of the United States during the present difficulties.

Believe me to be, my dear sir, very faithfully, yours,

LYONS.

Maury, I now have the honor to acquaint you that the officer having command of the fort in which they are held has been directed to discharge those persons upon their complying with certain conditions deemed necessary for the public safety.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have received a letter from John C. Brain, who informed me that he has been released from prison and begs me to make inquiries concerning a sum of $220 which he states to have been taken from him when he was arrested.

You may perhaps remember that reference was made to this sum of money in a dispatch from Her Majesty's consul at New York to me dated the 23d of October which I left with you for perusal on the 26th of that month, and which you were so good as to return to me on the same day. It was stated in that dispatch that Mr. Brain had informed the consul that a sum of $220 in gold was taken from him at Camp Colfax, in Indiana, by a private soldier by order of a captain; that no acknowledgment was given to him for the money and that he was very desirous that inquiry should be made concerning its safety.

Brain now informs me that it was Captain Blake, of the Ninth Indiana Regiment, who took charge of the sum in question. He states further that after an imprisonment of nearly six months he is turned out entirely destitute of money and suffering from a severe rheumatic attack brought on by confinement and by sleeping during nine days on a stone floor.

I beg to recommend the matter to your attention and to express a hope that the money may be restored to this poor man without delay.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 4, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 1st instant relative to the recovery of the sum of $220 which is alleged to have been taken from John C. Brain when arrested by the military authorities in Indiana last year.

In reply I have the honor to state that the Secretary of War to whom the matter was referred informs this Department that he has directed an inquiry to be set on foot in the proper quarter regarding the facts of the case, and also the return of the money if so taken from Mr. Brain.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 4, 1862.

Lieut. Col. WILLIAM H. BLAKE,

Ninth Indiana Regiment, Fetterman, Va.

COLONEL: Lord Lyons has written to the Secretary of State in behalf of John C. Brain, who says he was arrested at Camp Colfax, Ind., and that by direction of a Captain Blake a private soldier took from him the sum of $220 in gold and that no acknowledgment was given to him for the money. As you are the only officer appearing on the roll of that regiment by the name of Blake it is presumed that Mr. Brain has mistaken your rank and that you are the officer referred to as having given orders to the private to take the money.

I will thank you to report to this Department with as little delay as possible the facts and circumstances connected with the arrest of Mr. John C. Brain, and if the money was taken as alleged you will please remit the sum so taken therewith.

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 28, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: Adverting to your note of the 1st instant relative to the recovery of the sum of $220 alleged to have been taken from Mr. John C. Brain when arrested by the military authorities in Indiana last year and to my reply, I now have the honor to inclose to you for your information the copy of a statement in writing on the subject which was made under the instructions of Adjutant-General Thomas to E. D. Webster, esq., of this Department, by Lieut. Col. William H. Blake, of the Ninth Indiana Volunteers, and a copy of the letter from Captain Copp referred to in that statement.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

CAMP ANDREW JACKSON,
Near Nashville, Tenn., March 14, 1862.

E. D. WEBSTER, Esq.

SIR: I am directed by Adjutant-General Thomas to make to you a statement of facts in my possession respecting the arrest of Mr. John

C. Brain, a British subject, at Camp Colfax, Ind., and a sum of money alleged to have been taken from him by order of a Captain Blake, of the Ninth Indiana Volunteers. In reply I would state that I as captain in said regiment at that time ordered the arrest of John C. Brain then sojourning at Michigan City, Ind., at the junction of the Louisville, New Albany and Salem Railroad with the Michigan Central Railroad. He (Brain) was charged by the citizens of the city with being a rebel spy and an agent of contraband goods going forward to Louisville. I arrested him myself and delivered him over to now Captain Bush, Michigan City Artillery, now encamped here, with orders to deliver him over to the civil authorities of La Porte, Ind.

Captain Bush and myself examined his trunks at the Jewell House, Michigan City, where he was stopping with his wife. I only took possession of his papers as they exhibited the fact that he was recently from the South. These Captain Bush carried to La Porte and delivered them with the prisoner to Captain Copp, of the Ninth Indiana Volunteers, now in this camp. Brain and the papers were then delivered over by my order to the civil authorities. Since then I have lost sight of the prisoner.

From the moment of his arrest up to his delivery by myself to Captain Bush there had been no search of his person nor did I then know nor have I since heard that Brain had money in his possession or that any had been taken from him, nor did I order any search for money or any other valuables in his possession but left his private property intact in possession of his wife then stopping at the Jewell House, Michigan City, Ind. On the contrary I learned that he had no money, was indebted to his hotel keeper and owed other small bills in the city. Nor did he avow himself an English subject but claimed to be a citizen of the State of New York, which I believed him to be. I inclose the statement of Capt. William Copp, of Company B, Ninth Indiana Volunteers, containing statements of facts respecting his knowledge of the transaction.

Captain Bush's battery being attached to another division I have not been able to see [him] but will take the earliest opportunity to send forward his statement. I would refer you to Morgan C. Weir, attorney at law, La Porte, Ind., the person who took charge of the papers and prosecuted the case.

Trusting this may be satisfactory, I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WM. H. BLAKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel Ninth Indiana Volunteers.

CAMP ANDREW JACKSON, Nashville, Tenn., March 15, 1862.

Being personally acquainted with most of the circumstances of the arrest and confinement of a man going by the name of John C. Brain I hereby certify the following facts:

First. He told me he was a native of Tennessee; that he had a brother in the secession army; that he had been given a commission as an officer in the Southern army but preferred to seek his fortune in the North, getting up a railroad guide or acting as agent for one.

Second. He had no money when arrested, or professed to have none. He had bought a coat for which he agreed to pay Mr. Lower, of Michigan City, the sum of $16. When arrested and brought to La Porte Mr. Lower came to get one or the other, the coat or the money. He told me he had no money and would pay for the coat when he got ready.

I took the coat from the impudent scoundrel's back and gave it to Mr. Lower. Had he been robbed or deprived of money or other valuables he would have made it known to me or to some of the officers at the time.

WILLIAM COPP,
Captain Company B, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

Cases of Charles H. and William H. Winder.

Charles H. Winder, a citizen of Washington of notoriously disloyal character, was arrested on the 9th day of September, 1861, by order of the provost-marshal of Washington and held in custody by him. He was examined at the provost-marshal's office and the evidence elicited is probably preserved in that office. A quantity of disloyal correspondence from him to his brother William H. Winder, of Philadelphia, was traced and seized and came to the Department of State, among which are the following passages, all in letters written by Charles H. Winder and addressed to William H. Winder:

January 2, 1861:

This idea of forcing States is one of the supremest follies; it can't result successfully.

February 19, 1861:

I suppose you have read Davis' admirable inaugural and seen it reported that Mr. Johnson is appointed Secretary of State? If that is so he can do something for me.

February 25, 1861:

Toombs I know likes you; I met him Tuesday night at a supper at McGuire's. In conversation my Southern views were developed which made him quite cotton to me.

April 4, 1861:

Naval preparations of a special character are under way. Stringham, the most bitter Republican and the most resolute of Northern officers, has been ordered to the command of the Minnesota to be got to sea with the utmost dispatch. * * * I am tired of this suspense. I would prefer that cannon should begin to speak.

April 7, 1861:

I wish my family were away from here. The first shot that is fired at Pickens or Sumter will be a signal for a contest here. The most exasperated feeling exists in Maryland and Virginia and the restraint once broken an overwhelming rush will be made from both States on this place. I feel well satisfied in my own mind that Mr. Davis will be in the White House before the 1st of August.

April 15, 1861:

I know I possess the confidence of the Montgomery Government and I am not disposed to do anything that can by the remotest possibility compromit my position there. If the Confederate States invade Maryland they shall have all my earnest, zealous efforts in their behalf. I will doubtless be called to Montgomery in June or July. The reunion of the States is an impossible event; only by the adoption of the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy by separate State action can it be done.

April 17, 1861:

Our city is a military garrison. I do not entertain your fears of Northern power. I know we are better organized; that in the coming contest we are more than a match for them. We never will have a union with them. When I say "we" I mean the Confederate States.

April 19, 1861:

You have all to wake up to a startling reality before July. Mark what I now tell you.

May 3, 1861:

The Administration have determined to invade Virginia. Quem Deus vult perdere prius dementat.

On the 10th day of October, 1861, Winder was released from confinement on his parole till the 31st of the same month, and on the said 31st of October his parole was extended to December 1, 1861; it was then extended to February 1, 1862, and then to March 1, 1862. In the meantime Winder had continued open-mouthed in his secession declarations insomuch that in directing the extension of his parole from December 1 to February 1 the Secretary of State had deemed it his duty to admonish him to greater caution and to a more strict construction of the provisions of his parole. Information had been given to the Department that some time in November, 1861, in a public place in Washington Winder had said that his sympathies were with the South in the pending struggle; that he probably never should change his sentiments; that he had told General Porter if to sympathize with the South and to desire her success in the present struggle was his offense he was guilty. The extension of Winder's parole from February 1 to March 1, 1862, reached beyond the time when this class of cases passed from the supervision of the Department of State and said parole was in force on the 15th day of February, 1862, when the case with others of like character was transferred to the charge of the War Department.

William H. Winder was arrested at Philadelphia on the 10th day of September, 1861, in pursuance of a telegraphic message of which the following is a copy:

W. H. Winder, of Philadelphia, has treasonable correspondence from his brother, Charles H. Winder, in Washington. It is important that this should be seized. You will therefore search the house and office of said William H. Winder for treasonable letters either of Charles H. Winder or John [H.] Winder, brigadier-general in the rebel army. Mark each and forward them to me by express under seal. Use every diligence to prevent letters being destroyed at one point while you are searching at the other. Answer.

A. PORTER,

Brigadier-General and Provost-Marshal.

Mr. Franklin, a detective officer to whom said message was addressed, procured a warrant from the mayor of the city and arrested Winder and searched his lodgings and office. Winder was discharged by the mayor, immediately re-arrested on a warrant issued by U. S. Commissioner Heazlitt and subsequently sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the War Department and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. The papers found in Winder's office showed him to be an industrious partisan writer, fully justifying the insurrectionary States in all their views and acts up to the outbreak of actual war and thoroughly sympathizing with them up to the day of his arrest. March 18, 1861, he wrote in the Pennsylvanian (newspaper) as follows:

The equality of the States to be at an end and the South to subside in vassalage to a domineering majority pledged to a course that would result in its inevitable ruin.

March 21, in the same paper:

Let the people of Pennsylvania reflect on what must be her condition with a dis-severed Union. The only resource will be to join the Southern Confederacy and look there for that prosperity impossible to her in the Northern Confederacy.

March 22:

The Constitution of the new Confederacy exhibits in letters of light the very just, reasonable terms upon which they will be made a Union people.

April 12 he wrote to the rebel Secretary of State, Robert Toombs, at Montgomery:

If it would be at all desired by you I would take occasion from time to time to give such information as would acquaint you with the real sentiment of the people.

April 19 he wrote to John Letcher, the rebel governor of Virginia:

My sentiments are so well known that most of the leading men of the South would trust me with a carte blanche to arrange terms.

May 6, in the New York Journal of Commerce, he writes:

The North or the ruling party has declared a programme of principles inconsistent with the rights and safety of the South; and therefore she seeks that safety out of the Union she understands to be refused her in it.

It appears that his rebellious sympathies grew ever stronger, for on the 24th of May the editor of the Journal of Commerce wrote to him:

Your communications are of too sweeping a character to suit our class of readers. It is from no want of respect for you or your writings, but we have to consult how far we can go in publishing without having our office torn down or a halter around our necks.

All his writings and correspondence which are voluminous up to the day of his arrest are so uniformly in the same vein that it seems like interminable repetition to read page after page reiterating the same ideas in different forms. The letters of Charles H. Winder found in possession of his brother speak without reserve of his (Charles') adhesion to the rebel cause and his intention to reside in the Confederate States. He informs his brother of his purpose to go to Montgomery to enter into the employment or service of the rebel government. The correspondence does not show that William H. Winder at any time rebuked or expressed disapprobation of these ideas of his brother. The case of William H. Winder presents the singular features of a man associating and corresponding almost exclusively with rebels and sympathizers with rebellion, including some of the leaders of the insurrection and newspapers known as the most ultra advocates of their cause, and writing daily for successive months letters and articles which would be pronounced without hesitation by every reader to be strongly in sympathy with the rebellion, yet professing an unequaled love for the Constitution and the Union and a loyalty surpassing that of all other men; and when tendered his liberty on different occasions on condition of taking the oath of allegiance refusing to comply with that condition because he claimed that his loyalty was of so high and pure a quality that it would be soiled and dimmed by the very act of expressing it by an oath. The said William H. Winder remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DEAR BROTHER: * * * It is a very curious coincidence that Johnson and Douglas made a speech on the same day, the one in Pennsylvania and the other in New York. The former declares that "secession is the rightful remedy, the last hope of the South," and the latter (Douglas) declared that "secession must be crushed out by force." I am very sorry Johnson has got into such company. I think dissolution is at hand. At any rate if it does not occur now it is only a question of time. Two peoples so utterly, radically and hopelessly different in views, sentiment and social organization can never harmonize. * * *

MY DEAR BROTHER: * * * A gentleman told me in confidence (and therefore you must not repeat it) that he dined at Bright's the other day and that he (Bright) told him that Governor Willard had actually determined to recommend to the legislature of Indiana the repeal of all laws prohibiting slavery in that State, but that Bright and other friends had dissuaded him from doing so at this time because it would be attributed to a feeling of bitterness against the abolitionists and a desire to toady to the South. "But," added Bright "the time is close at hand when the movement will be made both in Indiana and Illinois." * * *

SUPREME COURT ROOM, February 21, 1861.

DEAR BROTHER: * * * "I have heard"—and stopped. I said, "What have you heard, Mr. President?" "Never mind," he replied, "it is no business of mine." "Does it concern me?" I asked. He said, "You have a right to have your opinion upon the subjects that now distract the country." He spoke so mournfully and his hand shook so that he could scarcely take a letter out of an envelope and he looked so woe-begone and mournful that I felt the profoundest sympathy for him. I said, "Mr. President, if you have time and feel sufficient interest in my poor opinions I would like to tell you frankly what my opinions are and exactly where I stand." He said he would be glad to hear. I then stated them briefly: "In fact," I said, "I stand upon the speech you delivered from that window to the multitude on the night of the Breckinridge ratification. The sentiments and opinions you then declared are exactly mine,"—and I concluded by saying that some of his officers were propounding a most extraordinary question to candidates for military commissions, to wit: "If your State goes out would you take up arms against her?" That I did not believe he approved of any such question, but candor compelled me to declare emphatically that no earthly power could induce me to take up arms against my State. The old man's eyes were filled with tears and he said: "You are all right; there's nothing to complain of in your views. But," he added, "you haven't been here lately." I told him he was mistaken; that I had been there several times but could not get in, and that I had been to every levee but one and was gratified at the cordial manner in which he received me. He said he would see about the nomination and we separated with unusual feeling on his part.

Poor old man! He is a mere reed in the storm. I must close or I will not save the mail.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War:

William H. Winder, of this city, has been arrested for treasonable correspondence with rebel officers in obedience to a dispatch sent on from Provost-Marshal-General Porter. We find scores of letters in Winder's possession to and from many traitors—Breckinridge, Burnett, Vallandigham, Hallock, of the Journal of Commerce, &c. He has destroyed or concealed the letters from his brother, Charles Winder, of Washington. The correspondence proves that Charles Winder and William H. Winder knew of the intention and plan of taking Washington last April. Please order the marshal of this district at once to take William H. Winder to Fort Lafayette. Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you a note which I received this morning from William H. Winder, esq., a prisoner at Fort Lafayette. The answer which I made to it Colonel Burke, to whom I sent it, will forward to your Department. I should not institute or attempt any legal proceedings on behalf of any gentleman who might ask my assistance. My action in case I undertook to relieve any of them would extend no further than to the preparation of proofs to be submitted to the Department in such as I should consider clear instances of misapprehension, in which if any exist I think, knowing your sense of justice, the restoration to liberty of a party mistakenly committed and confined would be a relief to you only second to that which the prisoner himself would experience on being again free and unsuspected.

Yours, truly,

JOHN E. DEVELIN.

P. S.—May I ask the return of the inclosed? It may be that my answer will go to Secretary Cameron. If so and not received by you may I ask you to cause this and the inclosed to be sent over to him with an indorsement by you of my loyalty? I believe Mr. Winder was arrested by order of Secretary Cameron.

JOHN E. DEVELIN, Esq., Astor House, New York.

DEAR SIR: There are several parties here who though intelligent and possessed of means seem at a loss how exactly to proceed to secure their liberation from a confinement brought about under some misapprehension. I know nothing of the particulars of their cases but venture to suggest that if satisfied of their innocence of any impropriety which could justly consign them to this place you would probably be willing to take the necessary steps to secure their liberation with a zeal equal to your ability. At their instance I write to you, and if you should find it convenient to act for them and could get permission to see them in order to acquaint yourself with their cases they would be glad to see you.

I am, most respectfully, yours,

W. H. WINDER.

WILLIAM H. WINDER, Esq.

DEAR SIR: On my return to-day from Washington I find on my table your favor dated Fort Lafayette, 24th instant, stating that there are several parties there at a loss how to proceed to secure their liberty from a confinement brought about under some misapprehension, and suggesting that if satisfied of their innocence of any impropriety which could justly consign them to that place I would probably be willing to take the necessary steps to secure their liberation.

In answer I would say I would feel it a duty imposed upon me by my profession to investigate the case of any of the gentlemen confined at the fort who should desire me to do so, and that in the event of evidence being furnished which in my judgment ought to satisfy the officers of the Government that the party had been arrested and was detained under a misapprehension I should do all in my power to secure his release. Entrance to the fort can be had only by special permission, and the name of the gentleman to be visited must be inserted in the pass as I understand. You will therefore readily perceive that in order to pay a visit to any of the gentlemen referred to in your note it is necessary for me to be possessed of his name. If you will be so kind therefore as to send me their names I will endeavor to visit them to-morrow.

Yours, very respectfully, warded to this Department by Mr. John Develin. It is presumed that in forwarding the original to Mr. Develin Mr. Winder must have found means to elude the vigilance of the authorities at Fort Lafayette.

SIR: I have received your note without date, accompanied by one addressed to you by Mr. W. H. Winder, which is herewith returned agreeably to your request. It is not deemed advisable that you should have interviews with the persons to whom he refers, or compatible with the reputation of a good citizen which you so deservedly enjoy that you should have any professional connection with them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 20, 1861.

[CHARLES H. WINDER.]

DEAR CHARLES: I received on the 15th yours of the 11th announcing your sad bereavement to which I immediately replied. I also received and replied to yours written after your return from Baltimore in which you spoke of bringing my case to the consideration of Governor Seward. To my remarks on this suggestion of yours I would add these further observations. In regard therefore to any qualification or condition to a release I inclose some hasty remarks.

I am wholly unwilling to believe that Governor Seward or General Cameron could wish me to slime myself with conditions that would place upon me a lasting mark of degradation so poisonous to my peace as to render life undesirable, and implanting in the bosom an implacable feeling which may cause unhappiness to others as well as to myself. A release to be in any manner acceptable must be on such terms and in such manner as is best calculated to restore the personal good feeling which I had ever entertained and had oft manifested and which I had supposed was mutual, and to bury in oblivion the hardship and losses caused by my arrest and confinement. I am guiltless of wrong to the Constitution and the Union or to any section of the country in thought, word or deed, and upon this rock I stand and I cannot countenance anything inconsistent with it. I am now under the responsibility of the oath as much so as if I again should take it, and if I have violated it I am now amenable to condign punishment. If guiltless why make an oath a condition of my release?

I conclude with a suggestion that I be allowed on parole to go to Washington in person to attend to the investigation of my case. I will of course in no manner avail myself of the liberty of parole to do anything inconsistent with its spirit but will confine myself strictly to its object and return promptly to this place if my liberation be not the result. Give yourself no uneasiness about me. If you can obtain your own honorable discharge I have the heart for any fate and an abiding confidence in a retributive future.

I am, ever, your most affectionate brother,

W. H. WINDER.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 18, 1861.

[CHARLES H. WINDER.]

DEAR CHARLES: I have this moment yours of the 15th instant, and hasten to urge upon you my strong wish not to compromise me by any application for my release, except to learn the cause of my detention. In order that you may clearly comprehend my position I will state the facts:

On Tuesday, the 9th, in the evening, I was arrested on a warrant issued by the mayor of Philadelphia, predicated upon a dispatch from the provost-marshal of Washington, for carrying on a treasonable correspondence with the Confederates. The officer who took me by his inquiries indicated they expected to find such among my papers with General Winder and myself. Two officers went with me to my chamber and ransacked trunks, closets, drawers, &c., and took away every paper found, though upon examination not one was found in any manner to refer to political matters. I was then locked up in a station house all night, and I learn that during the night having searched my person and taken all my keys they ransacked my office, and during the next day overhauled all my private papers of thirty years' standing to find out what I had been doing during the last few months.

On the next day (Wednesday) I was discharged by the mayor and at the request of the U. S. district attorney was turned over to him, the marshal taking charge of me until afternoon, when a hearing was to be had before the commissioner. At the hearing the U. S. attorney expressed his disappointment at finding no correspondence to implicate me, but having read my papers (copies of my political correspondence, contributions to newspapers and memoranda for reference, many of them never sent, both of letters and communications and many intended for future use to be incorporated in communications where in the context they would wear an aspect very different from the naked memoranda), he desired postponement to hunt up evidence in Philadelphia of my conversations, the charge upon which I was taken being unsupported by a scintilla of evidence. But in my writings I had freely spoken and had condemned without stint or limitation the abolition wing of the Republican party. This stung the district attorney, who not daring to put my writings in evidence but desirous of punishing me for them wanted time to hunt up charges, and two days were allowed him for that purpose.

When the hearing came on he was still unable to bring any charge, and in meantime had contrived to get a dispatch from General Cameron to send me here. I was then discharged by the commissioner and instantly sent here. The marshal showed me a dispatch received on the 11th from Governor Seward: "Send W. H. Winder to Fort Lafayette." This was not used, they hunting up cause of accusation. I wrote Governor Seward a letter, and this dispatch would seem to have been written in reply or on receipt of my letter, which was written and sent before I was arrested or had dreamed of such a thing.

Thus it would seem that I was originally arrested on a false alarm that I was in correspondence with General Winder at Richmond, with whom I have had no communication verbally or in writing since about January, and at no time was politics the subject of a single remark between us. My writings may be sharp and ill judged, but not sharper or of wider scope than Governor Seward, General Cameron and all others of that party allow themselves in speaking of us. But in regard to devotion to the Constitution and the Union which it formed it is breathed in every line. White is not a more inseparable attribute of snow than love of the Constitution is of all my writings, and I could not wish a more triumphant vindication of myself than would be the publication of my writings entire. I here repeat emphatically that unless a difference of opinion from the Administration in regard to the best mode of securing the perpetuity of the Union be cause of offense there exists no ground upon which to base a charge.

Such being the state of the case I have supposed that neither General Cameron nor Governor Seward could have given any personal attention to the charges against me; nor can I reconcile it to myself that either could so far distrust me as to suppose I would clandestinely do anything I was ashamed to avow, and that if I had been in favor of a separation of the States that I would openly have taken my stand. I look therefore for an unconditional release, and in such a manner as shall make it manifest to the world that I stand perfectly acquitted of anything inconsistent with a true lover of the Constitution and its Union. To be called upon to take an oath to support the Constitution, &c., as a condition of release is by my own act to indorse my arrest and imprisonment as being deserved. Than to utter such self-calumny my burial here is less revolting. If I have any knowledge of those gentlemen my liberation as indicated above will be the prompting of their own hearts. I have so believed all along and shall not cease to do so except upon their own testimony. I am entirely satisfied that in a majority of cases their authority to arrest is given upon confidence in parties demanding it and without any sufficient authenticated evidence satisfactory to their own judgment. As no testimony has ever existed so none can ever be adduced or will be made public which can justify my arrest. It was clearly made under misinformation. Do nothing therefore to put me in a false position. Captain T. sends his kindest regards and warmest sympathy for your sad bereavement. Remember me most affectionately to Mary and Josie.

Your affectionate brother,

W. H. WINDER.

Possession of my office and papers was retained for nearly two weeks by the officers, and extracts or purported contents of private letters falsely published.

BALTIMORE, October 22, 1861.

WILLIAM HODGE, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR: I venture with no little diffidence to trespass upon your kindness in a matter that may seem to you to be out of my appropriate sphere and in which nevertheless I cannot but feel a deep interest. There is in my church a venerable lady, the widow of the late General Winder, who as you know was in his day one of our most prominent and distinguished citizens. She has been for many years living a very retired life dependent upon three sons, one of whom is in the Confederate Army from whom she cannot hear. The two others have recently been arrested, one in your city and the other (Mr. William Winder) in Philadelphia. From this one (now in Fort Lafayette) she has received letters declaring that he has always been a Union man; that he has never written a line South since the fall of Sumter and before that wrote only what he had written to members of the Federal cabinet and Northern members of Congress; that his health is very precarious; that his only offense is having a brother in the Confederate Army, and all that he desires is an opportunity to prove his innocence. These letters she inclosed to General Scott some weeks ago but has received no reply.

Feeling the deepest interest in her anxiety and trying circumstances, having always held her in the greatest respect as a most estimable Christian lady, I have been greatly affected by her appeal to me as her pastor, and conscious that I can exert no influence myself I have ventured upon your friendly consideration, knowing your familiarity with all the means and modes of reaching the seats of power, to ask if you can advise or aid me in doing anything to get Mr. Seward's attention and favorable consideration to the case of Mr. William Winder on account of his venerable mother. If he has really done anything that ought to subject him in his state of health to such confinement of course I ought not to say a word; but will not Mr. Seward give him reasonable opportunity to prove what he asserts, that he has done nothing against the Government? Can you do me the favor to suggest what if anything can be done in the case, or that in your opinion it is useless to attempt anything in present circumstances? I am really very sorry to trouble you with such an application but in the emergency know nowhere else to look with any hope.

Please present my best regards to the ladies and believe me, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. BACKUS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 31, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: You may extend for the period of thirty days and upon the same terms the parole of Mr. Charles H. Winder.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

[NOVEMBER 17, 1862.]

Col. J. DIMICK, Commanding Fort Warren.

SIR: Lieutenant Parry has refused to forward my letter to the Hon. James Brooks, returning it to me. I beg respectfully to state that Mr. Brooks has been elected a member of Congress for the city of New York, is a public man upon his responsibility as such and to refuse to allow him to receive a letter addressed to him is no less an insult to him than it is a violation of my rights. It is to charge him with incapacity or indisposition to act rightly with the letter. More especially if Mr. Brooks should not find fault with me for my charges against himself it seems passing strange that you should find cause to interfere and prevent my conveying to him my opinion of his course. Under the supposition that Mr. Parry did not know that Mr. Brooks was elected a member of Congress I again deposit the letter to be sealed and forwarded to its destination.

Respectfully, yours,

W. H. WINDER.

[Indorsement.]

FORT WARREN, November 18, 1862.

The inclosed letter to Hon. James Brooks, written by Mr. William H. Winder, was respectfully returned to him as contrary to my instructions to allow it to pass. He reinCLOSES it to me with this letter. I refer the matter to the Department that the letter may reach its destination if there be no objection to it.

J. DIMICK,
Colonel First Artillery, Commanding Post.

[Inclosure.]

NOVEMBER 17, 1862.

Hon. JAMES BROOKS, New York.

DEAR SIR: I find my mind so importunately beset by most distressing reflections upon the course which you and too many others have taken in relation to the emancipation proclamation and the orders already issued for instant action intended to secure its successful accomplishment in the most horrid form that I cannot resist giving them expression. While expressing indignation at its purpose and declaring the proclamation to be clearly unconstitutional in fact, you and others nevertheless prove false to the Constitution and to humanity and aid the unconstitutional measure most effectually by lulling watchfulness, suppressing action with the siren songs of brutum fulmen, and a Pope's bull against the comet. If you really be in earnest in your belief of its unconstitutionality and injustice it would seem that you should show it in some efficient manner. For if it be unconstitutional and improper it is your duty as it is that of all loyal to the Constitution, of all professing loyalty to Christianity, to denounce and to oppose by every legal and honorable means all steps manifestly tending and intended to accomplish this unconstitutional and unchristian measure. Most especially should you denounce all those orders which on penalty of dismissal with such disgrace as it is in the power of the official to inflict require Army officers to aid the negroes, forbidding them to interfere with any attempt the negroes may make to free themselves.

A Lieutenant Johnston, in Kentucky, deeply impressed with the unconstitutionality and barbarity of the proclamation policy tendered his resignation rather than violate his oath to support the Constitution. For this he was instantly and ignominiously put in irons and sent to prison. Being resolute he again tendered his resignation for which he was in the language used disgracefully dismissed the service, and in presence of the army had his shoulder straps and insignia of office rudely torn from his person. This is the treatment for fidelity to one's oath to support the Constitution and defend it. What a spectacle!—the sworn conservators of the Constitution issuing proclamations subversive of the Constitution and revolting to Christianity, manacled in irons and disgracing so far as they can disgrace anybody an officer for tendering his resignation rather than become a particeps in an outrage upon the Constitution! The case of Lieutenant Johnston as reported is even more flagrant and calls for deeper condemnation than that of Mrs. Brinsmade. Why are you and the other sirens silent upon the case of Lieutenant Johnston and upon the orders issued in consequence of his tender of resignation?

The New York Times of the 14th instant in a special dispatch says that information having been received that certain military commanders had returned fugitive slaves from within our lines to loyal as well as rebel masters, and the Department had called for reports in order that such officers may be duly punished. Why don't you publish again General Butler's reply to Governor Andrew's lecture to him upon similar proceedings? You indorsed that letter at the time as a fitting rebuke and so did the nation generally. Give us that letter.

Why do you not boldly and openly sustain all who maintain and defend the Constitution? Why not proclaim to Army and Navy that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land? When by the course of the brutum fulmen sirens the horrors of a servile war shall aggravate the desolation of the South, mortally embittering hatred without securing subjugation or union—union with murderers alike of the Constitution as of women and children—what a union is thus offered to the South—a fraternity of the "Massachusetts school." Will you be able in that dread day to find siren songs which will lull your awakened conscience? Why not act consistently with your declarations of the unconstitutionality of the proclamation and of a desire to restore a fraternal union? Will it weaken the North at home or degrade it abroad if you and all others condemning this act take all necessary and proper steps to avert the disgrace abroad and the horrors at home of its enactment? With the thunder of the people's voice let the lightning of their will strike all who lay sacrilegious hands upon that ark of our security, the Constitution.

I look upon the imprisonment of what are termed state prisoners—indeed upon the summary execution of all of them though all be pure as was Washington—as a light crime in comparison with the proclamation policy. How the papers teemed at one time with denunciations of an emancipation policy, universally scouting the idea as a monstrous slander, and they and the Army vied with each other in giving assurances that whenever an emancipation policy should be announced that the whole Army would refuse to act and would lay down their arms. Can't you republish some of the many thousand such assurances so vehemently given? The sins of this war are already a sufficient stench in the nostrils of nations. Shall this country by the adoption of the proclamation policy attach an inextinguishable odor of infamy to itself?

Respectfully, yours,

W. H. WINDER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 22, 1861.

SECRETARY OF STATE:

On Monday last while in Burch's saloon on Fourteenth street in company with Hon. Thomas H. Clay I was introduced by a Mr. Munroe to a Mr. Winder, who was represented as an excellent man in every respect except that he was a secessionist. In a brief conversation which followed Mr. Winder remarked that his sympathies were with the South in the pending struggle. Upon a remark being made by Mr. Munroe that some day he would probably be as good and loyal a citizen as any and would see the error of his views Winder remarked that he probably never should change his sentiments; that he was a Southern man; that when arrested (and he remarked parenthetically that he was a prisoner now on parole) and brought before General Porter he had said:

General, let's avoid any unnecessary circumlocution in this matter. If to sympathize with the South and to desire her success in the present struggle is my offense I am guilty, but if acts are requisite to make it out I am not.

He said that James B. Clay's only offense had been that he chose to think as a man had a right to think. Hon. Thomas H. Clay remarked that that was not all; that James had attempted to leave the State to forward the interests [of] the rebellion. Mr. Winder again remarked that Mr. Clay had a perfect right to leave the State if he pleased. I said to Mr. Winder that he was the first person of his sex whom I had heard in Washington declare his sympathies with the South. He said he could not help it; that his heart was there.

Much more in this strain was said by Mr. Winder in the midst of a pleasant conversation and we parted, Mr. Clay and myself expressing confidence that he would probably soon be convinced that after all his feelings the United States Government would be found by him to be the best he could live under.

EDWARD F. UNDERHILL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 30, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: Mr. Charles H. Winder's parole which expires on December 1 may be extended for sixty days further, but it is indispensably necessary that he should abstain from political conversation. He has already been reported to me as publicly expressing treasonable sentiments within the past month. It will not be in my power [sic] this exemption from confinement if he does not himself co-operate in the regulations prescribed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT WARREN, December 3, 1861.

[CHARLES H. WINDER.]

DEAR CHARLES: Since replying to yours of the 25th ultimo* I have nothing further from you, from which and from other circumstances I infer that Mr. Hodge has learned that Governor Seward has objections to setting a precedent of unconditional release and may be unwilling therefore even to allow me on parole to visit Washington to investigate my case.

I have omitted I think to call attention to the fact that since my arrest all my letters at the Philadelphia post-office have been stolen from the office by the marshal so that all my business has been interrupted, to my great detriment. Having arrested me without any justifying evidence and having outraged my rights by an illegal and secret seizure and search of all my papers of thirty years' collection to find cause for its justification, and failing to find any instead of having me released they had me transferred to a distant fort, seizing every letter addressed to me and keeping them in the hope to find something to give countenance to my confinement. This of course they will not find, but the iniquity of the proceeding cannot be overstated. I am confident that Secretaries Seward and Cameron are not conscious parties to these monstrous outrages of my rights and interests as an American citizen, and I do suppose that Governor Seward when properly advised will give an order to the marshal to surrender all my papers and to cease to take my letters from the post-office. If Mr. Hodge can get such an order on the marshal for my papers to be surrendered to Mr. George

* Not found.

W. Biddle I would like it. The order could also admonish the marshal not again to take a letter of mine from the post-office. I anxiously wait to learn if your parole has been extended, fearing as I greatly do that its non-extension may have caused your silence.

Your affectionate brother,

W. H. WINDER.

FORT WARREN, December 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In accordance with your letter of instructions* read to the parties confined in this fort to address you directly in relation to their release I proceed to do so, relying upon the implied assurance of your letter that these communications will receive your personal attention and reply. I have been confined now nearly thirteen weeks and during all that time I have been unable to learn of any charge whatever, consequently I can only state that I am unconscious of act or word inconsistent with the character and duty of a true American citizen; hence I infer that my arrest did not emanate from the head of a Department and that the names of such when employed in this matter were merely pro forma without attention to and probably without knowledge of the document to which they were attached. In this state of affairs I will respectfully submit to your consideration the propriety of allowing me on parole to visit Washington for the examination of my case, and I will add my conviction that a short interview will satisfy you of some error in my arrest and confinement which have proved seriously detrimental. Should the granting of the parole prove to be inconsistent with your purposes I trust I shall not be disappointed in my expectation of receiving a statement of any charges against me fully, specifically and with all the evidence in possession of the Department together with the names of all parties making charges.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

[WASHINGTON,] December 5, 1861.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary.

SIR: I have ventured in the accompanying letter to solicit the attention of the honorable the Secretary of State to the case of my brother, William H. Winder. May I take the liberty of invoking your good offices to lay my letter before him and to invite his attention to the subject-matter of it? I venture to suggest that the speediest and fairest mode of arriving at a just conclusion would be to allow him to come on to Washington and submit to the honorable the Secretary such explanations as he has to offer.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CH. H. WINDER.

[Inclosure.]

WASHINGTON, December 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I beg leave most respectfully to solicit your attention to the case of my brother, William H. Winder, now a prisoner in Fort Warren. I have understood that Mr. Blatchford, Mr. Hodge and Mr. Reverdy

* See p. 151, Seward to Keyes, November 26.

Johnson have interested themselves in his behalf, and feeling perfectly conscious that I could not hope to add any force to the intercessions of these distinguished gentlemen I have abstained from obtruding myself upon your notice, but no action having been taken by you in his case I cannot help feeling assured that it results wholly from a misapprehension of his case. And as no one knows better than myself that there is not the remotest foundation for his arrest I earnestly beg now to invoke your favorable consideration of the appeal of those gentlemen for the following reason: My brother is and has always been a firm, consistent, unwavering Union man. He believes that all the blessings that can attach to a nation are bound up in a fraternal union of all the States and that misfortune, suffering and weakness will follow a dissolution. Believing this he has most earnestly and (I think) ably advocated the Union on every occasion and in every manner in his power. He has never by word or deed given just cause of offense to the Government. If these things be so I will not suffer myself to doubt for an instant that you would order his unconditional release without delay if you were satisfied of them. To this end all that he asks is scrutiny. Take up his case, sir, and if any proof to the contrary can be brought against him you will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that your action in depriving a man (whose personal relations to you I know entitles him to your kind consideration, however humble he is) of his liberty you did so on substantial grounds. On the other hand if he be innocent you will admit that his fate has been a hard one. Torn from his business, the sole support of a mother now past eighty years, his papers and effects taken possession of by persons to say the least wholly indifferent to his interests (I of course allude to subordinates intrusted with the duty of arresting) and himself incarcerated now for three months, I submit most respectfully whether this be not a hard fate, if as I said before he has given no just cause of offense. Nay more than that if his aim and desire is the same as your own?

I know well, sir, that my solicitation can and perhaps ought not to have any weight with you, but I am very sure that in a case like this you will not be swayed by who says but by what is said. I again earnestly ask for the sake of justice that you will take the trouble to satisfy yourself about the case of a man whose personal feelings toward you are those of admiration and friendship and who I repeat looks to the same end with yourself. If you find upon fair investigation that you have proceeded upon good grounds it will silence us and be a consolation to you to know that you have acted justly. To this end will you allow me to suggest that you order my brother to be sent to this city on a temporary parole so that he can be at hand to explain whatever may be susceptible of explanation? I ask this in behalf of an aged mother who is now on the verge of the grave, and of my own family in the bosom of which these events have sped an arrow of unutterable affliction.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CH. H. WINDER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 10, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

SIR: Let W. H. Winder, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will do nothing hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

WASHINGTON, February 1, 1862.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: My parole having expired I reported myself this morning to the provost-marshal who informed me that he had received no instructions as to my case. I respectfully request that the honorable the Secretary will be pleased to transmit them to-day. I beg also to avail myself of this occasion to solicit your attention to my application for a temporary parole for my brother now in confinement in Fort Warren. The object for which it is desired being the adjustment of various interests in certain real estate which cannot be settled without his presence I venture to hope that the honorable Secretary of State will find no difficulty in granting the application. May I ask you respectfully to do me the favor to inform me by note through the post-office of the determination of the honorable the Secretary as early as will suit your convenience?

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CH. H. WINDER.

P. S.—I beg to remind you that to-day is Saturday and that if the provost-marshal is not instructed in my case to-day he cannot receive them until Monday. In the meantime he will have no alternative I suppose than to hold me in custody.

WASHINGTON, February 1, 1862.

I, Charles H. Winder, of the city of Washington, D. C., do voluntarily agree and pledge myself in having this my parole extended to honorably fulfill the stipulations hereinafter set forth, to wit: That during the existence of the present rebellion I will not visit any insurrectionary State or Territory without permission from the Secretary of State and that I will not render to the enemies of the Federal Government any aid, comfort or information of any nature whatever. It is hereby understood that this parole extends until the 1st day of March, 1862, upon which day I will report myself at the office of the provost-marshal of this District.

C. H. WINDER.

In presence of—

GEO. H. BANGS.

PHILADELPHIA, *February 4, 1862.*Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to address you upon a subject which probably had its origin in the Department under your charge and where the rights of a fellow-citizen have been very seriously compromised. It is as follows:

William H. Winder, a citizen of this Commonwealth, was arrested upon the 11th of September, 1861, at his residence in this city under a warrant issued by a U. S. commissioner upon a charge of conspiracy to overthrow the Federal Government, under the act of Congress of July 13, 1861. When arrested he applied to me as his counsel and at his request I pressed an immediate hearing of the case. Upon the alleged ground of other engagements of the district attorney the case was postponed to the afternoon of the 13th of September, Mr. Winder remaining in custody as he was unable to obtain bail in the amount required, $5,000. I appeared for him at the adjourned hearing and after some delay the U. S. attorney came forward and stated that he had no charge to prefer against Mr. Winder, adding that he had received an order for his delivery to the U. S. marshal. The commissioner discharged Mr. Winder as there was no charge pending against him. A telegraphic message purporting to be signed by the Secretary of War was then produced directing the marshal to take Mr. Winder to Fort Lafayette, and he was immediately taken into custody and carried to New York by that afternoon's train. He was subsequently removed to Fort Warren where he is now, having been thus in confinement for nearly five months. For many months, perhaps a year, prior to his arrest he had not quitted the city of Philadelphia, certainly not subsequently to the 4th of March, 1861. All his papers of every description were seized at the time of his arrest and his correspondence has been since intercepted and yet no specific charge has ever been preferred against him nor has he any notion of what his supposed offense is. In letters to me he has uniformly asserted his innocence of even a thought of disloyalty, and has affirmed his attachment to the Constitution. In these statements I place reliance and express my conviction of his entire blamelessness.

It is proper to add that on the 17th of January last I received a letter from Mr. Winder saying that he had been just offered his release upon condition that he would take an oath of allegiance to the Government (in what prescribed form he does not say), which he declines to do. His refusal he places upon the ground that while he has not the slightest objection to take an oath to support the Constitution on any proper occasion (which in fact he did when he joined the Home Guard of this city in the spring) he will not take this oath of allegiance as a condition of his release as he may thus give color to the assertion that there was some cause for his arrest and imprisonment or that he was a man against whom suspicion might have been properly entertained. Mr. Winder is of course unable to have his case heard upon a habeas corpus and he has been now in confinement nearly five months, to the great detriment of his business, the damage of his health and the injury of his character without knowing for what he is imprisoned.

Is he not entitled either to have some specific charge brought against him which he can meet in the usual way or to be unconditionally discharged? Is anything gained by the Government in keeping imprisoned a man whose sentiments are strongly for the Union but who honestly differs from the Administration upon questions of policy and who prefers remaining in captivity to the violation of what he considers a principle? Is not the conduct of such a man the best proof of his integrity and can it be deserving of harsh or arbitrary treatment? He is of course as every other man is amenable to the law of the land for any infraction of it, and the inference is very strong of his innocence of criminality or criminal intention when the closest scrutiny into his conduct and affairs has failed to develop a single fact upon which to found a charge against him. I believe him to be a much injured man and feel bound to use every proper effort to procure his release and therefore write to you, for as he was arrested apparently by the order of the late Secretary of War it seems to me that his case is properly cognizable by you and that his discharge should come from your Department.

I remain, with much respect, yours, &c.,

GEO. W. BIDDLE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 10, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: Herewith I inclose* a form of an oath of allegiance so modified as to prevent any possibility of the misapprehension that it is an engagement to support in a partisan sense the persons composing the executive department of the Government of the United States. You may show it to Mr. William H. Winder and tell him that he will be released upon taking this oath and making the usual engagements not to enter any of the insurrectionary States nor hold correspondence with persons residing in those States during the present hostilities.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 10, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: William H. Winder, a gentleman whose domicile is within my Congressional district, is at present confined at Fort Warren. I am not informed of the nature of the charges upon which he is so confined. His family are solicitous that he shall be released at least temporarily for the purpose of attending to important and urgent private business. I have the honor to submit this request to you and to beg your favorable consideration of it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. BIDDLE.

* Not found.

FORT WARREN, February 14, 1862.

Col. J. DIMICK, U. S. Army, Commanding Fort Warren.

SIR: Yesterday in conformity with a letter of instructions received by you from Governor Seward you offered me my release on condition of my taking the oath then proposed. I had on a previous occasion when offered my release by you on taking the oath presented declined my release on those terms and I gave my reasons for so doing. I propose to restate here so much of them as may be necessary.

My objections were that the oath could not rightfully be required of me; that to take it as a condition of release would be to make an invidious distinction between me and all other citizens not required to take it; it would make me a target for the shafts of the maliciously disposed, and it would in fact be making me my own calumniator, acknowledging the necessity of an oath to restrain me from committing treason. I should be tongue-tied under the grossest imputations, countenanced alike by the action of the Department and my acquiescence in its propriety. It is easy for you to perceive how impassable are such obstacles to my taking the oath as a condition of release. The taking the oath would render my residence in Philadelphia an impossibility. I need not enlarge nor add that a release upon indefinite parole or general parole would equally render my stay in Philadelphia intolerable.

I have, however, desired a special parole to go to Washington to attend to an important and pressing matter of business, and I shall feel much disappointed if I do not receive it. I further stated incidentally that the oath seemed to require a blind support of the measures of the Administration. Governor Seward in his letter to you authorizing my release upon an oath inclosed in it explains that it does not require the support of the individual members of the executive, and seems to suppose that this explanation will suffice to remove the objections which caused me to decline a release when first offered with condition of an oath. The explanation which I have above given will I hope prove satisfactory, and when connected with the fact of my confinement of more than five months assure my free and unconditional release.

I am, sir, with respect, most truly, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington. February 17, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: Your letter of the 14th instant and its inclosure, informing this Department that Mr. William H. Winder declined to comply with the terms upon which his release was granted has been duly received.

I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

FORT WARREN, February 22, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have been held in confinement now more than five months in Forts Lafayette, N. Y., and Warren, Mass., without process or form of law, having been arrested in Philadelphia, my residence, from whence by order of Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, by telegraphic dispatch I was transferred to those distant points. Immediately upon my arrest in my absence my office, desks, chests, &c., were broken open and all my papers, a collection of more than thirty years, ransacked on pretense of hunting treasonable matter during the few months previous; the sanctity of private correspondence was violated and malignantly calumniated by the publication of pretended contents of letters thus seized upon. Other parties were also grievously slandered by statement of falsely alleged contents and by allegations of the discovery of correspondence which never existed, and I debarred of all opportunity to contradict such infamous publications. My letter books, writings and letters are still in the possession of public officials and my correspondence at Philadelphia since that time intercepted. Even pictures twenty years old found in my possession were misrepresented to slander me.

I am to this hour in ignorance of the causes of my arrest and detention. Governor Seward, Secretary of State, caused an order to be read to the prisoners in which he stated that the employment of paid counsel would only have the effect of prejudicing the case of such parties, would be deemed an offense and would occasion procrastination of imprisonment. His order required all applications to be addressed directly to him or through unpaid parties. In accordance with this order, never having employed counsel, on the 5th of December last I addressed a letter to the Secretary of State in which referring to his order as giving assurance that he would read and reply to our communications I proceeded to state my long confinement, my ignorance of the causes therefor and requesting permission to go to Washington for an investigation of my case or for a statement of the charges against me if any, the full testimony and the names of my accusers or else unconditional discharge. To this hour no reply has been received.

My release was tendered to me on condition of taking the oath of allegiance, &c. I declined to accept release upon conditions. A second time release was offered upon condition of taking the [modified] oath,* which offer was accompanied by a letter of explanation from Governor Seward intended to remove supposed objections in stating that a support of the Constitution did not include support of the individual members of the executive. My objection being radical applied to all tests or conditions which might be supposed to admit that I had done anything inconsistent with the character of a true American, and I of course declined this second offer of release. In common with my fellow members of the company to which I am attached I took an oath to support the Constitution and I am still under its full responsibility. I am ready in common with all others on every proper and lawful occasion to take it a thousand times, but as a discriminating test imputing past and future intended wrong it is not possible for me thus voluntarily to calumniate myself. The interior of Fort Warren with the mens conscia recti is preferable to a release purchased at the expense of character. So far from being willing thus to calumniate myself I have challenged and I do now challenge a comparison of record of fidelity to the Constitution and its Union with all concerned in my arrest and detention, confident that the result will furnish none of them with cause for self-gratulation.

In this state of the case the Secretary of War announces† that the President will grant amnesty for past offenses and take parole against future offense of all persons "except spies in the service of the insurgents or others whose release at the present moment may be deemed incompatible with the public safety." Thus I should be turned loose stained with an unnamed guilt of the past; supposed to be covered by the amnesty and the equally nameless guilt of the future averted by the parole, allowing a censorious world to impute any wrong it may please as being covered by the cloaks of amnesty and parole and to which imputation my acceptance of them would give quasi admission and certainly would leave upon me the color of guilt and without power or opportunity to vindicate myself against such imputation. The spies and they whose liberation is incompatible with public safety may probably have opportunity for perfect self-vindication while those favored with amnesty and parole will stand forever shaded by those clouds. It would seem to be an exquisite aggravation of the original wrong which the order of release admits and purports to repair or remedy. The wrong done was illegal incarceration without charge. The remedy now proposed is to confess that wrong was done, and to receive amnesty therefor to acknowledge intention of future wrong and then give a parole to forego such intention. The condition in a Northern State of a man accepting amnesty and giving parole would be a confession of guilt bearing in its train intolerable consequences.

* See Seward to Dimick, February 10, 1862.

For these reasons and many others which naturally present themselves and would be stated if necessary, the undersigned trusts that the Secretary of War will find it consistent with his duty to reinstate the undersigned at home to his original position before arrest. If there be any charge of crime against me I am ready to meet it. If there be none I trust the Secretary will see that to impose conditions on me as the price of my liberation is to aggravate the wrong which will then stand confessed. It might be simple justice alike to the Administration as to prisoners to have the informers who mislead the Departments exposed to view and to just punishment.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

FORT WARREN, March 15, 1862.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

SIR: It was by order from you through a telegraphic dispatch that I was taken from Philadelphia to Fort Lafayette and placed in confinement there from whence I was transferred to this fort in which I am confined, still ignorant of the cause which induced you to issue that order.

The object of my writing this letter is to obtain from you information at whose instance and upon what representations you were influenced to the issue of the order for my confinement in Lafayette. I believe I do not err in supposing the order could not have been of your own motion but was upon statement of party or parties who ought not and whom you supposed would not willingly mislead you. And I trust that my reliance on your readiness to afford me the information will not prove delusive. I feel myself entitled to this consideration at your hands and I am unwilling to doubt your inclination to accord it to me.

I am, sir, very truly, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

WASHINGTON, March 21, 1862.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, U. S. Army.

GENERAL: I beg very respectfully to submit to the Commission charged with the subject the inclosed statement* by my brother, William

* See Winder to Secretary of War, February 22, 1862.

H. Winder, now confined in Fort Warren. I do not think it possible for any fair-minded man to deny that it is unjust to impose conditions of release upon a man who avows his adherence to the Constitution and Union, against whom no charge has been made in a responsible form, much less proved. I say nothing of the gross injustice of his arrest in the first instance. That is past, and is a subject with which you have not to deal; but I do confidently submit it to your sense of justice whether the wrong should be longer continued. If there be any charge against him it is but fair that he should know it and his accuser, and have an opportunity to rebut it, and if not sustained he should and will doubtless receive your judgment that he be unconditionally released.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CH. H. WINDER.

LOCHIEL, March 24, 1862.

W. H. WINDER, Esq.

SIR: You surprise me by saying in your letter of 15th instant received to-day that it was by my order you were taken from Philadelphia to Fort Lafayette and placed in confinement, &c. I knew nothing of your arrest* until I saw the fact stated in the newspapers, and being at the time closely engaged in the discharge of my official duties neglected to inquire into the cause, presuming, however, that it was done by order of the State Department which had charge of such cases as I supposed yours to be.

Very respectfully,

SIMON CAMERON.

FORT WARREN, March 27, 1862.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

SIR: I learn from my brother in Washington that in an interview with General Dix the general told him that he and Judge Pierrepont would come to Fort Warren personally to hear what each prisoner had to say. It is material to me to know upon whose order you received me at Lafayette. I was told at the time I was taken charge of to be carried to Fort Lafayette that it was upon an order from General Cameron, which I presumed to be so and did not look at it. In making the statement I should wish that no mistake be made and therefore apply to you for the information as to whose order it was upon which you received me. I suppose it is needless for me to say that it is not intended to base any offensive action toward you in the matter now or at any time but is desired to enable me intelligently and with absolute correctness to make my statements.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

W. H. WINDER.

[Indorsement.]

I beg you [will] furnish me with the information desired.

Colonel First Artillery, Commanding.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Lochiel, near Harrisburg.

DEAR SIR: Since writing you to-day* I have received the following copy of dispatch from Philadelphia:

GEORGE A. COFFEY, District Attorney:

I have telegraphed Marshal Millward to arrest William H. Winder and transfer him to Fort Lafayette.

WASHINGTON, September 11, 1861.

SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

I have supposed this might call to your mind the communication of Mr. Coffey to which apparently it is a reply.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

LOCHIEL, April 2, 1862.

MY DEAR SIR: The letter inclosed you will see is in reply to my answer to his first one, dated ten or twelve days earlier. I do not think any orders for the arrest of Winder were signed by me. I have known him for many years, and while I knew he always sympathized with the South did not believe he would commit any act against the Government. I still have the same opinion of him, and if there is no evidence against him in your Department I trust he will not be held upon the belief that he was imprisoned on my order.

Very respectfully,

SIMON CAMERON.

FORT WARREN, March 31, 1862.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Lochiel, near Harrisburg.

SIR: I have to thank you for your prompt reply to my request for information as to the causes which induced you to issue an order for my transfer to Fort Lafayette. Your reply of the 24th stating your surprise that I had been sent there by your order and that you knew nothing of my arrest until you saw it in the paper and presumed it had been done by the order of the State Department confirms me in my supposition that your name had been used either without your knowledge or inadvertently signed to a paper without heeding its contents. It was obtained somehow through the district attorney. I give you copy of the document on which Colonel Burke took charge of me and placed me in Fort Lafayette:

PHILADELPHIA, September 13, 1861.

FORT WARREN, April 5, 1862.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Lochiel, near Harrisburg.

SIR: I have been much gratified by the receipt of your letter of April 2, in which you advise me of your having sent my (first) letter of March 31 to the Secretary of State with a request for my release in case I have been held by your direction. This is satisfactory and is all the case requires at your hands, unless indeed a disregard of your request should render it proper for your own vindication against an act which you repudiate but the responsibility of which is placed on your name by the record.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WINDER.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of a letter received by the Secretary of State from George A. Coffey, esq., U. It is believed that some of the papers relating to the case of Winder are in the possession of the commissioners appointed last spring by the War Department to examine the cases of political prisoners. of his were transmitted to you at Washington by your order. Winder has been unconditionally released from summary arrest and confinement. I believe that upon his return to Philadelphia he will resume his efforts to embarrass the Government or to seek personal vengeance. The papers in your possession are sufficient to justify his legal prosecution in the ordinary form for misprision of treason. I believe that it would be proper so to prosecute him and therefore I desire that you will transmit to me all papers and documents in your possession which were sent to you at the time of his arrest. If he so acts as to compel or warrant a prosecution the papers which I am writing about will not only make a legal case and put him entirely on the defensive but will superabundantly explain and vindicate the whole action of the Government in this case.

FRANKFORT, KY., September 10, 1861.

The undersigned Union members of the Kentucky legislature respectfully recommend to the favorable consideration of the military authorities, commanding at Saint Louis and Cairo, the application of John W. Pruett for the release of his brother, James L. Pruett, who we learn is in custody at Cairo, and we do so the more readily on account of his (J. W. Pruett's) valuable services in the Union cause. He has been energetic and efficient in support of the Government, and labored with untiring vigilance to defeat treason and rebellion in Kentucky. Mr. Pruett is a loyal citizen, and a firm friend of the Union and the Government, and his services cannot be too highly valued. We hope the authorities may see proper to yield to his application on behalf of his only brother.

Respectfully,

JOHN F. FISK,
Speaker of the Senate.
RICHARD A. BUCKNER,
Speaker of the House.

[AND 100 OTHER MEMBERS AND OFFICERS.]

FRANKFORT, KY., September 12, 1861.

The gentlemen whose names are signed to the foregoing petition (except the doorkeepers of the two houses) are members of the senate and house of representatives of the general assembly of Kentucky. I am well acquainted with Mr. John W. Pruett, the bearer hereof. He is a very respectable gentleman and as loyal to the cause of the Union as any man within its limits. He has been very active in ferreting out the movements of the disunionists and communicating the information he has received to me. I hope the object of Mr. Pruett's visit to Cairo may be accomplished.

JAMES HARLAN,
U. S. Attorney, Kentucky District.

We concur in the foregoing.

J. H. JOHNSON,
Secretary of the Senate.
J. RUSSELL HAWKINS,
Assistant Secretary of the Senate.
AL. T. SAMUELS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
JAMES B. LYNE,
Assistant Clerk of the House of Representatives.

FRANKFORT, KY., September 12, 1861.

General FRÉMONT.

DEAR SIR: I have taken the liberty of addressing you a line in relation to the brother of Mr. Pruett, the sergeant-at-arms of the senate of Kentucky. Mr. Pruett is one of the most active, faithful Union men in Kentucky, and was a few days ago elected sergeant-at-arms of the senate by the unanimous vote of every Union senator. He has the sympathy of every Union member of the Kentucky legislature in the affliction brought upon him by the unfortunate condition in which his brother is placed in consequence of some imprudent violation of the law, and is suffering punishment, I understand, by being worked in the trenches surrounding the city of Saint Louis. I would respectfully recommend to your excellency for the sake of his brother, if consistent with propriety, his release and pardon.

In complying with this request you will confer a special favor upon your obedient servant,

J. L. SMEDLEY,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of Kentucky.

FRANKFORT, September 12, 1861.

Maj. Gen. J. C. FRÉMONT.

DEAR SIR: This will introduce to you Mr. J. W. Pruett, of Frankfort. Mr. Pruett is the sergeant-at-arms of the senate of Kentucky. I have become well acquainted with him during four terms of the last and one of this legislature and know him to be a Union man of the most loyal and devoted stamp.

He visits Saint Louis on business of importance, and any service that you can render him will be gratefully received by yours, very truly,

RICHARD T. JACOB.

FRANKFORT, KY., September 12, 1861.

Major-General FRÉMONT, [Saint Louis].

DEAR SIR: This will introduce to you Mr. J. W. Pruett, of this city, one of our most reliable and devoted Union men and one who has rendered valuable services. He is a gentleman of reliability and standing. He visits Saint Louis on account of his brother, J. L. Pruett, who is now in military confinement. Such favors as can be shown him consistent to the laws and Constitution and loyalty to the Union will be highly appreciated by the Union men of Kentucky. I have not yet been home to Mayfield, Ky., since I saw you, but learn that the occupation of Paducah has had a most happy effect there.

With great regard,

R. K. WILLIAMS.

Case of Messrs. Millner, Walker, Burton and Corlies.

J. K. Millner, of Danville, Va., was arrested by U. S. Marshal Murray in New York and by order of the Secretary of State dated September 10, 1861, was committed to Fort Lafayette. The charges against Millner as appear by the affidavits of the U. S. marshal, Robert Murray, and John S. Young, of New York, are as follows, viz: One Bethel Burton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the inventor of a patent rifle. Millner was a speculator with means, and having made the acquaintance of Burton the two went to Richmond, Va., and contracted with the rebel authorities to supply them with 40,000 to 50,000 of the rifles. They returned to New York, purchased the machinery and hired men to manufacture the guns, and when arrested were nearly ready to ship the machinery and men to Virginia. At the time of the arrest Millner was in the act of paying $15,000 to Burton for an interest in the gun and contract. About the 1st of November, 1861, Millner was transferred to Fort Warren and remained in custody February 15, 1862.

Robert R. Walker was arrested by John A. Kennedy, superintendent of New York police, September 11, 1861, and by order of the Secretary of State committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with being engaged in a scheme to furnish Burton's rifle to the rebels in insurrection against the United States. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 17, 1861, directing Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Walker on his taking the oath stipulating that he will neither enter the insurrectionary States nor correspond with persons residing therein nor do any act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 19, 1861.

Bethel Burton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was arrested by U. S. Marshal Murray, of New York, September 12, 1861, and by direction of the Secretary of State was committed to Fort Lafayette from whence he was transferred to Fort Warren about the 1st of November, 1861. The charges against Burton as appear by the affidavits of U. S. Marshal Murray and John S. Young, of New York, are as follows: That Burton was the inventor of a patent rifle and having made the acquaintance of one J. K. Millner, of Virginia, a speculator and a man of means, in pursuance of an arrangement made between them the two went to Richmond, Va., with a sample gun and contracted with the insurgent authorities there to supply them with from 40,000 to 50,000 of the rifles. They returned to New York, purchased machinery and hired men to manufacture the guns, and when arrested were nearly ready to ship the machinery and men to Virginia. The said Bethel Burton remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

The first information received at the Department of State in regard to this person [B. F. Corlies] was from U. S. Marshal Murray, of New York, September 12, 1861, stating that he had arrested Corlies on the charge of printing bank bills for the rebels, and that the evidence against him was conclusive. By order of the Secretary of State Corlies was committed to Fort Lafayette. September 17, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Corlies on his taking the oath of allegiance. The said B. F. Corlies was accordingly released September 18, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

On the 2d instant J. K. Millner gave our firm an order for 1,000 sheets of bills for the Bank of Pittsylvania, Chatham, Va., to be lithographed. The order was executed and the bills delivered on the 9th instant, for doing which B. F. Corlies, my partner, has been arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette. This order was received in the regular course of our business (amounting to $135) and executed without any intention or supposition on the part of our firm that we were violating the laws of the United States. We have never felt that our loyalty should be for a moment questioned, having rendered all the aid in our power since the rebellion first commenced to sustain the Government, I as a member of the Seventh Regiment New York State Militia going with the regiment to Washington when ordered there, and during my absence Mr. Corlies sent our porter, Theodore Craft, with the Eighth Regiment New York State Militia, our firm (with moderate means, having recently commenced business) paying his salary during the term of his enlistment for three months and hiring a person to fill his place while away.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 21, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I wish for you to give me written permission to send to Virginia for my wife as I am confined here and do not know when I will be able to get out, and in case that I get my release (which I am sure that I would get if I could see you) I would prefer remaining in New York until the war is over. I can employ a man to go to Virginia for my wife if you will give the permission and give me a chance to see the parties.

In regard to my money that the Government has libeled here in the city of New York it has been there ever since before the proclamation of the 15th of April issued by the President, and I have not taken it home for the reason that I believed it was safer here than at home and never had any idea of moving it until I got afraid of having it confiscated. And so far as the rebellion is concerned I have never taken any hand in it in any way, as I voted for Union men for my State convention, and when the ordinance of secession was voted on by the people I left home for the reason that I could not vote for it and was afraid to vote against it.

I have been here in this fort for some ten days, and if you would give me a chance I could prove to your entire satisfaction that I have neither committed treason nor intended any. If you will order a deputy marshal to convey me to Washington I will pay all of his expenses and my own and also his salary during the time, and I will guarantee if you will see me that you will order my release.

Hoping that you will comply with some of my request, I remain, yours, respectfully,

J. K. MILLNER,
Formerly of Danville, Va.

P. S.—You will please not publish anything in this letter.

SIR: I inclose herewith a letter from J. K. Millner, a prisoner now confined at Fort Lafayette, for you to examine and report upon the case. There are no papers here relating to it, and you will please apply to John A. Kennedy, the officer at whose instance the arrest was made.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 25, 1861.

J. KERNAN.

DEAR SIR: * * * Go see Mr. Develin, son-in-law of Stetson who keeps the Astor House, and say to him if he will get permission to visit me I want to see him, and that if he will get me out from here that if he wants one or two thousand to help him in the election coming he cannot only do me an act of justice but aid the party in the coming struggle. I suppose you are posted and as I can say nothing more in this I will intrust you with this little errand for me, believing you will favor me with your services. * * * We have all the papers and discuss the affairs of the nation the same as though I was in the Canadas. Of course we can not write anything of a private nature, which is the only thing deprived of. I would wish you to say to Mr. Develin that I will take the oath given to others, for as you know I was always a Union man and can take it with a good grace. Whether in or out I feel a man's spirit buoying me up to meet any fate that may befall me. Come down often as I will like to see you even through a glass. Our numbers are increasing very fast, twenty being added since Sunday as you will see by the papers.

Farewell, old friend, until next we meet.

BETHEL BURTON.

SIR: Herewith I transmit to you all the papers on file* in this Department relative to Robert R. Walker, a prisoner now confined at Fort Lafayette, and will thank you to take such additional testimony as may be offered and return them to me with your opinion as to the case.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, September 28, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: As requested by your letters of the 24th and 25th instant I have examined the cases of J. K. Millner and Bethel Burton and beg leave to submit the following report: On applying to John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police, as directed by you, I was referred to Robert Murray, marshal of the southern district, and John S. Young, sergeant of the New York detectives. I inclose herewith the affidavits of both.

The testimony shows that Millner and Bethel are particeps criminis, engaged in the same transaction; the testimony relates to both. I therefore make one report for both cases. The testimony is not taken in a manner nor is it of such a character as to be admissible in the case of Burton on a trial in a court of law. Nevertheless it is sufficient to establish to a moral certainty certain important leading facts and to satisfy any mind that testimony admissible by technical rules can be adduced sufficient to inculcate both the men.

I think it is shown that Burton was the inventor of a new implement of war in the character of a rifle; that Millner was a speculator with means; that they put their heads together, went to Richmond and contracted with the military authorities in command of the armies now making war against the Government to supply them with 40,000 or 50,000 of the rifles; and that they were arrested here in New York while making preparations for performing their contract. They had not only intended and agreed to do this thing but had taken steps and done overt acts, such as engaging machinery and hiring men to manufacture the guns. All this can be amply and clearly proved I do not doubt. I therefore do not doubt that J. K. Millner and Bethel Burton have committed an offense against the United States for which they can be legally held and punished.

I will add that in this case as in many others the mercenary and not the political motive preponderated in inducing the acts of the parties, and also that the men are men of talents, enterprise and courage, well calculated and very likely to pursue money-making schemes regardless of law and patriotism.

I do not notice the matter of the paper money because one good reason for holding the men prisoners is enough; and further because I think that the uttering of the money was probably to have occurred at the South as a private speculation, in no way calculated to injure the United States Government or to aid the States or people who are engaged in rebellion. Punishment for that crime ought probably to proceed from the States where the money should be put in circulation.

All of which is submitted.

Respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

* Statements of Walker's friends establishing his loyalty, which are omitted.

I inclose herewith the papers transmitted in the case of Bethel Burton and J. K. Millner and also affidavits of Robert Murray and John S. Young; specimen of Mr. Millner's currency.

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, ss:

Robert Murray being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: I am the marshal of the southern district of New York. I arrested J. K. Millner who is now in Fort Lafayette; he stated to me that he was a Virginian; that he came on here some three weeks previous; that he was introduced to Bethel Burton by a Mr. Walker (these men are now in Fort Lafayette). Walker stated to him (Millner) that Burton was the inventor of a patent rifle or gun which was a very effective weapon; that if they could introduce it into Virginia they would make a large sum of money. After negotiation Burton went down to Virginia with Millner to see what arrangements could be made with the leaders of the rebellion. They took one of the guns with them—taken apart and packed in their baggage. They saw at Richmond the Confederate Government with which they made a contract to make 40,000 of the rifles at a stated price.

Burton and Millner then returned to New York to get the machinery and workmen to manufacture the guns and ship them to Virginia by the way of Hatteras Inlet, the capture of which disconcerted their plans. So far this is the statement of Millner. When I arrested Millner he was in the act of paying $15,000 to Burton for an interest in the gun and contract. I arrested Millner on a warrant issued by a U. S. commissioner, a copy of which is appended. After the arrest of Millner on inquiry I found quite a number of men who had been hired by Millner and Burton to go on to Virginia. They were mechanics such as would be employed on such work.

With one of these men was found the paper money, a sample of which is annexed. Millner admitted that he had ordered this paper money made. Until this communication from Millner I had no knowledge of Bethel Burton. I placed two men to watch his house. He absented himself until the second night, when he was found at about 2 o'clock in the morning coming to his house and was arrested.

I caused Walker's place of business to be watched for some three weeks previous to the arrest, believing that he was shipping goods to the rebels. I am informed and believe that he shipped large quantities of goods ostensibly to Nassau, New Providence, Bermuda and Matamoras, Mexico, clearing the vessels for those ports, but really to North Carolina by way of Hatteras Inlet. I am informed and believe that a number of vessels were found inside of Hatteras Inlet when it was taken that he had cleared for the above ports; that his place of business was a rendezvous for Virginia and North Carolina men who were here on business. The vessels which he cleared as above were cleared under the British flag, but all of them were in fact American vessels.

To Mr. Walker's place of business I traced George Miles and J. G. Guthrey,* and they were coming from there when they were arrested. We found here $30,000 of Mr. Millner's money which he offered to the officers if they would let him go and take his paper money with him. He also offered it to me on same conditions.

ROBERT MURRAY.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, City of New York, ss:

John S. Young being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: J. K. Millner was arrested and brought to the detective office and remained there and at the marshal's office some two or three days before being sent to Fort Lafayette. I had repeated and detailed conversations with him. I had been long on his track and watching for the development of his schemes to arrest him, when he was arrested by the marshal.

Millner said that he had made an arrangement with Bethel Burton [and] Walker, now at Fort Lafayette, and a man by the name of Rooney, who fled the day Millner was arrested, by which he, Millner, Walker and Rooney were to buy a patent rifle of Bethel Burton and manufacture and sell it to the leaders of the rebellion or to the Confederate Government; that a written contract was made between them; that he (Millner) and Burton had been to Richmond by way of Fortress Monroe and Norfolk, where he and Burton had exhibited the rifle to the military authorities there, and made a contract to manufacture them in Richmond—40,000 [or] 50,000 of the rifles; that they had returned to New York to procure a part of the machinery and secure thirty mechanics to send to Richmond for the manufacture of the rifles. These were to be forwarded through Hatteras Inlet. They had made these arrangements and were about to send forward the machinery and men when the capture of Hatteras Inlet closed the communication of that route.

When he was arrested he was about paying Burton $15,000 on the purchase of the patent. He said we need not get affidavits and proofs against him; that his own statement would be sufficient to hold him. He said he was to be the medium of verbal communication between parties here and leaders at the South; that it would not do to write, and that was worth a plum in these times.

SIR: Yours containing inclosures relating to the case of Robert R. Walker, of Brooklyn, now confined at Fort Lafayette [received]. I have taken some pains to inquire for evidence calculated to establish the guilt of Mr. Walker. I inclose all there is to be found I think, and beg leave to make the following report:

Robert R. Walker was arrested for being engaged in a scheme to furnish Burton's rifle to the rebels in insurrection against the United States Government. The proof against him consisted in the statement (not under oath) of J. K. Millner, of Virginia, now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette. His statement was to the effect that Walker was a partner with himself and Burton. The particulars of the scheme as related by Millner are contained in the testimony which I had the honor to transmit in Millner's case. All other circumstances tend to establish the loyalty and innocence of Mr. Walker. I am satisfied that no proof exists sufficient to convict Mr. Walker, and I must add that I am of opinion that he is innocent.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. C. HAWLEY.

Inclosed herewith find the documents transmitted; also the affidavit of John S. Young.

[Inclosure.]

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, ss :

John S. Young being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: am sergeant in the Metropolitan police of New York and have command of the detective police force. James P. Barnett arrested Robert R. Walker, now confined in Fort Lafayette, and I had interviews with him on several occasions after he was arrested and before he was sent to Fort Lafayette. The evidence against him consisted in the statement of Millner, who is a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, and his statement alone. I examined the papers of Mr. Walker and his correspondence and found nothing to implicate him. On the contrary letters received by him from other parties indicated that his letters to them were sound and devoted to the cause of the Union. These letters were from persons in Kentucky, Ohio and Missouri and from Philadelphia. He has a son in the U. S. Army and another who is about to enter the army. I used a man who represented himself as a secessionist and on his way to Fort Lafayette to sound Mr. Walker. He had conversation with him to find out what were his real views. Mr. Walker's conversation was entirely faithful to the Government and against secession. Millner's statement was in effect that he was a partner in the purchase of the rifle of Burton. Mr. Walker stated freely that he had taken an interest in the purchase of the rifle and had tried to get the United States Government to adopt [it]; had offered it to Governor Morgan and the State Military Board and the Union Defense Committee, but failing to succeed in that he had dropped the matter and utterly denied having any connection with any scheme to dispose of it to the rebel authorities. He had been induced to take an interest in the rifle by one Rooney. When the arrest of Millner was published Rooney, who was living in style in Brooklyn, fled, but Mr. Walker remained at home and did not seek to evade the officers. Mr. Walker said it was hard for him to be shut up and have his business ruined but that it was so just and necessary that persons really guilty should be imprisoned that he would try and bear his arrest as well as he could. Mr. Burton in his statement entirely exculpates Mr. Walker from any part in any design to furnish the rifle to the rebels.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have been in confinement here for nearly a month upon orders from your Department. I am a native of Virginia who brought some money to New York in the latter part of last March solely for the purpose of speculating in stocks. I have not used one dollar for any other purpose than speculating in public stocks except the small amount necessary for my personal expenses. I know that charges to the contrary are made but they are not true and will not be sustained by any proof that will satisfy you upon full investigation. I desire of course my release in order that I may look after my property and be in condition to look after my family. May I not ask upon what conditions I can obtain my release? I am sure that my purposes and plans are and were altogether innocent in respect to the charges made against me. I have no friends of influence here to attend to my case and hence I trust you will allow me to [trouble] you by addressing you in person.

Yours, respectfully,

J. K. MILLNER.

76 WALL STREET, NEW YORK, October 7, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: Bethel Burton, esq., now confined at Fort Lafayette, has retained us as counsel with the view if a proper case is presented to obtain his discharge from the fort. In order that we may properly understand the grounds upon which he asks a discharge it is absolutely necessary that we should have a personal interview with him, and our own position is such that you would need no guaranty that the interview could not injure the Government. If upon investigation we are not fully satisfied that we can present a sufficient case to warrant us clearly to ask the Government for his discharge we shall not trouble it.

Will you oblige us by giving the required permission and believe us, truly, your obedient servants,

BEEBE, DEANE & DONOHUE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 17, 1861.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let R. R. Walker, a prisoner confined at Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

I, Robert R. Walker, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law; and also that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection.

New York, October 20, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * I see that Mr. R. R. Walker has been discharged from Fort Lafayette. Had I supposed that his detention was a matter of consideration I would have referred you to a competent witness to show the position he had taken before the discovery of his complicity in the transaction between Millner and the inventor of the breech-loading gun. I have in my possession a letter found among Walker's papers addressed to him by a loyal man in Cincinnati, evidently in reply to a disloyal letter from Walker. That man can be found and possibly the letter he replied to which would enable you to judge of his sincerity.

Truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: I respectfully ask for my release from confinement under which I have for six weeks suffered. I am a citizen of Danville, Va., and have been interested in banks and stocks. I am a Union man and voted in Virginia against my own uncle who was a secession candidate. I have never been engaged in intentional treasonable acts against the United States Government, and have never conveyed any political or military intelligence or intelligence of any other kind detrimental to the Government of the United States. I am willing to give the same parole as that given by Mr. Guthrey, of Virginia, who has been released.

Yours, respectfully,

J. K. MILLNER.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
*New York, November 1, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I deem it my duty to inform you that I have been importuned by a great many lawyers and others representing themselves to be friends of Mr. Millner, who was confined in Fort Lafayette for his secession proclivities and subsequently removed to Boston, to assist in procuring his release. On my visiting the fort on Sunday I learned from him that he had offered a fee of $2,000 to any party or parties who could effect his liberation. Hence the anxiety and importunity evinced by certain parties to aid him in his endeavors. As I have no doubt that you will be similarly importuned I deem it only right and proper that I should put you in possession of the object the parties have in view to procure his release. He is undoubtedly one of the shrewdest and cleverest men that has been arrested, and will leave no stone unturned to procure his liberation by any means he can resort to.

I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

ROBERT MURRAY,

SIR: I was arrested in Brooklyn on the 12th day of September last. I have never had any charge made against me up to the present time. I am therefore at a loss to know what the charge is, and respectfully ask that my case be brought to a trial—if guilty convicted; if not allow me to go to the support of my helpless family, who are now suffering for the necessities of life in consequence of me their only support [being] taken from them. My wife in all probability is just now in her confinement, without funds and surrounded by a small family.

As to my case I would refer you to Reverend Doctor Buddington, of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn; that is my social position and standing in the community amongst whom I dwell. Now as to cause of my imprisonment; so far as I can learn from the papers of New York and the two individuals imprisoned with me in Fort Lafayette they are true in part as follows: I employed Mr. Walker as agent on commission to sell for me a patent right for a gun in the United States, France, England and Belgium. He introduced me to several persons, amongst whom was Mr. Millner, the individual now imprisoned with me. Each and all including the latter utterly refused to purchase the right in said gun or any part, parcel or interest in said gun, which is all the cause I can assign for my arrest and imprisonment and Mr. Walker being allowed to go clear, the only one with whom I had any transactions in the case.

I am I think entitled to a hearing or a trial, but give me a fair chance for my life. I might with the same propriety be held responsible for being introduced to others for the purpose of disposing of my patent. I am not disposed to find fault with the Administration for being stringent in the discharge of their official duties, but I do feel as though there is done me a grievous wrong, and trust in you, sir, for the sake of my wife and children. That alone, sir, even though I was guilty will I trust for their sake induce you to show me an act of kindness never to be forgotten, as my wife and children are to me the only comfort on earth, for whom I live and exist. I pray you, sir, that you will restore me once more to them. Anything you require of me in my power I will comply with, and shall consider myself under everlasting obligations to you.

I have the honor to be, Your Excellency's most obedient, humble servant,

BETHEL BURTON.

413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, November 25, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: * * * A reconsideration of Mr. Millner's case does not change my conclusion. If you will refer to the papers on file in your Department relating to him you will find grounds I think for allowing him to remain where he is. * * *

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: The U. S. marshal of Boston came down here to-day and read your order* in regard to employing counsel to obtain releases, and if the prisoners have any requests to make to direct them to you in person. All I have to say in my case is that I am willing to take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States on condition of obtaining my release and also not to return to Virginia or any of the seceding States without permission from you. Having written to you some time ago and never hearing from you in regard to my case I thought that in the crowd of business necessarily upon you that you had overlooked my case, and I requested my friends outside to make an effort to obtain my release, which of course they have not done nor could not do until I made my request directly to you which is much the best plan.

Hoping you will give my case your early attention I remain, yours, respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Thinking that it was best to have my case presented to you by some person with whom you were acquainted I requested Mr. W. H. Ludlow* to see you in my behalf but from your letter the other day I think it best to apply to you in person in my own behalf. As I have been confined some three months now and Mr. Walker who was arrested under the same charge has been released I am compelled to think if you would investigate my case you would set me at liberty.

Hoping and believing that you will do me the justice to once more give me my liberty, I remain, yours, respectfully,

J. K. MILLNER.

P. S.—I have not paid Mr. Ludlow any money, nor neither will do so so long as it is against your orders.

FORT WARREN, Boston, December 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I was arrested in Brooklyn September 12. Since that time I have been closely confined. I have a family of three children. My wife has just been confined of a still-born baby caused from her troubles and anxiety of mind. I had some means when arrested which is now exhausted, and my further confinement here is the more harassing to me because productive of misery to them.

A few days ago an order† was read by the U. S. marshal of this place directing that application be made direct to the Department of State for an examination of their case. Being perfectly conscious of never having been engaged either directly or indirectly in any act inimical to the Federal Government I believe that an investigation of my case must result in my immediate discharge, and therefore respectfully request the Department to take action on the case, which I again respectfully insist must result in my relief from this distressing condition in which I and my family are now placed. Did I know the charge against me I might be able to defend myself from the odium thrown on my character. Until I hear from the Department I refrain from any further communication on the subject.

The early attention of the Department will much oblige, your obedient servant,

BETHEL BURTON.

P. S.—I am and always was a Union man. I am ready to comply with the requirements of the oath administered to other prisoners on condition of my release. I can prove my sincerity to the Union by the highest authority when called upon to do so.

and have been confined since that time in Forts Lafayette and Warren, the latter being my present place of confinement. Since my arrest suits have been instituted in the courts of New York against me amounting to over $30,000, which amount I have on deposit there and has been there since April 1, 1861. The object of the suits is the confiscation of my property. My object in writing to Your Excellency is that I may be allowed my liberty to attend the said suits upon such terms as you may designate. Although a native of Virginia my property is in New York. I have therefore no desire to go South. I only ask to be permitted to defend my property in suit. Evil-disposed persons, my enemies, are endeavoring to have my property confiscated whilst I am here, well knowing were I at liberty they could not accomplish their designs. I am willing to enter into any obligation the Government may require of me.

SIR: I am now nearly five months in prison. I have during that time made several appeals to you to the end that I might procure my release. I am confident that I have not violated any law at any time, and it is with this feeling that I now persist in urging upon you a speedy trial or a release from prison. Pecuniary circumstances press heavily on me; the toil of years is about to be torn from my grasp, and those whom I thought were my friends would now prefer keeping me here for selfish purposes.

I am willing to accept any terms to procure my release, an oath or a parole, although I think either uncalled for in my case.

Hoping you will consider this in a spirit of conciliation I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

BETHEL BURTON.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Bethel Burton, a citizen of Brooklyn, was a prisoner in Fort Warren. I have seen no notice of his release. If he is not released I think he should be. I have no doubt of his loyalty. His offense was the same as Senator Bright's, only the Senator acted from an impulse of political infidelity and Mr. Burton from the attractions of commercial speculation. He offered a patent rifle to the Confederate authorities. He has been well punished and I am satisfied that he may be released with safety. He has always been desirous to take the oath of allegiance. I have no means of knowing (except through casual reports in the papers) what prisoners are discharged and therefore this may be in behalf of one already discharged.

I think the time is approaching if it has not already come when numbers of political prisoners might with safety be released. I am so impressed that future trouble may grow out of these arrests and detentions that I intend to write you on the subject when I get time.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

Hon. Secretary SEWARD, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the time of your ordering my arrest and confinement in Fort Lafayette last September, 10th, by the U. S. marshal or authorities here all my books and papers were carried away from my place of business in this city and my residence in Brooklyn during my confinement of nearly two months, and subsequently most of my papers and books have been returned, but there is still retained from me my letter copying book and other papers for which I have made application both in person and by letter and orders by others to I believe all the authorities of the city in whose hands they would likely be, but without any success further than promising they would look them up. You will pardon my intrusion upon your valuable time in this my case, but the delay and inconvenience to me by being kept out of papers are of a serious character in my efforts to recover my business from the shock it got in by my absence last fall. Again pardon me in asking your attention and direction to the proper parties here requesting their immediate attention.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

Case of Marcus Cicero Stanley.

Marcus C. Stanley was arrested in New York September 11, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. He was charged with inducing many [men] to desert from the Empire City Regiment, thereby breaking up that regiment; also with interfering with and preventing enlistments into the U. S. service. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 21, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Stanley on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released September 21, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, New York, September 10, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Inclosed you will please find affidavits of Andrew Sheehan and Charles Diamond in reference to Marcus Cicero Stanley. They speak for themselves. I await your reply in regard to what action to take in the matter.

Yours, respectfully,

ROBERT MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
City and County of New York, ss:

Andrew Sheehan, of the city of New York, being duly sworn says that in April and May last deponent raised a regiment of troops for the Federal Government consisting of between 800 and 900 men which were inspected by the Military Board, and that such regiment was known by the name of the Empire City Regiment; that this deponent was elected colonel of the regiment; that after said regiment was raised and inspected by order of the State Military Board and ready to be mustered into the service one Marcus Cicero Stanley, a native of North Carolina, who was well and intimately acquainted with many of the men whom deponent had enlisted, commenced a series of acts for the purpose of breaking up said regiment; that said Stanley met deponent in the city of New York on or about the 25th day of May last and told deponent that he should not take his men South to fight against the Confederate troops; that he (Stanley) had the power to break up the regiment, and that he would do so if it cost him all the money he had or could raise; that soon after this said Stanley commenced tampering with deponent's men, and deponent's men commenced leaving the regiment; that said Stanley distributed money amongst the men to induce them to desert and that by his acts he effectually broke up the regiment and prevented deponent from continuing the organization. And this deponent further says that but for the acts of the said Stanley deponent verily believes the said regiment would at this day be in the service of the United States. And this deponent verily believes that said Stanley sympathizes with the Southern Confederacy; that deponent's belief is founded on the acts of said Stanley and his repeated declarations as to the ultimate success of the war. Wherefore the deponent prays that said Stanley may be arrested and held to answer.

Charles Diamond being duly sworn says that he is now a lieutenant in the Thirty-second Regiment, Company K, of the U. S. Volunteers, which company is now stationed at Alexandria, Va.; that deponent is now detailed to the city of New York for the purpose of recruiting for the said regiment; that deponent's recruiting station is at No. 454 Broadway; that since deponent has been trying to obtain recruits he has been interfered with by one Marcus Cicero Stanley; that said Stanley has been frequently hanging around deponent's recruiting station and when men have applied he has as deponent has reason to believe and does believe prevented them from enlisting; that said Stanley has had men constantly around deponent's station, and that these men take off the men who make application and prevent by some means their enlisting; that deponent has frequently seen said Stanley in company and in communication with the men who deponent knows interfere with his enlisting recruits; that the acts of said Stanley deponent verily believes have prevented his enlistments; that deponent believes but for said Stanley's acts he could have enlisted 100 men, whereas he has enlisted but five men in the city of New York; that in some instances the men would sign their names and immediately on going out would be taken up by the men employed by said Stanley and that they would never return; that deponent verily believes said Stanley is engaged in preventing men from enlisting.

DEAR SIR: Allow me to say privately that I think the arrest of M. C. Stanley is a mistake unless you have put him there to obtain information from the inmates. If he is there for that purpose all right; he is just the man for the business. I know of none who could exceed him in tact and general capacity. What he did in breaking up the Empire Regiment he deserves the thanks of the community for, and so far as I have been able to discover his course has been eminently patriotic.

CENTRAL DEPARTMENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 18, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 16th instant with inclosures relating to the case of M. C. Stanley is received. The papers inclosed that relate to Stanley's case are an affidavit of Charles Diamond and one of Andrew Sheehan. I notice other papers among the inclosures which relate to the case of John K. Millner.† They do not seem to be connected with the question of Stanley's guilt or innocence.

If it should be proved that Stanley had succeeded in breaking up the regiment which was to have been commanded by Andrew Sheehan, as is charged in his affidavit, he might nevertheless be loyal to the United States Government. Large numbers of the best citizens of New York were indisposed to have a regiment go forward organized, composed and commanded as that was. I believe the State Military Board were of the same way of thinking. The affidavit of Charles Diamond is more to the point, but the facts alleged therein when separated from the inferences and opinions are not inconsistent with the innocence of Mr. Stanley. Large numbers of recruiting stations have been opened in this city. Great competition has existed between them. Numbers of most earnest patriots have been busy in securing enlistments into the particular corps in the success of which they have felt interested, nor have they hesitated to get men away from each other when opportunity offered. But such acts are not treasonable; they result from a possible excess of loyal zeal.

* Omitted; they were affidavits and statements of prominent citizens of New York establishing the loyalty of Stanley.

Upon the testimony submitted by you the arrest of Stanley would be justified although it would not be clearly sufficient to convict him of any crime, and looking upon that testimony alone I should be of opinion that he should be held for the present. Considering, however, that your object is simply to arrive at a just conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of Mr. Stanley I venture to transmit a mass of testimony on behalf of Mr. Stanley which has been volunteered by the several persons whose affidavits are inclosed. These affidavits show that Mr. Stanley has openly carried the American flag, talked strongly for the Government and against rebellion, been active in securing enlistments for the Federal Army, paid numerous and considerable sums of money to aid the raising of loyal troops, been at the cost of a stand of colors to be presented to a regiment of volunteers, expressed the opinion that the United States would put down the rebellion in a short time and advised investments in the Federal loan. These facts are quite inconsistent with treasonable practices or even sympathy with rebellion; they are earmarks of loyalty. They could not have been pretenses to cover up such trifling practices as are charged in the affidavits against him.

If therefore you will allow me to consider all the testimony contained in all the affidavits against and on behalf of Mr. Stanley I should decide without hesitation that Marcus C. Stanley is a loyal man, earnestly devoted to and desiring the success of the United States Government in its contest with rebellion and not guilty of the charges contained in the affidavits of Andrew Sheehan and Charles Diamond.

I remain, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

I herewith inclose the documents forwarded* me and also affidavits on behalf of Mr. Stanley made by J. H. Godwin, Alexander Ward, William Ryan, Francis Clark, John Clancy, Jacob L. Dodge, Henry L. Jewell and John A. Duff.†

Case of James W. Wall.

Wall was arrested by order of the Secretary of War at Burlington, N. J., by the U. S. marshal of that State and committed to Fort Lafayette September 11, 1861. From the papers on file in the Department of State it appears that Wall was a contributor to the columns of the

New York News, and an active supporter of the obnoxious and dangerous principles disseminated by that sheet previous to the withdrawal from it by the Government of the privilege of mail facilities and its subsequent suppression. He was also represented to have been a brawling, noisy secessionist and as having exulted over the defeat of the U. S. troops at the battle of Bull Run. September 21, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Wall on his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States. He was accordingly released September 24, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

STEAM-BOAT, Wednesday, September 11, 1861.

HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War:

Suddenly this afternoon I was torn from my home, from a sick wife and frantic children by an order signed by yourself. What is my offense? I have been in favor of peace and have written in its favor, but I defy the world to lay their finger upon a single act that can by the most violent construction be tortured into treason. I have never by act, word or deed held communication with the enemy south of the Potomac. I come of Revolutionary blood on both sides and would scorn to do an act that would compromise or cast dishonor on such a birthright. I long for peace and a cessation of this terrible strife. If such be a crime then am I a criminal. In the present condition of my health, laboring under an internal disorder, confinement for but a few weeks will aggravate it and may be fatal in its results. I have left my wife in a frantic condition and my business arrangements are such that in my absence I shall be subjected to serious loss. Some malicious informer has evidently got your ear. You are welcome to make search among my papers. I never wrote a letter south of the Potomac and during the troubles of the country have never had any communication with those in arms against the Government. I did accidentally see a letter in the hands of a friend from an old college mate who was an officer at Manassas, giving an account of the strength of the fortifications and of which information I availed myself by dropping a line to General Scott anonymously warning him of an advance of the army before he was able to cope with such strength. I also used that information in an article in the Daily News warning the Government. I am more loyal to-day to the Government than many a loud-mouthed pretender whose loyalty can only be measured by his interests. I know that you do not desire to do a flagrant act of injustice. You do not desire to persecute an innocent man and destroy the happiness of the most loving family on earth. I shall await your reply.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES W. WALL.

SIR: I have just received a letter from my wife informing me that Captain Burling had charged me with attempting to prevent his men from enlisting and that this was the cause of my arrest. I pronounce the whole charge an infamous fabrication. I never interfered with the system of recruiting and never had a conversation with any of his company. In fact I do not think I am acquainted with a single private in his company. I aided some of the three months' volunteers with money and conveniences such as India-rubber blankets, pistols and bowie-knives. I have inclosed a letter to Captain Burling which I desire you to read and then forward to him.

If this information be correct I shall hold you personally responsible for the act. I will follow you like a sleuthhound, and your blood or mine shall expiate this offense. I pronounce the whole charge a base, contemptible lie, invented for malicious purposes and utterly unworthy your character as an officer or a gentleman. You have never received anything save in the way of kindness from me. I trust this information will prove incorrect. A letter will reach me directed Fort Lafayette, care of Colonel Burke.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: On Wednesday last Col. James W. Wall, of Burlington (who is my brother-in-law), was arrested in his own house by the marshal of this State in virtue of an order from the War Department, and after being carried into the State of New York was imprisoned in Fort Lafayette where he now remains. I am informed by Colonel Wall that he has not been made acquainted in any way with the cause of his arrest, and at his instance and in his behalf I would respectfully request to be informed by the Department what accusations have been made against him and upon what grounds such unusual proceedings have been instituted. If Mr. Wall can be apprised of the charges which have been preferred he may be able at once to satisfy the Government that they are without foundation and that he has committed no offense against the laws of his country. It is the privilege of every citizen "to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him," and placing myself and the request I make upon this high constitutional right I feel satisfied that the application will be promptly granted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BURLINGTON, September 20, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON:

You have done the loyal Union people of this [city] a great service by sending away that brawling, noisy secessionist James W. Wall. He was a perfect pest to the Union men, and they hope you will confine him until after the war is over. He would read his secession paper at all the corners. He would rush to New York train, get 100 of New York News, commence reading and commenting. He made several converts, and there are four or five almost as bad as he is and ought to be arrested. He exulted in our defeat at Bull Run. The marshal knows the four or five alluded to. He was advised to keep quiet. He said the d—d Black Republicans dare not arrest him. His wife is just as bad as he is. She boasts that she will get him home soon. Inquire about Dr. Franklin Gerant. He is worse than Jim Wall if possible. Do look after these folks. They talk of Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet as if they were robbers. Jersey is infested with a nest of these vile traitors. They prevent our young men from entering the service of the United States. We rely on you and the Cabinet. There is a report that Mrs. Wall has gone to the fort to bring her husband home. Can it be possible?

FORT LAFAYETTE, Sunday Evening, [September 22, 1861].

His Excellency the GOVERNOR OF NEW JERSEY.

SIR: I have now been a close prisoner in this fort for nearly two weeks. I was arrested without cause being shown and without any constitutional warrant. I was carried a prisoner out of the State of New Jersey and through a portion of the State of New York by the U. S. marshal for the district of New Jersey. I have endeavored in vain to learn from Washington the cause of my arrest. I am denied my rights as a citizen of the United States. I now ask if I have any rights as a citizen of the State of New Jersey under her constitution, or if not at what time my rights ceased and by virtue of what provision in that constitution? You as the executive of the State of New Jersey are bound by the solemn oath taken at your inauguration to see that the rights of no citizen of New Jersey shall be trampled on guaranteed by that State's constitution. My poor family have been tortured, my business interfered with and myself subjected to grosser indignities than the meanest and lowest criminal. I ask for no favor. I simply demand my rights as an American citizen and a citizen of the State of New Jersey. My demand for the first has been treated with silent contempt. I now appeal to you and shall await your answer.

I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. WALL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 23, 1861.

His Excellency CHARLES S. OLDEN,

Governor of New Jersey, Trenton, N. J.

SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant is as follows:

I beg to present the following to your serious consideration. Some persons have already been arrested in this State by the U. S. marshals on warrants from the Departments at Washington and imprisoned in some of the forts in New York Harbor. It is reported that a similar warrant is now in the hands of a deputy marshal for the arrest of another person. In one case I have been assured by persons of entire credibility that the individual against whom a warrant has been issued has been quite active in support of the military operations of the Government and has aided very considerably the raising of volunteers. They do not believe he has been guilty of any treasonable conduct. They declare that he is a friend of the Government and opposed to the rebellion and a man of considerable respectability and influence. They allege that his arrest will be ascribed to the misrepresentations of personal political enemies and that it will alarm the community and prejudice the Government. In other cases the friends of the prisoners assert positively that they have been guilty of no act against the Government and that if they were permitted to know only why they have been arrested they could satisfy the Government of their innocence.

I wish to represent to you and the Government the very great importance of enabling those who desire to sustain the public authorities to refute these allegations. To that end I suggest that the charges upon which persons are arrested and imprisoned should be communicated to them and made public so that it may be known that they are arrested for good cause, for some actual wrong-doing, and thus the Government may be justified. If it is deemed incompatible with the public interests at this time to state particularly the specific act for which the prisoner has been arrested it may be stated in general terms so that the public may know that it is for actual crime and not on vague suspicion or mere rumor. The statements so positively made by the friends of the prisoners that they are entirely innocent will and do have their effect on the community. Thinking men among us feel uneasy lest the confidence of the people in the Government should be impaired and will be glad to have it in their power to justify these arrests. For every arrest made for good cause you may be assured the people of New Jersey will justify and approve of the action of the Government.

It is to be regretted that you have not given me more precise information in regard to the cases of arrest in New Jersey which are represented to have been made upon insufficient grounds so that corrections might be applied in those cases if injustice should be found to have been done.

I appreciate the motive which prompts the suggestions which you have thus made with a view that the Government may justify itself for any arrests that it may find itself obliged to direct in counteracting and defeating treason which is already in arms in one-third of the States and which finds aiders and abettors and sympathizers I regret to say in every State in the Union.

The suggestions themselves will be submitted to the President and I have no doubt that they will receive from him the consideration due to their intrinsic importance and to the high respect which I am sure he entertains for your character as the enlightened and patriotic chief magistrate of one of the most loyal States in the Federal Union.

I am, your excellency's most obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR WARDROP: Permit me to thank you for your many kindnesses to my wife who, poor thing, is exceedingly grateful for it when so many pretended friends are turning their backs upon her. But the wheel will turn. I caught a glimpse of you I thought as the barge landed and waved my handkerchief at you, but the sentry ordered me in and I had to obey. I cannot learn why I am here as the Departments are sealed books to the poor prisoners here. No communications are answered. No consultations with counsel. You cannot meet your accusers face to face. In fact not a single constitutional right is permitted. A little humpbacked newsboy was brought in here yesterday whose alleged offense was selling the Daily News. We are expecting Governor Morehead from Kentucky in a day or two. There is a rumor prevailing here that we are to be removed to Fort Independence in Boston Harbor, but I do not know how it is nor do I care. I am fully prepared for any event.

I cannot write to you as I would wish, and must postpone what I have to say until we meet again which may be never; but remember that living or dying I am, yours, truly,

JAMES W. WALL.

P. S.—This letter, I am instructed to say, must not be published in any newspaper. Remember me kindly to Mrs. Hall.

CHARLES W. CHURCH,
Justice of the Peace.

BURLINGTON, October 5, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I was arrested by virtue of a warrant or rather an order issued from your Department and signed by yourself. I have not yet been able to learn the cause of my arrest. Will you be kind enough to state what the charges were if any and by whom preferred?

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES W. WALL.

BURLINGTON, October 21, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

SIR: How long will I be required to demand of your Department the charges preferred against me and by reason of which I was seized and taken to Fort Lafayette? I have a reputation as dear to me as your own and I can never rest under the imputation of being a disloyal citizen. The record if there be any in your Department has got to be wiped out or it shall be in the blood of those who maliciously placed it there. I will follow those scoundrels to the death when I have got upon their tracks. I take it the Government must have been satisfied of the emptiness of the charges or else I should not have been released. Why therefore hesitate to give them to me and the names of the authors?

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES W. WALL.

BURLINGTON, October 30, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been informed that the charges by reason of which the Government conceived they owed it to the country to lock me up for two weeks in a Government fortress are on file in your office. If so will you please inform me of their nature and character? I have reason to believe that they originated with two or three unprincipled perjured villains in this vicinity who had no other object to gratify than their own devilish malice.

Yours, &c.,

JAMES W. WALL.

BURLINGTON, *October 30, 1861.*HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Will you permit me to call your attention once again to my oft-repeated requests to be informed of the character and nature of the charges against me in your office, and by virtue of which the Department over which you preside felt itself bound to incarcerate me in a Government fortress for two weeks?

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. WALL.

BURLINGTON, Wednesday.

[Hon. WILLIAM B. REED.]

MY DEAR SIR: I have understood from a reliable source that it is the intention of a number of prominent Democrats to start a Democratic journal shortly in Philadelphia. If so I should like very much to be attached to the editorial corps. If you can aid me in this matter you will confer a favor. During the last three months of the existence of The Daily News, of New York, I was the principal contributor to its editorial columns. I think the dawn of the coming day is discernible, and the cry of "Watchman, what of the night," will soon cease. Permit me to congratulate you on the result in Pennsylvania. We shall show you the virtue of a good example in New Jersey in November.

Yours, very truly,

JAMES W. WALL.

BURLINGTON, *November 27, 1861.*HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: By your order I was torn ruthlessly from my family and confined in Fort Lafayette for two weeks, being subjected to the grossest indignities by the insolent foreign soldiery who are kept there to tyrannize over free-born Americans. I desire once more to know the nature of the charges against me and by virtue of which you presumed to issue such an order.

Respectfully,

JAMES W. WALL.

Case of Howard and Glenn, of the Baltimore Exchange Newspaper.

F. Key Howard,* editor of The Exchange newspaper at Baltimore, was arrested at that city on or about the 12th day of September, 1861, by order of the Secretary of War. Howard was publicly known

* Howard was arrested with the Baltimore members of the Maryland legislature by order of General McClellan. to be in deep sympathy with the rebels and his paper zealously advocated their cause. He was one of a family which had furnished several soldiers to the rebel cause. His arrest was a measure of military precaution to remove the incitement of his presence from the disorderly material which there was reason to apprehend might at any time burst into a flame of discord and insurrection. There was found in Howard's possession a large quantity of manuscripts--articles for his paper, correspondence, lists of names pledged to favor the recognition of the independence of the Confederate States* and drafts of proceedings for the legislature--mostly of decided secession character. Said Howard after his arrest was confined successively in Forts McHenry, Monroe, Lafayette and Warren, in which last he remained in custody February 15, 1862.

W. W. Glenn was arrested in Baltimore September 14, 1861, by order of Major-General Dix and committed to Fort McHenry. He was one of the editors and proprietors of The Baltimore Exchange, a paper bitterly opposed to the suppression of the rebellion by the United States Government. By an order from the Secretary of State dated September 30, 1861, General Dix was ordered to release Glenn on his taking the oath of allegiance. Glenn declined to take the oath but was willing to give his parole of honor not in any way to oppose the Government or assist its enemies. There are no papers in the Department of State showing when or on what terms Glenn was released.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

I am directed by Major-General McClellan to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant‡ and to say in reply that he highly approves of your action in arresting Glenn. HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., September 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the 19th instant you referred* to me the case of W. Wilkins Glenn, proprietor of the late Exchange newspaper in this city, with the letters* of Hon. M. Blair, Hon. Reverdy Johnson and H. W. Davis in favor of his release. Mr. Glenn's connection with the paper was purely financial. But after the arrest of Messrs. Wallis and Howard, the principal writers for its editorial column, two very bad articles appeared—one misrepresenting the arrests made by the Government and the other setting it at defiance—and I directed Mr. Glenn to be taken into custody as the only responsible person who could be reached. The Exchange has been discontinued and Mr. Glenn who is at Fort McHenry is sincere in his desire that it should not be revived as long as Messrs. Wallis and Howard are under arrest. A newspaper has taken its place without editorials but Mr. Glenn has no responsibility in regard to it. He has given repeated evidences of his earnest wish not to embarrass the Government in any way, and if released will I have no doubt occupy himself exclusively with the business of the large estate which is in his charge.

Under all the circumstances I answer the query in your note indorsed on the papers referred to me: That it is expedient to release him on condition of his taking the oath of allegiance excluding all reservations and conditions.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., October 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Mr. Glenn declines taking any oath but is willing to give his parole of honor not to do any act against the authority of the Government, the supremacy of the Constitution or the execution of the laws of the United States; and he is willing to pledge himself further not to connect himself with any anti-Administration press until he is in a position to publish his opinions freely and unreservedly. The inclosed letter explains his views fully and I inclose it for your consideration not perceiving that it needs any suggestion from me.

[Inclosure.]

FORT MCHENRY, October 3, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX.

DEAR SIR: Mrs. Glenn has this morning showed me a note addressed her by you in reference to some communication had by yourself with the authorities at Washington in reference to the terms upon which I would be released from confinement. Having already more than once taken an oath to bear allegiance to my State and to support the Constitution of the United States and never having violated this oath in the slightest particular I know of no ground upon which any other could be demanded of me. In no case do I hope I will ever be so wanting in that self-respect which I owe to myself as an American citizen as to take any oath whatever under compulsion. Much less would I consent to take any oath the strict and honest observance of which would oblige me to be false to myself by ignoring the one I had already sworn to. I have always been a conservative citizen.

I have never until lately mingled in the slightest degree in politics. I advocated a policy upon the election of Mr. Lincoln which if pursued would I believe have preserved the Union. I purchased a large interest in The Exchange for the purpose of advocating that policy. Even now I look upon separation as an evil and that the benefits to be derived from it can in no event compensate for the loss of the manifold advantages enjoyed under the Union. I never have hesitated to say this. At the same time I look upon the preservation of our constitutional rights, the only safeguard of liberty, either civil or religious, as the duty of every good citizen, in the performance of which even greater evils than separation should be cheerfully submitted to. In any action that I have ever taken I have never forgotten that Maryland was a State in the Union. I have never had the slightest communication with any of the seceded States or committed any overt act in opposition to the Government. Under these circumstances I cannot see why any oath should be asked of me.

The Daily Exchange has been stopped by force. Though disputing the right to commit the act I still submit to the superior power of the Government. I shall not edit The Exchange nor republish it nor contribute to any paper so long as the censorship of the press is exercised in Baltimore. Denying the right of the Government to hold me under arrest without trial I still acknowledge the fact which is patent that I am a prisoner. As such I should be glad to accept my release under conditional parole, pledging myself also not to connect myself with any anti-Administration newspaper until I am in a position to express my views freely and unrestrictedly.

Your obedient servant,

W. W. GLENN.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 14, 1861.

DEAR LYDIA: * * * I fear I am destined to undergo confinement some time longer for I will make no substantial compromise with the despotic power which has trampled my rights and the laws and constitution of my State under foot; neither will I accept the intervention in my behalf of any man in Maryland who can regard the tyranny to which I am subjected as other than a brutal, unjustifiable and infamous exercise of arbitrary power. Let it be your consolation as it is mine to know that I am suffering in behalf of constitutional liberty, and this country will yet regret the day when it undertook to intimidate or punish without the form of law the Southern men who have dared to vindicate Southern rights. There are those whom a banded world cannot coerce into submission, and some such spirits are in Fort Lafayette. * * *

COLONEL: On looking over the letters written by the prisoners confined at this post I found one from F. Key Howard, of Baltimore, in which speaking of the President of the United States he made use of the expression "vulgar dictator." I returned the letter to him with notice that if he was not more respectful in his letters it would be my duty to stop his correspondence.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, October 23, 1861.

Lieut. CHARLES O. WOOD, Commanding Fort Lafayette.

SIR: I have received yours of the 22d instant. You have devoted your entire time to the comfort of the prisoners at Fort Lafayette, and the Government under the circumstances has not been remiss in making them comfortable as far as practicable. I wish you again to call the attention of the prisoners to the rules made by me to regulate their correspondence which prohibit any invidious or personal remarks against the Government or its agents either civil or military. I may add that I am surprised that a member of the Howard family, which from the time of the Revolution to the commencement of our present troubles were gentlemanly and patriotic, should now by infringing these rules endeavor to embarrass his custodians from whom he has received every kindness consistent with public duty, and I wish to call Mr. Howard's attention to the indelicacy (to use the mildest term) of his course in applying unbecoming epithets to our Commander-in Chief and attempting to make yourself and me the instruments through which he would forward the letters containing them.

You will please inform the prisoners that a copy of this communication* and of your letter to which it is a reply will be forwarded to the Adjutant-General.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

* See Vol. I, this series, pp. 654-656, for Charles Howard to Secretary Cameron, October 23, filing charges against Burke and Wood "derogatory to their official positions as officers of the Army."

FORT LAFAYETTE, *October 23, 1861.

Lieutenant-Colonel BURKE.

SIR: Lieutenant Wood has communicated to me the contents of your note to him of this date. Permit me to say in reply to your allusions to the course I have thought proper to pursue that you mistake me much if you suppose as you seem to do that a mere desire to embarrass or annoy you or the officers under you has prompted me to write the letters which have been returned to me. The fact that little or nothing has been done to make me or my fellow-prisoners decently comfortable is self-evident to any one who chooses to inspect our quarters, and it was on that account that I chose to speak in terms of indignant denunciation of those who are responsible for the privations I suffer. If I made or sought to make the officers of the garrison the instruments to convey my complaints it was because I am denied any other alternative. The invidious allusions which you have deemed it necessary to make in regard to me I need not and do not propose now to discuss but you will permit me to remind you that if you have duties to discharge I have rights to vindicate. The only one of these which has not been absolutely destroyed is the right of free speech within the narrow bounds of my prison and this it is my duty and purpose to defend to the last. In the exercise of this poor privilege I wrote the letters which I knew would pass through your hands. As you have forwarded to the Adjutant-General the correspondence between Lieutenant Wood and yourself I beg that you will do me the justice to forward also this note.

I remain, your obedient servant.

F. K. HOWARD.

MEMORANDUM.

William W. Glenn.—Released December 2, 1861, by General Dix.
W. W. MORRIS,
Colonel Second Artillery, Commanding Post.

FORT WARREN, MASS., *March 3, 1862.*Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: For six months past I have been detained in close custody in one or other of the forts of the United States. I am I believe termed in the novel language of the day a "political prisoner" or a "prisoner of state." Until recently I have been held subject to the order of the Secretary of State but I now understand that I am specially in charge of the War Department. You therefore are responsible for my further detention. Under these circumstances it is proper I should place upon record in your office a statement of the wrongs done me and a demand for an instant and unconditional release.

On the night of the 12th of September, 1861, between 12 and 1 o'clock, I was made prisoner in my own house in Baltimore by a band of armed men, who although they showed no warrant or authority for their proceedings professed and I have no doubt truly to be acting under the orders of Mr. Seward, the Secretary of State. My house was searched from garret to cellar, my private papers ransacked and most of them as far as I can learn were carried off. I was kept for an hour or more a prisoner in my own parlor; armed men were stationed throughout my house and even at the door of my children's chamber while this search was proceeding. I will not comment further upon the indignities there put upon me. I was finally carried off to Fort McHenry, leaving my house in possession of the myrmidons who had invaded it and who refused to allow me to send for my wife's father or brother who were in the immediate neighborhood and to whom alone my family at such a moment could look for protection. I was detained at Fort McHenry during the following day and then transferred to Fortress Monroe. At this latter post I was confined a close prisoner with fourteen other gentlemen for over ten days, none of us having been suffered to leave for an instant the two casemates which were there assigned us. So rigid was our imprisonment that the very windows and doors through which we could look out on the parade ground were closed and padlocked. I was then carried with my companions to Fort Lafayette. At this latter post no provision whatever had been made for our reception and no decent accommodations were at any time provided. I slept in the dark, cold gun battery in which I was quartered upon a bag of straw until I procured bedding from New York, and during my whole stay I was compelled to pay for my meals as I could not have eaten the wretched rations offered me by the commanding officer. On the 1st of November last I was brought to this place on an overcrowded and filthy steamer which was insufficiently supplied even with the miserable pork and bread provided for our subsistence. But for the fact that I had brought my bedding with me I should have been forced like many of my companions to sleep for more than two weeks after my arrival here upon the floor and without a single blanket to cover me.

Such is a brief statement of the treatment to which I have been subjected. From the moment of my arrest down to this hour no charge of any sort has been preferred against me and none can be alleged or established, for I have violated no law whatever, State or Federal. I was as you may perhaps be aware one of the editors of The Daily Exchange, a morning journal published in Baltimore. In that paper I had expressed my political opinions without reserve. I had a year ago advocated the adoption of some compromise by Congress which should stay the then threatened rupture between the North and South. I had subsequently deprecated any attempt to coerce the South on the ground that it would only render the separation of the two sections inevitable and final. I asserted that war would leave the country in a worse condition than it found it, and as it would moreover entail upon us an enormous debt I felt it to be my duty to resist and I did resist its initiation. I was unable to see how the Union could be preserved if a large majority of the Southern people were bent upon a separation, and I said so. I was unable to comprehend how the President could from the injunction which commanded him to see that the laws were faithfully executed derive authority to supersede and violate the fundamental laws of the land, and I said so. I was equally unable to see how upon the theory of upholding the Constitution I was under an obligation to support those who were daily manifesting a contempt for all its provisions nor could I conceive how this Government had any existence whatever outside of the charter which established it. All these political opinions I had the absolute right to entertain and promulgate.

I choose to refer to them here because they constitute the offenses for which I am undergoing punishment. Notwithstanding the fact that many thousands of persons in the Northern States entertained and expressed these views within a twelvemonth the Administration determined that it was criminal in me to continue to hold and utter them and has therefore arbitrarily inflicted upon me the indignities and wrongs which I have mentioned. Although no direct offer has been made to me to release me upon any terms whatsoever I nevertheless presume that mine was one of the cases which either your proclamation of February 14 or your order of February 27 was intended to cover.

Now as I cannot accept a conditional discharge coupled with a gracious amnesty for offenses which it is assumed I have committed, and as I must equally refuse to appear at the bar of an irresponsible tribunal to justify my right to the ordinary privileges of a citizen of Maryland, it is due to myself at least that I should state the reasons which impel me to the course I shall pursue. To the principles which govern my action now I shall appeal when in the future I seek redress and enter upon my own vindication. It must be obvious to you, sir, that I cannot consistently with my own self-respect accept any such conditional release as is referred to in your proclamation or avail myself of such an amnesty. As I was despotically deprived of my freedom I can make no compromise to regain it. As I am punished merely for venturing to dissent from the theories and policy of the Administration I need and will ask no pardon. Nor even if I should accept the terms mentioned would I have any security that I would not immediately after my release be again subjected to precisely similar outrages to those which have already been inflicted on me. As the Administration has once determined that I by expressing my political sentiments was giving "aid and comfort to the enemies in hostility to the United States" I could only escape a rearrest by consenting to forego or conceal my opinions. This I will never for one instant do. I deem it to be my bounden duty to defend to the last every privilege and right to which as an American citizen I was born, and I shall do so until I am deprived of these by some known and fair process of law.

Nor can you fail readily to comprehend why I decline to submit myself to the jurisdiction of the strange tribunal which is organized under your order of February 27. I recognize no such judges of my guilt or innocence, of my loyalty or disloyalty under the Constitution or laws of this land. The courts, both State and Federal, are in the unobstructed exercise of their several functions in Maryland and they could long since have examined and disposed of any charge which might have been preferred against me. In them and in them only will

I meet any accusation, and while they are closed to my demand for justice I shall decline to defend myself before any star chamber commissioners whomsoever.

Such, sir, are the motives of my present action, and as the rights which I seek to uphold are not dependent upon the alleged necessities of the Administration or upon the fate of battles my convictions cannot be affected by the supposed urgencies of the one or the results of the other. I shall continue then to vindicate them as I best may, with the consciousness that after the delusions, the falsehoods and the passions of the hour shall have passed away my course will be approved by every honest man who has been educated in the knowledge of the privileges and duties of an American freeman. I have only now to demand at your hands a prompt release from the imprisonment to which I am so unjustly and arbitrarily subjected.

I remain, your obedient servant,

F. K. HOWARD.

Case of Thomas W. Hall, jr., and S. S. Mills, of The South Newspaper.

Thomas W. Hall, jr.,* of Baltimore, editor of The South, a disloyal newspaper of that city, was arrested by order of the Secretary of War on the night of the 12th or morning of the 13th of September, 1861, and immediately placed in confinement at Fort McHenry. He was afterward transferred successively to Fort Monroe, Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren. The arrest of this person was a military precautionary measure of great necessity for the preservation of the peace and maintenance of order in Maryland. His paper was openly and zealously advocating the cause of the insurrection and largely contributing to unsettle and excite the public mind. A mass of correspondence and manuscripts were found in Hall's possession in prose and poetry, much of it intended for The South newspaper and all of intensely disloyal character. The said Hall was detained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: Your letter of the 14th of February inclosing a number of the newspaper called The South was submitted to the Secretary of War. I now inclose an official copy of his order in the case sent by telegraph, the receipt of which you have already acknowledged. I am directed by the Secretary of War to say that he was not a little surprised you should have waited for specific orders under the circumstances stated in your letter. There is a strong desire among the Union men of the city to have the print suppressed, which desire is certainly most consistent with a proper view of the public safety if the leading editorial of the number forwarded by you is a fair sample of its original articles. Case of Henry May, a Member of Congress.

Henry May,† of Baltimore, was arrested by order of the Secretary of War at Baltimore September 13, 1861, and committed to Fort McHenry and from thence transferred successively to Forts Monroe and Lafayette. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 11, 1861, directing Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release May for the purpose of attending his brother's funeral on his giving his parole of honor to return to Fort Lafayette if required by the Secretary of State. A subsequent order was issued from the Department of State directing General Dix to release Mr. May from his parole dated December 2, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON, June 29, 1861.

Hon. EDWARD BATES.

DEAR SIR: I take leave to introduce to your acquaintance the Hon. Henry May, of Baltimore, whose public character is well known to you. He desires to make some communications to you which he deems to be important to the country. His character as a gentleman of chivalrous honor and enlightened patriotism entitles him to your confidence, and his representations will I feel certain receive due consideration from you.

I am, dear sir, yours, very truly and respectfully,

P. R. FENDALL.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

Washington, June 29, 1861.

Hon. H. May, of Baltimore and a Member of Congress elect, wishing on business of his own to visit Virginia and to return to take his seat in the Capitol next week, will be freely allowed to pass and repass our guards and sentinels, receiving from them and all our officers and men due respect and consideration.

By command of General Winfield Scott:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

* See p. 786 for Stanton's telegraphic order releasing all the Maryland political prisoners.

† May's arrest was contemporaneous with that of the mayor of Baltimore and several disloyal Baltimore members of the Maryland legislature. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 16, 1861.

Hon. HENRY MAY.

SIR: Inclosed you will find a copy of a resolution* referred to the Judiciary Committee by the House of Representatives, and which I am instructed to transmit to you. It will be the pleasure of the committee to take up the resolution for consideration as soon as the state of your health may allow.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

JNO. A. BINGHAM,
Acting Chairman of Judiciary Committee.

[Inclosure.]

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire whether Hon. Henry May, a Representative in Congress from the Fourth district of the State of Maryland, has not been found holding criminal intercourse and correspondence with persons in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States and to make report to the House as to what action should be taken in the premises; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation; and that said Hon. Henry May be notified of the passage of this resolution if practicable before action thereupon by the committee.

Extract from proceedings of the U. S. House of Representatives July 18, 1861.†

MR. HICKMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to make the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary to whom was referred the resolution of the House of July 15, 1861, directing them to inquire whether the Hon. Henry May, a Representative in Congress from the Fourth district of Maryland, has not been found holding criminal intercourse and correspondence with persons in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, reports:

That the gentleman moving the resolution of inquiry was called before the committee but declared himself ignorant of and unable to produce any evidence tending to prove any of the matters referred to in the resolution, but that they were grounded upon newspaper articles only. The committee having nothing before them to implicate Mr. May in holding criminal intercourse and correspondence with persons in armed rebellion against the Government therefore recommend no action in the case as necessary on the part of the House.

The committee further report that the investigation before them entirely relieves the President of the United States and Lieutenant-General Scott of any suspicion of a correspondence or attempted correspondence through Mr. May.

* * * * *

* The resolution was adopted by the House July 15, 1861.

† For the full proceedings of the House on July 18, 1861, concerning the charges against May, the attack by a Baltimore mob on the Federal troops, and Chief of Police Kane's connection therewith, see Congressional Globe for July 20, 1861, p. 195 et seq.

Mr. THOMAS, of Maryland. I ask my colleague [Mr. May] to let the Clerk read the residue of that newspaper article. [Cries of "That is right."]

The Clerk read the article [from The Baltimore Sun] as follows:

HENRY MAY'S MISSION INTO DIXIE.—WHAT HE IS TELLING THE CONFEDERATES.

The following interesting and important account of affairs in Baltimore is from a letter written at Richmond on the 4th of July, published in The Charleston Courier:

"The principal bubble upon the wave of Richmond life to-day or rather yesterday was the arrival of Hon. Henry May, of Baltimore, the successful competitor in the recent contest for Member of Congress there against Henry Winter Davis, the Black Republican candidate. The object of his visit has not transpired, but it is loudly whispered that it looks toward certain events in Maryland which may have an influence in determining the continuance of the war. The intelligence he brings from there is gloomy enough to make an American weep.

"According to his statements Baltimore is as effectually under the heel of the tyrant as if the head of every man was in iron fetters. Federal troops are encamped in its squares and patrol its streets, cannon are planted at corners, citizens are arrested for even breathing secession, women are insulted with impunity, outrages are perpetrated that make humanity blush, and in a word a reign of terror has been inaugurated which if not as cruel in results is as bad in principle as that of Robespierre when he enshrined a harlot as a goddess of liberty and bade the people fall down and worship.

"While this is the sad side of the picture there are other features about it which inspire the strongest hopes that the day of retaliation is not far distant. Thirty thousand men are said to be under arms waiting concerted action. Silently and stealthily they have been preparing for the event which they know must come. The mercenaries have sought to deprive them of their weapons but where one has been made a prize a hundred have taken its place. I learn this fact from a well-informed Baltimorean now in Richmond and from another source I have ascertained that not less than 8,000 muskets are at this moment concealed and vigilantly guarded night and day.

"I think I telegraphed to you that in the Eighth ward—an Irish district by the way—a Confederate flag was flying over a house in which loaded swivels were mounted at the windows and that the inmates would die before they would allow the flag to be struck.

"My informant believes that a battle there is imminent. Affrays between the citizens and soldiers take place frequently. Already several on both sides have been killed and wounded. Should a fight result we shall hear of scenes that only find a parallel in the bloody records of the French Revolution when the people fought and conquered the trained soldiers of their king behind barricades. The blow may be precipitated in less than a week. Everything depends upon the success and movements of General Johnston. If he has orders from the President to march into Maryland and toward Baltimore the game commences at once. Lincoln will find himself encompassed by forces in front and rear. Cut off from the North and West Washington will be destroyed and the footsteps of the retreating army though tracked in blood across the soil of Maryland—as they assuredly will be in such an event—may possibly pave the way to an honorable peace.

"The movements of Johnston within the last few hours are watched with intense interest. It is known that Cadwalader is on the march toward Virginia and that a small battle had taken place between his advance guard and the forces of Colonel Jackson, but beyond the arrival of forty cavalry taken prisoners and brought to Winchester the details of the affair have not transpired. Colonel Jackson retired to draw the enemy into our line of operations and General Johnston with the entire force under his command advanced. Here the record stops but I hope the telegraph to-day will bring such news of a great battle as will make the 4th of July doubly dear to every Southern heart.

"The best of feeling—newspaper croaking to the contrary—prevails everywhere among our troops. They are anxious to be 'up and at 'em'; are in prime condition physically and patriotically and have only one paramount want in the world—and that is an opportunity 'to clean the Yankees out and go home to their business.' I observe extensively quoted and commented upon in the Northern papers an extract from a letter published in some Southern journal purporting to come from a private gentleman at Manassas and expressing the conviction that Beauregard is destined to be defeated.

"The result has been an evident encouragement to the people of the North; increased enlistment in the array, a proportionate diminution of vim in the South—for even a shadow will sometimes cause a chill—and worse than all an order from Secretary Walker that we indefatigable newspaper correspondents shall not visit any of the great camps without pledging our honor that we will not divulge the secrets that we may discover; all this train of effects proceeding from a few poorly advised lines written with an incautious pen by one who must be neither a good soldier nor a good judge."

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter to General Dix which, if it meets your approval, I would be glad to have you sign and allow me to send it to General Dix by Allen. From the best information I can obtain it would seem necessary to arrest at once the parties named. I have indicated Fort Monroe as their first destination in order to get them away from Baltimore as quietly as possible, and would suggest that they ultimately be sent North.

GENERAL: You are directed to arrest forthwith the following-named persons, viz: T. Parkin Scott, S. Teackle Wallis, Henry M. Warfield, F. Key Howard, Thomas W. Hall, jr., and Henry May, and to keep them in close custody, suffering no one to communicate with them, and to convey them at once to Fortress Monroe there to remain in close custody until they shall be forwarded to their ultimate destination. You will also seize their papers and cause them to be carefully examined. The exigencies of the Government demand a prompt and successful execution of this order. You will please report your proceedings at once to this Department. Mr. E. J. Allen is sent to take the immediate charge of the arrests and examination of papers under your general control, and you will please furnish him the necessary military force.

On arriving at Baltimore I proceeded to Fort McHenry and delivered to Major-General Dix an order from the War Department for the arrest of * * * Henry May.* The said order mentioned to General Dix that I was directed to conduct the arrests, also to search for and seize the correspondence of the above-named parties.

On consultation with General Dix it was deemed advisable as it was now about midnight to postpone the attempt to arrest until the following night. * * * At about midnight [of the 13th] the several divisions moved simultaneously upon the places where we had discovered Scott, Wallis, F. Key Howard, Hall, May and Warfield, and at that time all the above named were arrested within fifteen minutes, their clothing thoroughly searched and immediately thereafter they were forwarded to Fort McHenry in separate carriages. My force made diligent search for all correspondence on the premises of each of the parties, all of which was seized. * * *

SIR: Cherishing a love of constitutional liberty and believing that a firm support of authority is both the duty and safety of the citizen in this unhappy crisis of our country when a vile spirit of radicalism is hurrying us into a state of anarchy I have wished to forget the past and to offer to you as the Chief Magistrate of our State my cordial and firm support as a citizen. Some of your friends who know what are my views have to-day informed me that this offer would not be unacceptable to you, and now that the very foundations upon which our State government and indeed the vital principles of civil liberty rest are threatened by a reckless legislative usurpation, I cannot hesitate to offer you all the aid and support to your authority that I can in any way render.

MY DEAR SIR: I returned on Wednesday from Frederick County perfectly restored to health, but of course anxious to know the news. One of the most gratifying things I have read is the newspaper account of your bold and manly speech in the House yesterday* of which I will thank you for a copy. It is I know always gratifying to a gentleman holding such a position as yours to find that his course meets with the approbation of his constituents and I therefore feel I am not intruding when I tell you that the manner in which you denounced the insolent and contemptible attempt to injure you and the tyrannical usurpation which has trampled upon our rights here receives the sanction of all those whose opinions are worth anything. I am myself particularly glad that you have stood up so manfully, because I can point to your position as proof of my repeated declarations before the election to some who were not disposed to give you their votes that you would if elected do everything that could be done to vindicate the rights and protect the interests of Baltimore. The temper manifested by the dominant party leaves small room for hope that they will pause before any constitutional barrier, but it is a consolation to know that our Representative will under all circumstances remain true to us and to himself. I was sorry to see by the papers that you were unwell, but hope you have now recovered.

Sincerely, yours,

J. P. POE.

MY DEAR SIR: Mrs. Bayard Smith has not received your speech. She wishes to have several of yours and of Mr. Breckinridge's if you can get them for her. (Women govern men, and are not to be neglected by you politicians.) I told Mrs. Smith I should write to you to remind you to send your speech. She said, "And give him my love, if he keeps on as he has begun." The excellent little lady is very much in earnest. Old Hodge, condemning her zeal, told Corcoran, "The little woman is crazy." "Crazy?" retorted C.; "it's of such women that heroes are born." Carlisle thinks it a capital card—a great occasion for you and Charles O'Connor—the habeas corpus before Judge Nelson. You will have as fine an opportunity as ever Erskine had. I had the honor of an interview yesterday with Old Abe to procure the execution of a sentence of a court-martial cashiering a volunteer colonel for spoil and pillage. My zeal was somewhat too apparent so he took time to consider of it.

Yours, faithfully,

J. F. LEE,

* For May's speech referred to in this and the following letter see proceedings of the House of Representatives on July 18, 1861, in the Congressional Globe of July 20, 1861, at p. 196 et seq.

[No. 7.]

* * * * *

Permit me in conclusion to confess a conviction that arms in the hands of the North alone employed by an Administration elected on a principle of hostility of an irrepressible conflict against the most vital interests of the South, in which are also involved the safety if not the very existence of its people, and which Administration has hitherto manifested an uncompromising policy against those very interests since its accession to power, will not be able to preserve or restore our Union of States. But if it be otherwise and the mere declaration of a purpose to subdue their opposition has so generally united the people of the South in an attitude of hostility the clash of arms upon their soil and the terrible bloodshed that must ensue will leave but few indeed if any during our generation to feel or testify a sentiment of loyalty, or the undying hatred of a free people against their conquerors will descend to their children. And the bitter and sanguinary spirit too of the North presages a miserable future of domination, producing only discord and not union. These sad contemplations force upon me the most painful apprehensions that the tendency of events is now hurrying us into a form of consolidated government if not a military despotism, since a war of sections can only conquer peace at the expense of liberty and union. We must all therefore upon the most impressive responsibilities that rest upon men at once invoke the benign influences of peace, conciliation, compromise and preserve together and perpetuate our liberties and glorious Union one and inseparable.

[Indorsement made by Department of State.]

A detached manuscript with figure 8 on one margin, writing having every semblance of May's, wherein he declares arms in the hands of the North is evidence of hostility against the vital interests of the South, and charges the spirit of the North as bitter and sanguinary and conducive of discord and not union and obviously leading to a consolidated or military government.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[Inclosure.]

WASHINGTON, October 10, 1861.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: I feel it to be my duty to address you in regard to the privations and cruel treatment of my brother, the Hon. Henry May, now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette. From the interview I had with you some weeks since I was led to hope that my brother would soon be released for you then told me such was your belief, and especially did I indulge this hope from the certainty I felt that no direct charge of disloyalty against the Government of the United States either by word or deed or thought had been brought or could be sustained against him.

If no such charge has been brought against him has he not the right to ask that one should be preferred or that he should be released? Or is he to be held in hopeless confinement and subjected to the sufferings he is now enduring both from disease and the place in which he is imprisoned? That place, sir, is a casemate in Fort Lafayette and in that one apartment are now confined thirty-three persons so crowded together that their narrow beds are actually in contact, and when the condition of the weather requires that the port-holes should be closed you may imagine the atmosphere which is inhaled by a man whose lungs are diseased as will be seen by the inclosed certificate of Dr. N. R. Smith, his physician in Baltimore. The prisoners who are confined in this casemate and all the others who are in this fort (some 100 in number) are locked up at 6 o'clock in the evening and a few minutes after 9 o'clock the few tallow lights allowed them are by order extinguished and then in this crowded apartment in darkness and a foul atmosphere my brother with his companions linger night after night subjected to a treatment more suitable to a felon than to a gentleman whose honor is as pure as any man's in this land, and whose only crime is that while endeavoring to keep the peace in his own State at all times and on all occasions he has been opposed to the policy of your Administration in regard to the unhappy difficulties in which our country is now involved.

I state these facts which I have obtained from a person who has recently been released from Fort Lafayette and who was confined in the same room with my brother. He tells me that his health is giving way and expressed to me the belief that he will sink under this cruel treatment if it is continued. One of my brothers, an officer of the U. S. Navy, is now dying of consumption. I have lost two others in less than two years and a fourth will in all human probability be added to the list if it is deemed proper to continue the treatment he is now receiving.

I am ignorant of the proper authority to address in relation to the treatment and sufferings of prisoners arrested by order of the Government of the United States and I therefore address you directly as the head of that Government and respectfully request that this statement of facts may be recorded or filed in the proper Department with a hope that it may lead to their redress.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JNO. FRED'K MAY.

This is to certify that I have attended professionally the Hon. I beg of you to try and procure Mr. May's release on parole that he may be enabled to watch the last sad hours of his brother's life. I will pledge myself that he will abstain from all political conversation or correspondence till Congress meets. I understand Mr. Pierce Butler was released by signing a paper pledging himself to abstain from aiding the South, &c. Now as Mr. May never had any such intention I can answer for his cheerfully signing such a contract. His brother is at present on his farm on the Eastern Shore. I think it will be necessary for him to be moved to Baltimore in a few days if he is able. If he remains on the Eastern Shore Henry would give his parole to remain there with him. Mr. May does not know how much worse William is. I fear to tell him unless I can at the same time carry him the news of his release. His heart has in times of affliction shown dangerous symptoms, and you may judge how distracted I feel at the idea of William's death occurring while he is under arrest and I not able to be with him. I beg you not to remember me as the greatest bore of your acquaintance.

Aid me in this and render me still more your sincerely obliged,

H. DE C. MAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 2, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: You will please release the Hon. Henry May, of Baltimore, from his parole.*

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

Case of Daniel Cory.

Daniel Cory, of Somerset County, N. J., was arrested by order of the Secretary of State dated September 14, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with disloyalty, with denouncing the Government and fomenting disloyalty. It is shown by affidavits that he denounced President Lincoln as a tory and traitor who ought to be hung; he would like to put a bullet through him and said that the yellow-bellied Yankees who were going to fight the South ought to be shot and have their necks stretched. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 15, 1861, directing Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Cory on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will neither enter nor correspond with the States in insurrection without permission from the Secretary of State, nor do any act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 21, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Case of Benjamin F. Longley.

The first information received at the Department of State concerning this man [B. F. Longley] was a letter dated Portland, September 5, 1861, directed to the Secretary of State from Jedediah Jewett, collector of that port, in which he says:

Mr. Benjamin, alias Benjamin F. Longley, formerly engaged in the express business in this city but of late connected with an express or forwarding company between Saint Louis and New Orleans has lately visited Lancaster, N. H., where he openly avowed his sympathy with those in rebellion against the Government of the United States. From incidental remarks made by him at Lancaster and the fact that he left there to meet a steamer at Quebec I infer that he is still engaged in forwarding goods or letters to the South.

He was arrested by order of the Secretary of State September 14, 1861, at Niagara Falls and committed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 25, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Longley on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating not to do certain acts. He was accordingly released November 28, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Case of James A. McMaster.

James A. McMaster, editor of The New York Freeman's Appeal, was arrested by order of the Secretary of State dated September 14, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with disloyalty and with editing a disloyal newspaper in New York City. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 21, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release McMaster on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released October 23, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 14, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq.,

U. S. Marshal, Southern District of New York.

SIR: Your letter of yesterday respecting James A. McMaster has been received. You will arrest and send him to Fort Lafayette.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, September 29, 1861.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

It may be known to Your Excellency that on the 16th instant James A. McMaster, esq., editor and proprietor of The New York Freeman's Appeal, was arrested by a State warrant and was conveyed to Fort Lafayette where he is now a prisoner. I am the wife of that gentleman and am residing in this city, having our two young children under my charge. On the supposition that the arrest of Mr. McMaster was caused by articles that appeared in his paper that journal has by his direction been suspended ever since his withdrawal from his post. Most of his worldly means and the fruit of many years of arduous and unremitting labor are deposited in his paper and his whole future career as a journalist may depend upon the preservation of his interests in it. The character of the paper has been such that its circulation was a wide though not a very large one and few could have suffered proportionately more than it did by the interruption of communications between the North and the South. I am now advised by friends that the continued suspension of The Appeal will be followed by the complete loss of its subscription list, its advertising patronage and by such pecuniary damage as will require the discharge of its employés.

Under these circumstances and under favor of a permit given me by the Secretary of State I have sought Mr. McMaster at Fort Lafayette and with his consent I have arranged to purchase his interest in the journal as a bona fide transaction and with the assistance of a few friends to carry it on in my own name. This seems to be the best if not the only way to save his business from destruction.

I promise and am willing to guarantee that the paper will not be in any way obnoxious to the charge of hostility to the administration of the Government; and I respectfully ask that it may be allowed to pass through the mails. I request this of the President because there is positive reason to doubt that the postmaster of New York will feel himself authorized to permit it on his own sole authority. At the same time I regret extremely to be obliged to propose consuming any part of the time of Your Excellency with this memorial when one is sure that there are so constant and pressing demands upon it.

I have the honor to be, Mr. President, your obedient servant,
GERTRUDE G. MCMASTER.

NEW YORK, October 9, 1861.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The undersigned had the honor to address Your Excellency on the 29th ultimo a communication relating to the paper lately edited by James A. McMaster, esq. The subject is one of great importance to his private interest and to his family and delay in deciding what course to adopt is causing injury to the property. If my proposition cannot be admitted by the Administration it may be that some modification of it might meet their views and at the same time save the property in the paper.

I should be assisted and gratified by being instructed in the wishes of the President in this matter, and am, Your Excellency's obedient servant,

GERTRUDE G. McMASTER.

SIR: You will please release James A. McMaster on the terms proposed by himself. To aid you in determining what those terms are I forward his letter* addressed to William H. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y., October 23, 1861.

I, James A. McMaster, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

I protest against the demand made on me to take the above oath to all the requirements of which I hold myself already bound as being a citizen of the United States. I protest against it because there is no warrant of law or of justice in requiring the oath of me. I insist moreover on adding this protest to the record of my oath.

Case of Mrs. Elizabeth K. Baldwin.

Elizabeth K., wife of Commander A. S. Baldwin, of the U. S. Navy, became known to the Department of State as a correspondent of W. H. Winder,* a disloyal citizen of Philadelphia, in her correspondence with whom she had habitually expressed sentiments and opinions in sympathy with the rebels. On the 18th of September, 1861, Mrs. Baldwin was directed to be placed under surveillance by the Secretary of State and her correspondence to be taken possession of and examined. She stated to the officer who called upon her in pursuance of this direction that she had destroyed all her letters from Winder; also that she had held correspondence with persons in the rebel States, but had destroyed all their letters. On the 25th of September, 1861, Mrs. Baldwin having on the 23d of the same month taken the oath of allegiance to the United States an order was issued from the Department of State directing the U. S. district attorney for New Jersey, who had charge of the surveillance over Mrs. Baldwin, to discontinue the same.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Case of Charles S. Morehead, Reuben T. Durrett and M. W. Barr.

Charles S. Morehead, of Kentucky, was arrested on the 19th day of September, 1861, accused of being actively engaged in stirring up and promoting rebellion, and directly charged with treason on the oath of A. H. Sneed, marshal of the United States for Kentucky district. Morehead was arrested by said marshal by virtue of a warrant founded upon the oath aforesaid issued by Joseph Clement, a justice of the peace of Jefferson County, Ky. It appears by the return of the said marshal to a writ of habeas corpus issued by order of Judge Catron, holding a circuit court at Louisville, directing him to bring into court the said Morehead, that he the said marshal had caused the said Morehead to be taken to Indianapolis for the safety of his person, and while there that he had been taken by military force by order of the Secretary of War and conveyed to Fort Lafayette. No further proceedings appear to have been taken in the courts on the original complaint against Morehead. The said Morehead was transferred from Fort Lafayette to Fort Warren where he remained in custody till January 6, 1862, when he was released on his parole not to enter the State of Kentucky or any insurrectionary State nor to do any act or enter into any correspondence adverse to the authority of the United States, and to hold himself at the disposition of the Secretary of State until otherwise directed. The said Morehead refused to take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

Reuben T. Durrett was arrested by order of the military authorities in Kentucky about the 19th of September, 1861, and conveyed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren October 30, 1861. Durrett was charged with disloyalty to the United States Government while acting editor of The Louisville Courier, and with having written and had published in that paper editorials of most treasonable character, from one of which the following extracts are taken. In an article denouncing what the editor styles the "neutrality of the last legislature" he says.* Applications having been made by petitions and letters for the release of Durrett, an order was issued from the Department of State December 5, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick to discharge him upon his taking the oath of allegiance, &c. Reuben T. Durrett was accordingly released on the 9th day of December, 1861.

Martin W. Barr was arrested at his residence in Louisville, Ky., September 19, 1861, by the military authorities of that department and was conveyed to Fort Lafayette. November 1, 1861, Barr with others was transferred to Fort Warren. The charges against Barr were that he sympathized with the rebels and used his position as telegraph agent of the Associated Press to advance the insurrectionary cause. December 30, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State for the release of Barr on his taking the oath of allegiance, &c. January 7, 1862, Colonel Dimick wrote to the Department that Barr declined to take the oath and that he requested to be exchanged January 9, 1862. Colonel Dimick was directed to retain Barr in custody to await the further pleasure of the Secretary of State. Barr was again tendered his release on taking the oath January 31, 1862, and refused to accept it. The said M. W. Barr remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

INDIANAPOLIS, September 9, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: I send you the inclosed Kentucky paper† with several articles marked merely to inquire if it is not about time the editor were an occupant of Fort Lafayette or some other suitable place for traitors? The people are getting tired of sending their sons to fight rebels while such as this editor, more mischievous by far than if armed with muskets, are allowed to furnish aid and comfort to the enemy unmolested.

LOUISVILLE, September 24, 1861.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MY DEAR SIR: On Friday night last ex-Governor Charles S. Morehead, Reuben T. Durrett and M. W. Barr were arrested in and near this city, and I understand they have been taken to Fort Lafayette. I telegraphed you this morning in conjunction with two or three other gentlemen in relation to Mr. Durrett. Mr. Durrett has been and I presume still is a bitter personal enemy of mine but I am extremely anxious for his release. He is a secessionist, but he has never done any harm in our community. He couldn't do any harm if he would. He is not without talent, but he has no influence, and his discharge could not be productive of the least possible injury to the Union cause. But the strongest reason why I wish his release is that his wife, a most estimable woman, is on the very verge of delirium on his account. I do believe in my heart that if he be kept from her many days she will go utterly and hopelessly mad.

Governor Morehead has been one of the dearest of my personal friends for nearly thirty years. I do not believe that his arrest was necessary or expedient. His feelings lately have been with the South, but I have heard him say twenty times and with great vehemence that he would give all he has in the world, life included, to restore the Union to what it was before the Southern States seceded. He has uniformly condemned secession, but has contended warmly for peace on the ground that war could never restore the Union, and unquestionably his feelings have become a good deal excited against the Government. He has strongly condemned in two or three speeches, and probably in a pamphlet he is said to have been preparing, the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus and one or two other acts of the Government, but I have no idea that he had a thought of transcending the legitimate privileges of a citizen. I am sure that his detention in prison can do no good; I think his release may do some. I am assured by his family and friends that if released he would go immediately to the South, and certainly he would not take up arms, and he is very far from being in a condition to aid the rebels with money. I pray you release him unless you have proofs before you of his treason. I beseech you to release him if you can without the violation of a great duty. His imprisonment for any length of time in the present embarrassed condition of his affairs would be the ruin of his amiable and excellent family. Strongly as I am opposed to his recent course, I would rather give a portion of the brief remnant of my life than have his confinement protracted.

And I cannot think it worth while to detain Mr. Barr in prison. He has a very lovely wife dependent upon him. He is a poor man, long a telegraphic operator here and during the last three or four months he has been employed by the company in New Orleans as their telegraphic agent in this city. He has of course telegraphed what he thought would be most agreeable to his employers. It would have been very easy to make him desist from that work without confining him as a state prisoner. If discharged he will be sure to do no such work again.

Asking your indulgence for troubling you with this long letter and most earnestly hoping I have not written it in vain, I remain, most respectfully, yours,

GEO. D. PRENTICE.

Were sent to Fort Lafayette by the military authorities of Kentucky and it would be improper for me to intervene without further knowledge of the facts than I now possess.

Respectfully referred to the President.

JOHN A. KASSON,
*First Assistant Postmaster-General.*WASHINGTON, September 25, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

President of the United States.

DEAR SIR: I deem it my duty to place in your hands the inclosed paragraph from the pen of Reuben T. Durrett, now confined as a traitor at Fort Lafayette, and whose release was asked for by a dispatch* from Louisville which reached you on yesterday. I would especially invite your attention to the closing sentence of this treasonable declaration. The Courier under this man's editorial management has done everything to incite the people of Kentucky to take up arms against the General Government. His arrest has rejoiced the hearts of the Union men, and his discharge under the circumstances in which the State is placed would in my judgment be a fatal mistake. He will no doubt offer to take the oath of allegiance, but I express only the convictions of those who know him best when I say that he would take the oath if necessary on his knees, and would stab the Government the moment he rose to his feet.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HOLT.

[Inclosure.]

Reuben Durrett, editor of The Louisville Courier and now in Fort Lafayette, is the author of the following paragraphs which appeared in the paper a few days before his arrest.

Denouncing what it styles the "neutrality of the last legislature" The Courier says:

It has subjected the State justly to insult and invasion, and now leaves her on the verge of civil war. We know of but one way to avert this dire calamity now, if it be not now too late, and that is to adopt an honest and manly neutrality without any more sneaking and shuffling and contradictory conditions and reservations. But this can only be done by separating from the Northern Union. By this alone can Kentucky be exempted from contributions of men and money, from implication in embargoes, and all other belligerent measures. And we say she is under no obligation to remain in the Union, but under many to leave it. * * * The truth is that the United States of America no longer exists in law or in fact, and that the constitutional compact can be no longer executed. Kentucky does not and can not belong to the Union according to the cant of the Lincoln men. She may by express compact unite herself to the Northern States, but we beg leave to assure messieurs the members of the present legislature that they cannot do it by any acts of commission or omission. It can be done only by the people of Kentucky in their primary capacity or by delegates in sovereign convention assembled. We therefore deliberately pronounce the assumption of any authority over Kentucky by the Lincoln Government or by the present legislature under it as a usurpation and revolutionary and which no citizen of Kentucky is bound to obey.

* Osborne to Kasson preceding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 2, 1861.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, Esq., Louisville, Ky.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th ultimo relative to the cases of Messrs. Durrett, Morehead and Barr and requesting their discharge from custody has been received. In reply I have to inform you that as they were arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the military authorities of Kentucky it would be improper for me to intervene, especially without further knowledge of their cases than I now possess.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, October 4, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

MY DEAR SIR: Please see Mr. Walker, well vouched as a Union man and son-in-law of Governor Morehead, and pleading for his release. I understand the Kentucky arrests were not made by special direction from here, and I am willing if you are that any of the parties may be released when James Guthrie and James Speed think they should be.

Yours, truly,

A. LINCOLN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 4, 1861.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: You will please permit Mr. Samuel J. Walker to make a single visit in the presence of a proper officer to Governor Morehead, a prisoner confined at Fort Lafayette.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LOUISVILLE, October 5, 1861.

DEAR CRAIG: Yours of the 28th ultimo containing the inclosed* from Barr was duly received.

I have just succeeded in getting an interview with A. H. Sneed, the U. S. marshal here, in reference to the charges against Barr and the chance of procuring his release. Sneed says that there was no charge against Barr in reference to any of his telegraph operations; that he was arrested among other things for giving counsel and advice by letter and otherwise to Governor Harris and other Confederates whereby they came into possession of facts which it was treasonable for a citizen of the United States under the circumstances to divulge to their adversaries.

* Not found.

Sneed has none of the documentary evidence upon which Barr's arrest was predicated, but he tells me that on the 21st instant at Frankfort the U. S. court will examine this and other similar cases, and then that the accused will have a copy of the charges. As to Barr's family it is undoubtedly true that they are dependent upon Barr's exertions for their support. They are now at Humboldt, Tenn., and Barr's friends are making exertions to get them either to La Grange, Ky., or to New Albany, Ind., at each of which places his family have friends who are anxious that Mrs. Barr and her children should come and stay with them for the present. They will undoubtedly be brought here as soon as arrangements can be completed to insure their safe conduct hither. Mr. Casseday who is attending to these matters tells me that it is probable that The South will continue to Mrs. Barr that portion of the salary which they agreed to pay, and if so Mrs. Barr may get along comfortably so far as pecuniary considerations are concerned for a while.

Mr. Sneed thinks from what was represented to him at Barr's arrest that the chance of Barr's release is entirely hopeless. He says the evidence of his giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States is overwhelming, but that for particulars we must await the action of the grand jury of the U. S. court at Frankfort on the 21st instant. I am sorry that Barr seems to be thus involved, but from Sneed's representations he may disabuse himself of the idea that he was arrested on account of any of his general telegraphic news operations, however perverted or colored his dispatches may have been. I allude of course to the dispatches condensed from our Eastern reports. It is just possible something sent from here may have been offensive to our Government. But Sneed thinks not and we cannot learn till the 21st.

Truly, yours,

GEORGE W. TYLER.

LOUISVILLE, October 10, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed appeal to the President in behalf of R. T. Durrett, now a political prisoner at Fort Lafayette, has been sent me to sign and forward. The latter request I obey with pleasure, inclosing it to you. Since Mr. Durrett's arrest I have visited his wife and mother-in-law twice. Mrs. Durrett (Lizzie Bates) is in a truly pitiable condition; and her mother's (Mrs. Caleb J. Bates) state is not much better. What is said in the appeal as to their patriotism is I believe entirely true. They are not only loyal in act and sentiment but deeply deplore the writing of the editorials in The Courier which caused Mr. Durrett's arrest. As to Durrett himself I believe that in the few days he was acting as one of the editors of The Courier he was more imprudent than wicked, and acted worse than he thought. I am of this opinion from a conversation I had with him a few days before he undertook temporarily to assist in the editorship of the paper. He then expressed much regret at the condition of the country; said he hardly knew which side he was on, and declared that so far as fighting was concerned he didn't intend to fight for either. I agree with the statement in the appeal to the President that "he is what would generally be called a harmless man," and I believe that his release on taking the oath would do good rather than harm to the Union cause in this part of the country.

Still I deem it proper as the appeal calls the President's attention to you individually that you should understand the nature and extent of Mr. Durrett's offense. Hence I inclose to you a copy of the affidavit referred to, and in a separate envelope papers containing the articles which Mr. Randal swears were the production of Mr. Durrett. These articles I mark. I also mark the article headed "Once more," which Mr. Randal swears Mr. Durrett did not write. The writer of this is at large. If anything of the sort is treasonable this certainly is. Mr. Randal knows who wrote it.

Respectfully,

W. D. GALLAGHER.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The undersigned respectfully ask that the Executive clemency may be extended to Reuben T. Durrett, of Louisville, Ky., who is now imprisoned in Fort Lafayette. Mr. Durrett was arrested as we understand because he was thought to be the editor of The Louisville Courier, a very offensive newspaper. But we are assured that he had not been the editor of the paper for about two years. He wrote some articles at the request of the editor who was absent which are certainly not such as we could justify in any manner; but the most objectionable and which were thought to be written by him we are assured by the affidavit of W. H. W. Randal, an employé in the printing office, were not written by him, and we are satisfied that this is true. This newspaper was suppressed on the 19th of last month and it is not now in existence.

Mr. Durrett, as far as has come to our knowledge, behaved himself well and rather modestly during the excited time of the spring and summer. He is not a man who is calculated to do such harm to the State as could require in any sense a military imprisonment. Indeed we look upon him as what would be generally called a harmless man. We are very sure his release can do no harm to the United States. His wife is a Union woman, her mother is a Union woman (Mrs. Bates, of Cincinnati), who has been working since the war commenced with her own fingers for the soldiers of the U. S. Army as a matter of patriotism. Her son, Mrs. Durrett's only brother, is in the volunteer service of the United States from Ohio. The worth of this family is well known to Mr. Secretary Chase.

In consideration of Mrs. Durrett's position and Mrs. Bates' patriotism if Mr. Durrett will take the oath of allegiance I would most heartily beg the clemency of the President of the United States.

I, W. H. W. Randal, of the city of Louisville, Ky., at the earnest request of the wife and mother-in-law of R. T. Durrett, now understood to be a political prisoner at Fort Lafayette in New York Harbor, made through a mutual friend, and also at the request of friends of the family in this city, depose and say that at the time of the suppression of the publication of The Louisville Courier newspaper on the morning of the 19th of September, 1861, and for some time previous I was employed in the news room; that the said R. T. Durrett for a few days before the suppression of the said paper was acting as editor ad interim in the absence of the principal editor, Colonel McKee; that during those few days the said Durrett wrote several of the political leaders, but not as is generally supposed the exceedingly offensive article headed "Once more" and published in the issue of the 18th of September, the last number printed, which article was represented and is by me believed to have been written by another editorial assistant; that at the request of Mrs. Durrett made through a friend I have examined with some care the manuscripts of leading editorials published during the time that Mr. Durrett was acting as editor ad interim or assistant and that I can and do from recollection as well as from long and familiar acquaintance with his handwriting to the best of my knowledge and belief designate as articles written by the said Durrett one headed, "What we are coming to," published in the issue of the 18th of September; also one headed "Considerable excitement," in the same issue; one headed "A great outrage," in the issue for September 17, and one headed "Kentucky neutrality," in the issue for 16th of September; that so far as I remember or can determine from an examination of manuscripts these are the principal articles written for the paper by the said Durrett during the time that he was acting as ad interim or assistant editor, in September, 1861. I make the three issues of The Daily Courier above referred to and cited a part of this deposition. And further this deponent saith not.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 15, 1861.

MY DEAR HETTIE: I received your letter yesterday. Hallie and my babies are provided for, and I am content. I may need your assistance before the winter closes, and should I do so I will apply to you as freely as I would offer assistance to Frank did they carry him to the West. I have been prudent and conservative. I have violated no law. I have attended quietly but faithfully to my business—an honorable and legitimate business. I have been snatched from my house in the night. A writ of habeas corpus has followed me. I am here beyond the reach of law or liberty or juries. There remains but one outrage—to cut my head off. I inclose you a letter which I wish you to preserve for me. I may have need of it. Mr. Craig, of New York, writes that under the circumstances the New Orleans and other Southern editors will do what is necessary for the support of my family. "If not, you can draw on me." God bless Mr. Craig. Write me about Fannie. Write me whenever you have leisure. I am lonesome.

Yours,

M. W. BARR.

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 25, 1861.

The PRESIDENT.

DEAR SIR: In my judgment the arrest of Governor Morehead has not been beneficial or prejudicial to the Union cause, although it has been made the pretense for many to leave the State. At the time the arrest was made the influential men of the State had taken their positions and I have discovered no change of sentiment because of the arrest. The legislature since the arrest has passed the inclosed resolution and Generals Anderson and Sherman have issued the inclosed proclamation. If the governor had remained in the State and acquiesced in its decision he would not have been subject to arrest or molestation. Many who after having returned and taken the oath remain undisturbed, notwithstanding some of them had joined the Confederate Army. The governor's arrest and detention it seems to me should not deprive him of the benefit of the position taken by Kentucky.

You are aware that Governor Morehead enjoyed the confidence of the Whig party of the State in a very high degree, and that he had many warm personal friends not only in its ranks but in the ranks of the Democracy, and that his property being situated in the South he was sensitive upon the question of hostility between the sections. His great personal popularity would have done the Union cause much damage in the State but for the fact that his party and his personal friends had taken their position. I am not aware of the charges against Governor Morehead, and write this on the predication that he was arrested and has been detained because of his sympathy with the South and his personal exertions to influence the State of Kentucky upon the subject. If this should be the case I submit that his release would be just and proper on his pledging his honor to abide by the position taken by Kentucky and not seek in any way to change it. The governor, if he should give the pledge, would keep it, and his discharge would do the cause of the Union in my opinion no harm.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JAMES GUTHRIE.

[Inclosure.]

The policy of the State toward citizens who merely entertain disloyal opinions is prescribed distinctly and authoritatively and has been repeatedly set forth in full in our columns; yet in view of certain representations that have been made to us and considering the importance we ascribe to the subject we think it proper to set forth the policy anew. In doing this we shall reproduce without comment only the more explicit and emphatic of the authoritative declarations on the subject. The policy is defined and ordained by the legislature of the State as follows:

Resolved, That in using the means which duty and honor require shall be used to expel the invaders from the soil of Kentucky no citizen shall be molested on account of his political opinions; that no citizen's property shall be taken or confiscated because of such opinions nor shall any slave be set free by any military commander, and that all peaceable citizens who remain at home and attend to their private business until legally called into the public service as well as their families are entitled to and shall receive the fullest protection of the Government in the enjoyment of their lives, their liberties and their property.

This resolution is the law of the land and has been so proclaimed by the proper authority. General Anderson on the eve of resigning his command of this military department issued the following order:

GENERAL ORDERS, } HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
No. 5. } Louisville, Ky., October 7, 1861.

The commanding general learns with deep regret that arrests are being made in some parts of the State upon the slightest and most trivial grounds. He desires the civil authorities and orders the military not to make any arrests except when the parties are attempting to join the rebels or are engaged in giving aid or information to them, and in all cases the evidence must be such as will convict them before a court of justice. In many cases it is understood that the Home Guards have gone into adjoining counties and arrested and carried off parties who have been quietly remaining at home under the expectation that they would not be interfered with provided they did nothing in violation of the spirit of the proclamation of September 24, issued from these headquarters. Some instances are mentioned of persons having been arrested and taken out of the State. This is all contrary to what the commanding general has declared to be his wish and he trusts it will not be repeated. It is believed that many of those who at one time sympathized with the rebellion are desirous of returning to their allegiance and wish to remain quietly at home attending to their business. A conciliatory, fair course pursued toward such persons will win them to our cause; the reverse may force them into the ranks of our enemies. The commanding general entreats and urges his fellow-citizens to discountenance and endeavor to put a stop to these ill-timed and unlawful arrests and to aid him in keeping peace among ourselves.

By command of Brigadier-General Anderson:

OLIVER D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

A few days later the subjoined correspondence took place between two distinguished gentlemen of Lexington and General Sherman, the successor of General Anderson:

LEXINGTON, October 11, 1861.

General SHERMAN.

SIR: Mr. V. B. Young, a Union member of the legislature from Bath County informs us that in the adjoining county of Fleming many persons have been apprehended merely on account of their Southern sympathies and secession opinions, without proof or imputation of any overt act of treason or aiding treason, and he says that apprehending the like treatment many citizens of his county who intended to remain at home, and had done no illegal act, have fled and are joining Breckinridge at Prestonburg. This procedure, though only retaliatory, seems to us to be inconsistent with General Anderson's proclamation, with the spirit of our law and with prudent policy, and if it shall be persisted in and become general we apprehend it will necessarily lead to the augmentation of the Southern force and to the exasperation of the civil war in Kentucky. Mr. Young will explain the object of his visit to you on this important subject. He may be fully accredited and safely trusted. He wants an authentic confirmation of what we believe to be your programme of policy concerning the secessionists in Kentucky so as to be able to assure the neutral portion of his "Southern rights" constituents.

G. ROBERTSON.
RICHD. A. BUCKNER.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Louisville, Ky., October 18, 1861.

G. ROBERTSON, Esq., and RICHARD A. BUCKNER, Esq.

SIRS: Your note of yesterday is received. My order and practice have been to interfere with no citizen pursuing his usual legitimate business or on account of mere political opinions. I know that arrests have been made improperly by members of the Home Guards, but in every instance the case has been examined by one of the members of your court of appeals, who has promptly released them unless the fact of some overt act of treason was established. I shall endeavor to protect all loyal citizens, and shall molest no one, whatever his political opinions, provided he obeys the laws of the State of Kentucky and of the United States. These shall be my guide, and are as binding upon me as upon any citizen of the State.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

W. T. SHERMAN,
Brigadier-General.

Habeas corpus proceedings in the case of Morehead.

Proceedings of the circuit court of the United States, eighth circuit, for the district of Kentucky, at its regular term begun and held in the city of Louisville on the 23d day of September in the year of our Lord 1861.

Present, the Hon. John Catron, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States for the Kentucky district.

Be it remembered that heretofore, to wit, on the said 23d day of September, 1861, in said court, begun and held as aforesaid in the ex parte matter of Charles S. Morehead.

The petition and application in behalf of Charles S. Morehead for a writ of habeas corpus and the response made by the marshal to the same before the judge at chambers and now filed in court, being set for hearing this day at noon in court, the hour having arrived and the court being in session, O. F. Sterman, esq., counsel for the accused, appeared in court and demanded of the marshal, A. H. Sneed, the production of the said Morehead in court according to the command of the writ, and the return of the marshal made upon said prisoner's application for the writ. The marshal stated that it was not in his power at this time to produce the said Morehead, and asked him till to-morrow, 10 a. m., to show cause, which is allowed. And it is ordered that he then produce the said Morehead in court or show cause to the contrary. The marshal being present and cognizant of this order no further service hereof is required.

The petition for the writ of habeas corpus is in these words and figures, to wit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To the Hon. JOHN CATRON,

One of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner, John Morehead, on oath states that Charles S. Morehead is now in custody of A. H. Sneed, U. S. marshal for Kentucky, who holds him unlawfully and without right in confinement under authority of the United States. Therefore your petitioner prays for the writ of habeas corpus, that the said Sneed and all others acting under his authority and having the said Charles S. Morehead in custody bring him before you that the cause of said unlawful confinement may be inquired into, and also the causes of his being so held.

Respectfully,

JOHN MOREHEAD.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, Jefferson County, ss:

Personally came John Morehead before me, the undersigned, and made oath that the statements made in the foregoing petition are as he verily believes true.

Given under my hand and seal of office this 19th day of September, 1861.

JEFF. BROWN,
Notary Public, Jefferson County, Ky.

The foregoing affidavit was sworn to before me this 19th day of September, 1861, by John Morehead.

J. CATRON,
Associate Justice Supreme Court of the United States.

Upon which petition and application the following writ issued, to wit:

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

Whereas John Morehead has presented a petition to John Catron, one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, stating that Charles S. Morehead is unjustly and unlawfully held in confinement by A. H. Sneed, U. S. marshal for the State of Kentucky, or by those acting under his authority, the said A. H. Sneed is commanded to bring the said Charles S. Morehead before me with the cause of commitment at the U. S. court room in the city of Louisville at 10 a. m. on the 20th of September, 1861, that the cause of the confinement and commitment of the said Charles S. Morehead may be inquired into, and that the said A. H. Sneed then show by what authority and for what cause the said Charles S. Morehead is so confined by him.

In testimony whereof, &c.,

J. CATRON,
Associate Justice Supreme Court of the United States

To this writ the marshal, A. H. Sneed, made the following return, to wit:

The undersigned, marshal of the Kentucky district, says the within-named Charles S. Morehead is in his charge and custody as such marshal, and that he will have the defendant before the circuit court of the United States at the court rooms at Louisville on Monday next by the hour of noon. September 20, 1861.

A. H. SNEED,
U. S. Marshal for Kentucky District.

At another day of said term, to wit, Tuesday, the 24th day of September, 1861, came S. S. Nicholas, esq., attorney for the accused, and also A. H. Sneed, the marshal of this district, and he failing to produce in court the said Morehead according to the command of the habeas corpus herein and of the order of this court made here on yesterday (he having him in his charge and custody as certified by him to the judge of this court on the 20th instant), but produced in court an additional return to the said writ to which he has sworn in open court, and is filed. The said Sneed also produced as part of his return the affidavit and the original warrant under which the accused was arrested by him, which are also filed. As to the failure of the marshal to produce the said Morehead according to the said writ and order, and as to the sufficiency of his said return, the court is not now advised, and takes time till to-morrow morning, 10 o'clock, to consider.

The additional return of the marshal and other papers mentioned in the foregoing order as filed are in the words and figures following, to wit:

Circuit court of the United States, eighth circuit, Kentucky district, at Louisville

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA	}	On habeas corpus.
vs.
CHARLES S. MOREHEAD.

Having received information upon which I relied that Charles S. Morehead, of the county of Jefferson, Ky., was actively engaged in stirring up and promoting the rebellion now existing against the Government of the United States by corresponding with the enemy and doing other acts which in law amounted to treason, I caused a warrant to issue for his arrest and he was accordingly arrested the 19th instant, together with M. W. Barr and R. T. Durrett, and to prevent their rescue which I had satisfactory reasons to believe was intended if they were retained in the city of Louisville I caused them to be conveyed across the Ohio River to the town of Jeffersonville, which is opposite to the city of Louisville, for safe-keeping. After they were thus conveyed to Jeffersonville I was informed upon authority which I believed that the persons would be forcibly released, and to prevent it, under the advice of Governor Morton, who was at the time in the city of Louisville, said persons were conveyed to the city of Indianapolis for safe-keeping, from which place they were to be returned when ordered by the court having jurisdiction of the offense charged.

Pursuant to the directions of the Government of the United States issued from the office of the Attorney-General of the United States, in which I was directed to report forthwith all arrests made by me for treason or other offenses involving the stability and integrity of the Government, I notified the Secretary of War of the arrest of the said Morehead, Barr and Durrett. I have been informed upon authority which I do not doubt that the President of the United States through the Secretary of War ordered said persons to be conveyed to Fort Lafayette, in the State of New York, and that they were taken into custody by the military authority of the United States at Indianapolis on Friday the 20th instant and when last heard from were en route for New York. I never did give my consent directly or indirectly for the removal of said persons from Indianapolis. When I was about leaving Louisville for Indianapolis to bring said persons back to Louisville for examination and trial I was informed that the military authorities of the United States had taken possession of said Morehead, Barr and Durrett, and had started with them for New York. But for the interference of the military authorities the persons would have been before this court for examination and trial. The removal of them to the opposite side of the Ohio River was for no other purpose than for safe-keeping and to prevent any violence which might have been gotten up by their friends and sympathizers for their forcible release. I file herewith as a part hereof the warrant upon which I made the arrest of said Morehead. I regarded said Morehead, Barr and Durrett in my possession and under my control until I was divested of that possession by the military authorities of the United States.

A. H. SNEED,
U. S. Marshal for Kentucky District.

Sworn to in open court by A. H. Sneed, 24th of September, 1861.

CH. J. CLARKE,
Acting Clerk.

The following is the affidavit and warrant of arrest referred to in the foregoing return:

THE STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson :

This day A. H. Sneed made oath before me, a justice of the peace for said county, that Charles S. Morehead, of said county, has from information received by this affiant been guilty of the crime against the United States of America of aiding and abetting the enemies of said United States, now in open rebellion and making war against the same, and that said Charles S. Morehead has thereby been guilty of treason.

A. H. SNEED.
Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of September, 1861.
JOS. CLEMENT,
Justice of the Peace, Jefferson County.

The following is the warrant of arrest, to wit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Kentucky, County of Jefferson.

To the U. S. Marshal for the Kentucky District :

Whereas there are good grounds to believe that Charles S. Morehead, of said county and State, has been guilty of the crime of treason against the United States of America in feloniously aiding and abetting the enemies of said United States now in open rebellion and making war against said United States; you are therefore in the name of the United States of America and Commonwealth of Kentucky commanded forthwith to arrest the said Charles S. Morehead and take him before the court having jurisdiction of the offense with which he stands charged, to be dealt with according to law.

Given under my hand as justice of the peace this 18th day of September, 1861.

JOS. CLEMENT,
Justice of the Peace of Jefferson County.

Upon which the marshal made the following return, to wit:

Executed by arresting the within-named Charles S. Morehead, September 19, 1861.

A. H. SNEED,
U. S. Marshal for Kentucky District.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Kentucky District :

I, John A. Monroe, clerk of the eighth circuit of the United States of America for the Kentucky district, at Louisville, do hereby certify that the preceding eight pages contain a full and complete transcript of the record and proceedings had in the ex parte matter therein stated as the same now remains of record in said court.

In witness whereof I have hereto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of said court at Louisville this 11th day of November, 1861, and in the eighty-sixth year of our Independence.

JNO. A. MONROE,
Clerk.

By CH. J. CLARKE,
Acting Deputy.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Kentucky, Louisville :

I, John Catron, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, and presiding judge of the eighth circuit, Kentucky district, do hereby certify that John A. Monroe is the clerk of said court, duly appointed and qualified, and that his foregoing attestation is in due form of law, and that he is by law the keeper of the seal of said court.

Given under my hand at Louisville aforesaid this 11th day of November, 1861.

J. CATRON.

CLERK'S OFFICE OF THE COURT OF APPEALS,
Frankfort, Ky., November 12, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

DEAR SIR: I understand that efforts are being quietly made by Governor Morehead's friends in the Union ranks to have him released. I most sincerely hope they will not succeed. I do not know what tangible proof you have against him, but I know him well. The most specious, plausible, dangerous of all our Kentucky traitors. A traitor to his country, his native State, his party and his confiding friends. He scattered the evil seed of treason broadcast through the South by his false statements in public speeches as to the loyalty of Kentucky. If he did not advise he stimulated the invasion of Kentucky by his misrepresentations. I have no sympathy for such men, honored too as he has been by Kentucky. Thank God I have neither son nor son-in-law in the rebel army. My two older brothers and all their sons too are loyal.

Very respectfully,

LESLIE COOMBS.

[Indorsement.]

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

GOVERNOR: The President desires me to send you the within protest of General Coombs against the liberation of Governor Morehead.

Respectfully,

JOHN HAY.

A. L. SHOTWELL, Esq.

DEAR SIR: At a circuit court of the United States for the district of Kentucky held in the city of Louisville in the month of September last a grand jury was summoned and sworn, and I was designated by the judge as foreman thereof, which was in session ten days, and during that time many witnesses were examined each day and during the whole of the examination not a solitary imputation or charge was made against ex-Governor Charles S. Morehead, of Kentucky, now held as a political prisoner in the harbor of Boston, Mass.

Respectfully,

G. W. MERIWETHER.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Kentucky, to wit:

I, Bland Ballard, district judge of the United States for Kentucky district, state that I was present and presided at the late term of the circuit court of the United States held at Frankfort, Ky., and was present when all the indictments were returned by the grand jury, and that no indictment was returned against ex-Governor Charles S. Morehead. I further state that I heard of no charge against Governor Morehead, and that said court at Frankfort was held since his arrest.

BLAND BALLARD.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, Esq., Washington City.

DEAR SIR: Understanding that a copy of the proceedings in the U. S. court in relation to the arrest and imprisonment of Governor

C. S. Morehead will be sent you to lay before the President and Secretary of State at Washington with the letter of Mr. Guthrie, &c., we, the undersigned, being ourselves Union men and having acquainted ourselves with the circumstances have come to the conclusion that the release of Governor Morehead on his parole of honor to abide by and conform to the position which this State has assumed so long as he remained in this State [sic]. We know his interest is so deeply affected by the disruption of the Union and no man would find himself so benefited by a reconstruction as Governor Morehead. We believe that injury to Union cause in Kentucky is being produced by the detaining of Governor Morehead in a distant State when there are no charges made or proposed to be made by those who advised his arrest and removal from Kentucky, and therefore hope you will have this matter so presented as to procure the prompt release of Governor Morehead before you leave Washington.

With much regard, yours, &c.,

VIRGIL McKNIGHT.
W. E. EWING.
ISAAC EVERETT.

NEW YORK, November 22, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Having just returned from Fort Warren I hasten to write a note in relation to Governor C. S. Morehead, of Kentucky, because I see that there is on foot a movement in favor of his release.

Mr. Morehead excluded himself from the category of prisoners whose cases I would be called upon to examine with care by taking the position that he could not take the oath of allegiance. Taking that ground I have held to be evidence that a man was disloyal. The governor asserts that he is and always has been a Union man; that his arrest was not warranted by law or policy and that it was a grand political mistake, having done great mischief, &c. All that is past. What to do with him now is the question.

The real reason why his devotion to the Union has always been upon conditions and hampered with impossible terms consists in the fact that he is the owner of cotton property in the South valued while "cotton was king" at $400,000. Of this property a large portion (say 180 negroes) is in the condition of personal estate within the reach of the Confederate power. Under these circumstances Mr. Morehead may if released possibly be a quiet non-combatant but he cannot be loyal until the authority of the United States is established in the State where his property is.

What struck me most in his case was the state of embittered and exasperated feeling growing out of his arrest. If he should go back to Kentucky where he is influential it would be to make unrelenting war upon those who have been the cause of his arrest. In Kentucky I fear he would do mischief. If he is set at liberty I think he would go to his estates in the South. There he would do less harm than elsewhere out of prison. If the rebel authorities value him he would be available as an exchange. Whether they do value him I have no means of judging. I wish by this to direct attention to the probable mischief of so managing his case as to allow him to be at large in Kentucky during the exposed condition of that State.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

FORT WARREN, MASS., Monday, December 2, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.:

I know not, my dear sir, whether a letter from a political prisoner at Fort Warren will ever reach your individual eyes no matter what the cause of complaint may be. The critical condition of my afflicted wife and the wreck of my financial affairs, however, compel me to write this letter whether you read it or not. If I were alone in the world with no suffering wife and helpless children depending upon me I should not trouble you with this letter, but I owe more to them than to myself and worthy of those in whose cause I write truth and candor shall mark my words.

After midnight the 18th of September last Marshal Sneed with his posse came to my residence in Louisville, Ky., and arrested me under a writ issued by a justice of the peace of said city upon the oath of Sneed himself, directing him to take me before the nearest judge having jurisdiction to try me for treason against the United States. Judge Catron, of the Supreme Court, was then in Louisville, but instead of my being taken before him in conformity with the arrest I was hurried into Indiana, thence to Fort Lafayette and finally to this place, where I now am. A writ of habeas corpus was issued by Judge Catron in my behalf while I was in Indiana, but it was disregarded by the marshal and I was hurried on to the destination already named. Marshal Sneed took me from my residence in summer clothes and without a cent of money, and in this condition I was conveyed to New York, without a change of linen and without clothes warm enough to protect me against the cold days and nights that came upon us. My suffering was intense, but it could easily have been prevented by the marshal allowing me to take from home the necessary clothes or money to buy them.

If it was the intention to deal with me as other political prisoners have been dealt with why the farce of a writ from a justice ordering me before the nearest judge for trial? When I arrived at Fort Lafayette September 25 I was compelled to sleep upon a bag of straw half a foot shorter than myself without a pillow or blanket until I could secure endurable bedding from friends in New York. The food given me there was raw pork, tough beef and bread (the bread was good) served upon a board table which the dirty cook swept with the same broom with which he brushed the floor. I had to endure this fare or pay $1 per day for sitting at the table of an officer of the garrison. I preferred feeding upon the miserable fare already named to contributing to the gain of the officer who I believed made a handsome profit from his table, and had horrid food at the U. S. table for the purpose of driving prisoners to his. But had it not been for some articles of food gotten from New York through friends there and at my own expense I could not have stood the fare at Fort Lafayette.

When I left Fort Lafayette I was crowded with some 800 other unfortunates upon a boat utterly incapable of carrying so many persons. The same dirty cook who desecrated the kitchen at Fort Lafayette fed me while on this boat upon hard crackers and raw pork dealt out from his filthy hands. When the boat reached Fort Warren there was no preparation for the prisoners, and had it not been for the blankets brought with me I should have been compelled to sleep upon the naked floor like many other prisoners who had not purchased their own bedding. But things are better here now and I have no cause to complain of the officers or the fare, so marvelous is the improvement upon Fort Lafayette. Nor do I mean to blame Colonel Dimick nor any one here for not being prepared to receive the prisoners when they arrived. I know not who was to blame, and only state the fact that the preparations were worthier of hogs than human beings.

The treatment thus briefly stated would seem to indicate sufficient punishment for one who has been used to decent living and who feels in his own heart at least that he has been guilty of no crime. But this treatment is confined to myself, and if it were all of my case I should not trouble you with this letter. I myself can bear all that has been imposed upon me without writing you a letter of complaint, but I cannot bear the sufferings which these wrongs to me inflict upon my wife and children who are dearer to me than I am to myself. It is for them and not for myself that this appeal is made. When I was arrested my financial affairs were in a condition rendered critical by the dangers of the times, but with my own care there was in them a competency above all my liabilities. In my absence, however, personal and political enemies have taken every advantage of me and at length my little fortune is gone. I am now I fear a bankrupt, and my wife and children are thrown upon the charity of friends. But worst of all the peculiar disposition of my wife renders her incapable of bearing these troubles. I am advised that she is breaking down with her load of grief and now prostrate upon a sick bed. To add an overflowing drop to my cup of bitterness it has been published in the papers at home that my wife had lost her mind, but I have been assured this is not true. I was informed by last night's mail, however, that she is very ill and threatened with brain fever. Of course I fear the worst and suspect that I have not been told all.

And now, my dear sir, does not this narrative, however imperfect and incomplete, show that I have already suffered enough and my poor wife too much from this imprisonment? What let me ask have I done to deserve all this or to make it necessary thus to torture into lunacy or death my poor wife? I myself know of no treason that I have committed against the United States, and I frankly state to you that I never did and do not now design to commit any such crime. I am satisfied, my dear sir, that I was arrested and imprisoned at the instigation of personal and political enemies. The Federal Government in my case has been made a mere tool to work out private hate against me.

I have been informed that I was arrested as editor of The Louisville Courier, a paper that was suppressed the night of my arrest. I was not the editor of that paper, and those who had me arrested knew I was not. I had not been editor of that paper for two years, and if my memory serves me well I had not written an article for it for six months or more until within the last day or two before my arrest. I then wrote a few pieces (three in all, I think) in the absence of the editor and at the request of the proprietor, and in accordance with his views not my own. I shirk no responsibility, however, which what I wrote may involve, but am willing to stand or fall by whatever went from my pen into print. I am not willing, however, to have fixed upon me the articles of others and to be made to suffer for their sins.

And now, my dear sir, will you under these circumstances continue to hold me in prison? If you have any charge against me try me for it or let me out upon bail sufficient to insure my appearance to answer the charge at any time you may appoint. If you have no charge against me let me go, for surely I have suffered enough already for nothing. I make this appeal for my liberty in behalf of my wife on whom my incarceration weighs more heavily than upon myself. If you will not release me I hope you will at least grant me a respite of a month or even three weeks. I will give my word of honor to return here or anywhere you may appoint at the expiration of the time, and if you won't take my word I will give a bond in a sufficient penalty to satisfy you that I ask this respite in good faith. If I had been allowed to converse with my wife when I was arrested I could have reconciled her to my fate, and I think I can yet do so if I am allowed to see her in time.

I also ask this respite in behalf of an infant of whom I am the guardian. Since my imprisonment a suit has been brought in Louisville concerning this guardianship, and as I am now financially ruined this infant must lose heavily if I am not permitted to attend to the case. While I ask no respite for the purpose of attending to my own financial affairs no matter how bad they are I do ask it for the protection of this infant who was left to my care by the will of his father.

I have now, my dear sir, said about all that I can say within the limits of a letter, and possibly I have said too much for my own good. I therefore leave my case with you hoping that you will find time to act upon it at once, so that if I am so fortunate as to get outside of these walls it may not be when it is too late to do the good which I could now most surely accomplish if I were at home.

I am, dear sir, yours, &c.,

R. T. DURRETT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 5, 1861.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

SIR: Let R. T. Durrett, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

I, R. T. Durrett, of Kentucky, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law, hereby stipulating that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State, and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. So help me God.

R. T. DURRETT.

Subscribed and sworn to this 9th day of December, A. D. 1861, before me at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

J. DIMICK,

Colonel Second Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 30, 1861.

Col. J. DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

SIR: Let W. S. [M. W.] Barr, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State, and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

NATIONAL HOTEL, [Washington,] December 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Having already had the honor of speaking with you on the case of the Hon. C. S. Morehead, now imprisoned in Fort Warren by order of the Government, I have no intention of troubling you here with any discussion of its merits. I wish only to submit some suggestions in his behalf and to leave them to your own consideration.

Since Mr. Morehead's arrest in Kentucky two sessions of the Federal court have been held in that State, the one at Frankfort, the other at Louisville. At both extensive inquiries were made by grand juries impaneled for the purpose of treasonable and other offenses against the United States, and many indictments were found. Though the arrest of Mr. Morehead was notorious and must have turned the attention of those juries to him yet they found nothing against him. He protests his innocence of any offense against the United States, and nothing has appeared to contradict his assertion. He is in possession of a large estate in the South, but it is under embarrassments and incumbrances that will in all probability consume it without his personal attention and exertions. His family, and especially his wife, is in deepest distress. He has already suffered a wearisome and painful imprisonment. Everything around him is of a character to make further imprisonment peculiarly calamitous to him. He informs me and I have no doubt truly that his condition requires a surgical operation that cannot be so well submitted to in a prison.

He is of course most anxious to be released from his imprisonment; but anxious as he is he had rather suffer more than to obtain it by taking an oath of allegiance to the United States, because thereby he would in all probability cause the confiscation of his estate in the South. But he is willing if it is required to give his parole to take no part in the present rebellion or war. This would be adding his word of honor to the oath of allegiance that he has often [taken] as Member of Congress and as governor of Kentucky. I have myself but little confidence in terms made under such circumstances. The faithless will make any effort for their liberation. The honorable man would probably feel the obligation imposed on him by an unconditional discharge more effectually and usefully than he would any terms that might be exacted from him. Mr. Morehead I think is one of those upon whom the most liberal and confiding treatment would have the most and best effect.

I hope that you will consider it proper to exact if anything no more than his parole as the condition of his liberation. But if this cannot be granted to him then I ask in his behalf that he may on his parole be permitted to spend the winter in New York where the surgical operation before alluded to can be better attended to. Rather than stay in prison Mr. Morehead would even agree to banish himself to Europe if the Government will grant him his liberty on terms no less onerous.

I regret that this letter is so long, but I beg you to read it and to notify me of your decision as early as possible.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

J. J. CRITTENDEN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 2, 1862.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

COLONEL: You are authorized to discharge C. S. Morehead, a political prisoner at Fort Lafayette, upon his giving his parole in writing that he will not enter the State of Kentucky or any other State where an insurrection may exist against the Government of the United States and that he will do no act and enter into no correspondence adverse to the authority of the Government, and that he will hold himself at the disposition of the Secretary of State of the United States until otherwise directed.

I am, your very obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, January 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I received your letter dated State Department, Washington, January 2, 1862, directing the discharge of C. S. Morehead. I thought it would facilitate your object to transmit the same direct to Colonel Dimick, the commanding officer of Fort Warren, the post to which the prisoner was transferred on the 29th of October in obedience to your orders to that effect. I have accordingly done so and hope it will meet your approbation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

FORT WARREN, January 4, 1862.

D. H. CRAIG, Esq.

DEAR SIR: My release was tendered me yesterday on condition of taking an oath of allegiance and that I would not go to any of the seceded States or correspond with any one therein. I presume I am under obligations to you for this favor and I thank you. It is needless to argue further.

It is plain that the course which you are kind enough to advise me to take and that which I think self-respect and self-interest imperatively command me to follow are so widely apart that there is no middle path. I hold this plain ground: I am a citizen of Kentucky; I have been illegally taken from my State. The power that holds me and proposes terms has no just right to hold me or release me. If I am convicted in a Kentucky court and sentenced the President may pardon me. His power begins and ends there. I think justice will shortly be done me. I have more confidence in the vitality of justice in this country than you seem to have. It will not be necessary for you to answer madam's last letter. She will expect no further assistance from you.

Respectfully,

M. W. BARR.

[Indorsement.]

From what I know of Barr I should say that his past conduct entitles him to expect nothing better than he has received, and I would rather see him hanged than released without conditions.

D. H. C.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, January 6, 1862.

I, C. S. Morehead, prisoner at Fort Warren, do pledge my word of honor that I will not enter the State of Kentucky or any other State where an insurrection may exist against the Government of the United States; that I will do no act or enter into any correspondence adverse to the authority of the United States Government, and that I will hold myself at the disposition of the Secretary of State of the United States until otherwise directed.

C. S. MOREHEAD.

I attest the signature of C. S. Morehead.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: * * * I have also to report that W. S. [M. W.] Barr declines to take the oath of allegiance as required by your letter of December 30.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. DIMICK,

Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

FORT WARREN, *January 9, 1862.*Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I was arrested in Louisville, Ky., on the 19th of September and have been a prisoner since. I was acting as telegraphic correspondent of the New Orleans Associated Press when arrested and am a practical telegrapher. My release has been tendered me on condition of my taking an oath. For reasons aside from political considerations I do not deem it to my interest to take the oath. There are doubtless persons in the South particularly among telegraphic experts who would gladly come North if they had an opportunity to do so. You are aware that telegraphic implements as well as experts are contraband. I would gladly be sent South under any parole proper under the circumstances, the parole to be binding until I have sent North in exchange a person satisfactory to your Department.

Very respectfully,

M. W. BARR.

FORT WARREN, *January 9, 1862.*Hon. ROBERT MALLORY, Member of Congress.

MY DEAR SIR: I have to-day written to Mr. Seward and also to Mr. Crittenden. I wish to be allowed to go South and send North some disaffected telegrapher in exchange. You are aware that that class of persons are not allowed to enlist and I think are not allowed to leave. I might be allowed to go under a special parole. I had hopes of being taken home for trial but am losing hope. I cannot for reasons which will readily suggest themselves to a high-minded gentleman take the oath, and a parole without the privilege of going South would throw me on the world without employment. I am indebted to you for many kind words and feel assured you will add to my obligations by aiding me in this matter. You are aware that I am without means and prison rations are ruining my health. In the name of my wife whom I know you love I appeal to you to have me sent South. Please answer.

Very respectfully,

M. W. BARR.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, January 10, 1862.*J. J. CRITTENDEN, National Hotel, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I ask your pardon for omitting to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo on the subject of Governor Morehead. My intention was to have acknowledged it at once, but handing it to a clerk with directions to prepare an order for the release of the governor the letter was not returned to me, and accidentally through pressing avocations escaped my attention. The governor's release was not accompanied by a condition requiring him to take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

I have the honor to remain, dear sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, *January 28, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to request you to furnish a passport to Richmond, Va., to Mrs. Julia Nicholas Johnston, of Louisville, Ky. She wishes to join her husband, Mr. James Johnston, who resides in Richmond. She informs me that she is willing to take any oath that may be presented.

I also inclose a letter from M. W. Barr, a prisoner in Fort Warren, asking that he be allowed to go South and obtain some person willing to be exchanged for him. He is an expert in telegraphing, and acting in that capacity in Louisville, Ky., in the interest of the so-called Confederate States of America subjected himself to arrest. I regard him as worthless and his detention a useless expense to the Government; and whether he obtains an exchange or not should be released. I ask this of the Secretary of State. If a passport be granted to Mrs. Johnston I wish it inclosed to Maj. Carey H. Fry, U. S. Army, Washington.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. MALLORY.

[Indorsement.]

Acknowledge and tell him Colonel Dimick has been directed to release him on taking oath of allegiance.

[Inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, January 25, 1862.

Hon. ROBERT MALLORY.

DEAR SIR: I wrote you some two weeks since in reference to being sent South in search of some proper person to be exchanged. On the same date I addressed Mr. Seward and Mr. Crittenden. Will you please answer whether there is any prospect of success in this application?

Very respectfully,

M. W. BARR.

DEAR SIR: Some time since I troubled you with a letter asking to be allowed to go South in search of a telegraph operator or newspaper reporter or other person with whom your Department would be satisfied as an exchange. To-day I have again been tendered my release on condition of taking the oath. In the hope that by some mistake the oath has been sent instead of the parole I take the liberty of troubling you again. If impossible to allow me to go South can you consistently allow me to go to Canada to remain during the war?

NEW ORLEANS, January 24, 1862.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

The undersigned composing the Associated Press of New Orleans desire to represent that M. W. Barr, who resided in Louisville, Ky., and who was the telegraphic agent of the Associated Press for the Southern States has been arrested in Louisville whilst in the performance of his duty and is now incarcerated in Fort Warren. No charge has been made by the United States Government against Mr. Barr and he was arrested solely in consequence of his zeal in the cause of the independence of the Southern Confederacy. Mr. Barr has a large family who are dependent upon him for their support. His usefulness to the press of the Confederate States as a telegraphic operator cannot be exaggerated. We beg that you will exert your influence to have Mr. Barr liberated and restored to his family and to his country.

Respectfully submitted.

Cases of Messrs. Gilchrist, Haig and Wyatt.

William Gilchrist was arrested by order of the Secretary of State September 20, 1861, in Philadelphia, Pa., and committed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. Gilchrist was charged with having been an agent of the rebels, supplying them with contraband goods, caps, primers, surgical instruments, &c. The evidence of his guilt was contained in affidavits made by L. C. Baker, Government detective, who representing himself to be an agent of the Southern Confederacy drew from Gilchrist statements to the effect that for nearly three months he had been purchasing contraband goods and shipping them to one Haig at Baltimore to be forwarded to the Confederate States; knew all goods so purchased and forwarded to Haig had been transmitted to said States; that he pointed out several large boxes which he said contained cannon primers, percussion caps, surgical instruments, &c., purchased for said Haig. Letters to and from Gilchrist [were found] showing his suspicious dealings with Haig and others in war materials. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 2, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick to release Gilchrist from custody at Fort Warren, he having been indicted in the U. S. district court for treason at Philadelphia, Pa. He was accordingly released from Fort Warren, and taken into custody by the civil authorities under the indictment aforementioned.

JAMES M. HAIG was arrested by order of the Secretary of State September 21, 1861, in Philadelphia, Pa., and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with having been an agent of the rebels, supplying them with contraband goods, caps, primers, surgical instruments, &c. The evidence of his guilt was contained in the affidavit of L. C. Baker, Government detective, who representing himself to be an agent of the Southern Confederacy drew from one Gilchrist who was concerned with Haig statements that for nearly three months he (Gilchrist) had been purchasing contraband goods and shipping them to Haig at Baltimore to be forwarded to the Confederate States. Numerous letters to and from Haig support the above-mentioned evidence and show his suspicious dealings in war materials. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 26, 1861, directing Marshal Robert Murray to release Haig on the ground of insanity and to deliver him to his friends in New York. Afterward Haig having recovered from his insanity and having applied to be finally released from custody an order was issued from the Department of State dated December 9, 1861, directing General John A. Dix to release him on his taking the oath of allegiance and giving his parole of honor to do no hostile act.

This man [Felix Wyatt] was arrested by order of the Secretary of State September 21, 1861, in Philadelphia, Pa., and committed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. He was charged with having been an agent of the rebels, supplying them with contraband goods, caps, telegraph wire, &c. The evidence of his guilt was contained in the correspondence, bills and memoranda found on his person and premises showing his negotiations for telegraph wire, 6, 12 and 24 pound shot, &c.; also showing his connection with certain parties named Haig and Gilchrist in suspicious dealings in war materials. The said Felix Wyatt remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: My time has been so much taken up with the late important arrests in this city that it has been impossible as yet to make any detailed statements as to the several parties arrested. I have had a long conversation to-day with James M. Haig. He has given me the names of a large number of persons in Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York who are engaged in purchasing and forwarding contraband goods on a large scale. Some of these persons are filling contracts at this time for our Government. There was a company formed composed of leading bankers and merchants for the purchase of $300,000 worth of goods. The steamer is purchased and was to clear for California and run the blockade. George Law, of New York, is in this enterprise. If we can keep the fact of the arrest of the Philadelphia partners quiet for a few days I am confident we can arrest many more. Baltimore seems to be the fountain head of the enterprise. Messrs. Johnston Bros. & Co., bankers of Baltimore, are deeply implicated. They hold a pass from the Secretary of War which enables them to pass to and fro whenever they think proper. This statement I have from Haig and others. We have the most damning proof against the parties now under arrest, having found all their correspondence. I will forward a full statement as soon as time will permit.

* Munson was an assumed name of Col. L. C. Baker, a Government agent. See Gilchrist to Archibald, October 6.

Very respectfully, yours,

L. C. BAKER.

BALTIMORE, September 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Pardon the liberty of an utter stranger in addressing you a few lines. My only excuse is a deep-seated, earnest feeling in behalf of my beloved country. My only object is to give correct information and make a timely warning. I observe by the public prints that James M. Haig, a resident of this city, has been arrested in Philadelphia and transferred to Fort Lafayette charged with treason and rendering aid and comfort to the rebels at the same time he was representing himself a loyal citizen and had a contract with the Government for furnishing hay. I desire to caution you particularly in reference to this man Haig. He is one of the most consummate scoundrels to be found in the whole country, and I wish to say to you do not take any statements whatever in reference to this man's innocence or in mitigation of his offense and thereby grant him his liberty again. Now that you have him hold on to him. No oath of allegiance made by him would be worth one straw. There is abundance of testimony against him, and a vast number of the people of this city would not believe him on his oath. I state this to show the folly of granting him his liberty by his taking the oath of allegiance to our Government. As efforts are being made by some friends of his to obtain for him his liberty let me caution you to listen to no reasons they may offer, no representations they may make whatever, but as you have the scoundrel hold on to him until the end of our unfortunate troubles and then deal with him as he deserves.

In conclusion pardon the liberty I have taken in addressing you these few lines. Continue the good work in the city of Baltimore until every rebel has received his just deserts and made to feel as they deserve the fruits of their ignominious doings.

With sentiments of the highest esteem, I am, my dear sir, very truly, your obedient servant,

H. G. WILSON.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 30, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to my case of imprisonment. I was arrested on the 20th instant in Philadelphia without warrant and incarcerated here without a shadow of charge and certainly without being guilty of any crime against the Government or any infringement of the laws of the United States. I most earnestly beg your consideration and my discharge, and to manifest my loyalty am willing to take any oath to faithfully obey the laws and the Constitution of the United States Government.

Trusting to have the honor of your early reply, I remain, very truly, your most obedient servant,

F. WYATT.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I have been here over a week and have refrained from troubling you, relying on perhaps a misunderstood promise of Marshal Millward, of Philadelphia, and a belief in my mind that my arrest was intended to shield me from the suspicion of being the cause of the arrest of my companions, as the whole of this arrest was evidently premature and caused by the unwise action of Mr. Franklin, Philadelphia detective, and of Mr. Baker (if that is his name), Government detective, interfering with Mr. Millward's plans and way of using me. It is a matter of as deep grief to me that Messrs. Haig and Wyatt should be here as myself, for it never was my intention to lead them into such a situation. My whole object was to learn the plans of Governor Letcher and Jeff. Davis and to get their plans to work through me. I believe if Mr. Millward and I had not been interfered with that we would verily have succeeded, and these gentlemen I should have claimed and did claim as my aids. I have no doubt and can prove I think that I should have ascertained all their secret plans, have been able to point out their resources for at least half a million in money and enabled the Government to strike a heavy blow where it would have been felt. By this interference of detectives that has all been prevented and the barren arrest of three individuals the only result.

I presume that Marshal Millward has sent you a voluntary statement which I made to him in Moyamensing Prison which is a true statement of all I have ever done in this way; and as I presume my case is not by any means the only business you have under consideration I will take the liberty to state concisely my every step, all of which statement can be verified by officers of the Government in Washington or Philadelphia.

First. The only lot of goods I ever bought was perhaps over two months ago and is the lot I referred to in my voluntary statement to Mr. Millward above referred to, and was before any intimation of such goods being forbidden. Baltimore was given, but when I was in New York buying this lot of goods I addressed you from Sweeny's Hotel, New York, saying that I was buying army goods for the Baltimore market on commission, and would not forward the same if instructed by you not to; that I was a British subject, a long time blessed by your Government, having less right to strain your laws than a native born; that I presumed there was nothing wrong in my buying, &c., but that your objection addressed to my office in Philadelphia would be obeyed. I received no reply.

Second. I was assured by Mr. Haig, my Baltimore principal, that these goods were for loyal and legitimate trade. I had no reason to doubt him and did not. In fact I had many reasons to believe that there was a large, profitable and legitimate trade in Baltimore and Washington for these goods. But on being applied to a second time I made up my mind that these goods might be intended for the enemy.

My suspicions were aroused by the amount that was said to be needed and the certainty of such a large amount of money being forthcoming and yet some delays in getting a mere percentage—$200,000 being named and $500 hard to get; also from some memoranda of names, &c., being shown me hailing from Saint Mary's, which I supposed but did not then know was on the Chesapeake. I immediately determined in place of utterly refusing, which I should have done, that the best way I could serve the country of my wife and children was to appear to fall into the plan, get all knowledge of its ramifications for the Government's use, and I set about it in what I thought was the best way, but which eventuated most unfortunately for me.

Third. A friend procured for me a letter of introduction to Mr. Cameron, Secretary of War, from Collector Thomas, of Philadelphia. I tried to get other letters to him, but concluded that as my business was secret the less noise I made about it the better, so did not try very hard. I proceeded to Washington and called at the War Office; could not obtain an interview but was referred by Mr. Scott to General McClellan. Captain Williams, his aide, received me and heard my story. He seemed pleased and interested and spoke encouragingly, and requested me to put it in writing which I did, expressing the desire that I might be allowed to encourage the trade through this channel under full knowledge of the Government, and suggesting as one means that I be allowed to furnish a large order of caps and cannon primers made on purpose, utterly worthless, which could easily have been done, offering my services as the Government's secret agent and suggesting that I should want at least one aid. I returned home and waited some time for a reply. After some days' delay Captain Williams wrote to me (which letter is doubtless among my papers) that the Government had instituted a secret-service department under the head of General Porter and asking permission to hand my letter over to him, which I immediately assented to. Captain Williams in our conversation recognized the delicacy of my proposed operations and the necessity that might arise of my actually operating some.

Fourth. It was some few weeks after this that not hearing from General Porter and being forced to keep up the correspondence and promise of buying goods, that I procured a letter of introduction from General Curran, of Illinois, to Mr. Nicolay, the President's private secretary, to same end. I forwarded this by mail and waited anxiously for a reply which after at least a week's delay reached me stating that my letter, &c., had been handed over to General Porter.

Fifth. Just about now some more goods were wanted and money put in my hands to purchase same ($900), and I was bothered to know how to act. I succeeded in persuading my principal that such goods would be unsafe in Baltimore and suggesting that Philadelphia was the best depot, which agreed with his wishes and plans; being about to undertake some hay contract with the Government so I did not hesitate to spend that money and put the goods in my loft. I intended to write to General Porter as soon as I had the goods referring to my former action above named, and informing him of the goods I had on hand and ask instructions.

Sixth. On my way down to the Mercantile Library to read the afternoon papers I noticed for the first time the sign of U. S. marshal. I was ashamed and surprised that I had never thought of this officer before and that I had been unwise enough to go to Washington when I might have staid home. I called on him early next morning and showed him the only credential I had (Captain Williams' letter), and explained what I had to say. He said that I was just in time; that I had been informed on and that he was glad I had come to him; he would protect me, &c. That evening I received the goods above named and the next morning called at Mr. Millward's house before 8 o'clock and informed him of the fact and in the course of the day showed him the goods, where they laid until the day of my arrest some two weeks perhaps, and perhaps are there yet. The total value of these goods is less than $800 and is reported in the newspapers at $10,000. From that time up to my arrest I reported everything to Mr. Millward, and during his absence to Mr. Franklin as per his request. I proposed a plan to him which involved my going to Richmond and which certainly would have resulted in the discovery of the secret agents of the enemy in Philadelphia and New York and the attaching of certainly a very large amount of money, all of which he has doubtless reported to you. The risk I incurred if discovered in Richmond was certain death, but so confident of success was I that I cheerfully accepted it.

Seventh. The arrests of others that are here have been caused I doubt not by my communication to Captain Williams and my information to Marshal Millward. The plan adopted by the man Baker who decoyed Mr. Haig by the promise of $50,000 of profit was all based on my information, and was grossly mismanaged by him and Mr. Franklin, who evidently desire a reputation for ability they do not possess.

Eighth. For the truth of all these statements, without calling particular attention of any one to any one part, I beg to refer to Assistant Secretary of War Scott; Captain Williams, aide to General McClellan; Mr. Nicolay, His Excellency the President's private secretary; Rev. George Collins, Baxter's Fire Zouaves, all in Washington; to Mr. Robert Wade, William Knight and Edwin Clinton, merchants of Philadelphia; also to Mr. Kettle, 802 North Nineteenth street, Philadelphia, and my wife. None may perhaps know of this plan in detail (in fact none do) except Captain Williams and Marshal Millward, but each will be able on reading this to point out some place they can corroborate.

Ninth. Marshal Millward has hinted a complaint that I was not acting fairly by him, but has not specified; but Mr. Franklin complains that I sent down a box of cannon primers to Baltimore the day before I called on Marshal Millward. This is true; but, first, I had, as Captain Williams and I talked it, to appear to fall into the business; second, I sent the goods to a new and wealthy house, F. W. Bennett & Co., who might be the enemy's agent; third, I could and would have telegraphed the Government in time to prevent their leaving Baltimore. Such was my intention if I failed to have Mr. Haig order them back; and fourth, I persuaded him to so order them back the first thing next morning and it was done. I sent the box to Adams Express under a fictitious name which Mr. Franklin complains of, but this was done to show my principal how cautious I was, for with my supposed relations with the Government there was surely no such necessity and doubtless any other seemingly disloyal acts are as easily explained.

Tenth. As I have never been naturalized or voted my opinions on the questions of the day can be of but little importance. I should have more contempt for an American who would forswear his country than for any other man, but for any one to do so is in my opinion on a par with forswearing one's mother. I have no great faith in republican institutions being very much an admirer of Alison as expressed in his History of Europe. Consequently my notions of political economy are anti-American, yet as a resident here, as the husband of a Yankee wife and father of American children I have never known a disloyal feeling to the Government and expecting to spend my days under it have been ready and willing to do my share toward its support. I offered it my son as a petty officer in the navy or assistant surgeon in the army for both of which he is competent, and had I seen an opening for my services would gladly have offered them. I have never wanted in love and loyalty to the Government, only faith that it was fit for mortals. Between the North and the South I have thought that the rebels had the best of the letter of the law and the North of the spirit, and I have only complained that our Government did not use stronger means and put the whole land under martial law. My residence here has strengthened that regret.

I declare solemnly before God, my maker, that all above stated is true and that I never meant to help the enemy the value of a wish and would be happy to swear to the truth of all here stated.

Eleventh. I am willing and desire to serve the Government. I am reputed to be and (without egotism) am very smart and intelligent. I would not be willing to enter the ranks of the army for I could not support my family at it. I have had some military experience and been under fire in Canada during the rebellion over twenty years ago, and every one who knows me will say that I am cool, brave and accustomed to manage men. I have an idea that I can now be turned to large advantage of the Government in consequence of this imprisonment and would court a chance of personally explaining. My wife's brother is General Cox, of the Kanawha division, under whom with a Colonel Baxter, of Philadelphia Fire Zouaves, I would like to be it in a military capacity. I ask the liberty of reporting myself at Washington and in half an hour's conversation I pledge myself to prove my innocence and to suggest an employment and a duty that you will certainly desire me to perform. If not, your wish that I shall remain at Fort Lafayette shall be my law. I beg to repeat that my companions being here is my most painful thought.

May I beg an intimation of your intentions toward me. I have aimed to say no unnecessary word and this is as short as I can write. My family, used to be comfortably taken care of, are penniless almost and unprotected. I can't believe your design is to inflict unnecessary injury and regret the trouble my inexperience has undoubtedly already given you and pray for the success of your cause.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM GILCHRIST.

P. S.—I understand that my friend Mr. Wyatt's friends have proceeded to Washington with good prospects of effecting his release. The officers in Philadelphia made unnecessary remarks to him implicating me in his arrest. May I beg that you will order that such information as I have furnished may be confidential, so that I may have no enemy unnecessarily made.

W. G.

FORT MCHENRY, October 2, 1861.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

MY DEAR SIR: Mrs. Haig, the wife of Mr. Haig who is incarcerated at Fort Lafayette, is desirous of seeing you in regard to her husband, who was arrested for carrying on a trade in contraband articles with the Confederate States. There is no doubt of the fact, as several lots of valuable goods have been taken and confiscated. I suppose the question will be—assuming that he has had pecuniary profit alone in view and has not only signally failed but been a serious loser—what should be the extent of his incarceration.

Begging to commend Mrs. Haig to your kind consideration, whatever you may think proper to do with her husband, I am, very truly, yours,
JOHN A. DIX.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 5, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of calling your attention to my case, as I understand that I am confined by your order in this garrison. I beg here to state that I have committed no offense against the United States Government; that I am a naturalized citizen, having resided in the city of Baltimore since I was fourteen years of age and am now thirty-five, and have always been as far as I know a good, peaceable citizen, and have supported the laws and all the institutions of my adopted country.

I am charged I understand with giving aid and comfort to the enemy. I beg leave to state that I have never bought, sold or delivered any goods to the Southern States since the war or to any of its agents or to the rebels, I knowing them to be such. I keep a store in Baltimore and do not know many of my customers, as my goods are always sold for cash, and I purchase the most of the goods I sell in Philadelphia and New York, where I have been dealing these twenty years. If I am selling any goods that the Government is opposed to my selling I will give my word of honor to sell no more of such goods that the Government is opposed to. It is true I was called upon by a person who I afterward found was a Government detective and applied to to purchase goods, but I will here most solemnly assert that I never purchased, sold or delivered any goods to said agent or even priced any goods for the said Government detective, and had he not called upon me I should not have been confined in this fort.

I think it is a very hard case for me that the Government should have offered me a commission of 25 per cent. on $200,000 through its detective and then arrest me for it and take me away from my business and family. I should never have thought of such a thing had the Government detective not called upon me.

I am perfectly willing to take the oath prescribed by the Government to support the Government and obey its laws, and sincerely hope you will grant me my release from here so I can go home, be with my wife and helpless children and be able to attend to my business which is suffering by my absence. I am willing to give bond to the Government if they will give me my release on my parole of honor to stand my trial whenever called upon by the Government to do so. I will give bond in the city of Baltimore where I am best known.

Hoping, my dear sir, you will give my case a favorable consideration and allow me to return to my business and my family, who are suffering severely from my detention here (I have just received a letter from my wife in which she states that she is very ill); if you will grant me my release either by giving bond or on parole of honor to stand my trial at any time the Government may appoint to try my case, or grant me my release by taking the oath to support the Government which I will cheerfully do I shall feel under lasting obligations to you, and so will also my wife and infant children.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES M. HAIG.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *October 6, 1861.*E. M. ARCHIBALD, Esq., British Consul, New York.

DEAR SIR: I am a native of Canada, the son of a British soldier; have been a resident of the United States about twenty-three years; have never been naturalized or declared my intention of becoming an American citizen. Mr. W. H. Duane, 58 Maiden Lane, can assure you of above facts as much as anybody I know of. I have written him to call upon you, and if it is not objectionable would be very much obliged if you would allow him to read this letter.

I was arrested in Philadelphia (where I reside to do business) on 20th of September and brought here Monday morning, 23d. A monstrous invention, purporting to be an account of my case, was published in New York Herald, 24th. I was reluctant to trouble you, as I thought that the Government would release me without and had been led to suppose so by the officers who arrested me. So after waiting a week I directed a letter to Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, at Washington, on October 1. Not having received any reply I now appeal to you, and beg in as concise a way as I can to submit all the facts in my case, premising, however, that I have never had any distinct charge made against me; that I was in Philadelphia prevented from holding communication with any one; was refused counsel or appeal to British consul, and that a young man in my office was kept in prison as I was informed merely for having my card case which contained my consul's certificate, which I suppose he was carrying to my attorney. The U. S. marshal showed me this certificate in his own possession; refused to give it up to me, so that he had every reason to know that I was a British subject.

I had been thrown out of business by these troubles, was comparatively idle when some two or three months ago I was offered a commission for buying India-rubber overcoats, blankets, &c., Colt's pistols, percussion-caps, army cloth and other army goods by a merchant of Baltimore who was not familiar with the trade (Mr. James M. Haig). He told me there was a good demand for such goods in his place and in Washington and assured me they were for no disunion purpose but for a legitimate Union trade, which to me seemed very plausible, and I undertook the commission and came to New York to buy the goods, which I could not get in Philadelphia.

Up to this date (which I cannot state) I had heard of no prohibition of forwarding any kind of goods to Baltimore; had heard of some pistols having been stopped in New York but immediately sent on again, but still when there in New York I wrote to Secretary Seward from Sweeny's Hotel that I had a commission to buy army goods for a Baltimore house which I was then executing and which I would fill and forward if he did not advise me to the contrary and gave him my Philadelphia address. I got no answer and bought and forwarded goods to the value I think of $3,700. I am since assured by Mr. Haig that these goods were all sold in a legitimate and proper manner and that he really wanted them for Union purposes. However, that trade was finished and is I believe a loyal one to say the least or worst of it.

Some time after this same gentleman proposed I should buy more for him and from the magnitude of his talk and some memoranda I concluded that the trade was illegitimate. I ought to have stopped here but judging that this proposition was actually from headquarters in the Confederate authorities I foolishly deemed that I could be of service to the Government by encouraging it. Consequently I did not refuse the commission and ordered goods to the value of about $2,400. For reasons which appear hereafter I never filled this order or received the goods. I immediately procured a letter of introduction to Secretary of War Cameron and went to Washington to see him; could not but was referred to General McClellan whose aide, Captain Williams, received me and heard my story and my offer to enter the secret service of the United States in this matter looking to the encouraging of the Confederate supplies being ordered through me and my agents by which I intended to protect Mr. Haig. Captain Williams gave me an audience of over an hour; was pleased with my suggestions, acknowledged the importance of the movement, &c., and requested me to reduce all to writing which I did in a letter to him and left for home. After waiting quiet some time I received a letter from Captain Williams stating that General Porter had been appointed chief of a secret service department and asking permission to hand my letter over to him which I by return mail acceded to. I received no word from General Porter, in consequence of which I got rid of the filling of the $2,400 [order for] goods above named. I made one more attempt to get at the Government by getting a letter of introduction to Mr. Nicolay, the President's private secretary. I forwarded the same to him by mail saying what I wished and after perhaps a week's delay received answer from him that he had handed my letter, &c., to General Porter with his recommendation, and here my efforts to get service from Washington ceased, still being in daily expectation of hearing from General Porter.

Again I was asked by same party to buy more goods, and acting under Captain Williams' advice I still held on and then called on the U. S. marshal in Philadelphia, telling him all up to then and asking his advice. He astonished me by saying that I had been informed on; that he was glad I had called and that he would protect me; to go ahead and buy the goods, keeping him advised of all. Consequently I bought about $700 or $800 worth of goods, put them in my loft, and as they came in immediately informed him, showed bills, &c. This is the amount of goods reported in The Herald as of value of $10,000. Marshal Millward entered into our plans, but here another actor came on in person of Mr. Benjamin Franklin, Philadelphia city detective, who was acting independent of the United States. He claimed that he was after me and conjointly with Marshal Millward entered into our confidence. This $700 or $800 of goods I of course held in Philadelphia, having satisfied Mr. Haig to that end.

At this time, perhaps two weeks after my calling on Marshal Millward, a Government detective called Munson, alias Baker, went to Baltimore and under the former name sent for Mr. Haig to call on him at Barnum's Hotel. He called and then was offered $50,000 for buying $200,000 of army goods for the Confederates, showing as his credentials letters from several of the Southern dignitaries. Mr. Haig fell into his trap and came on with him to Philadelphia; called on me and I agreed to buy what goods he wanted up to $200,000 and forward same to Philadelphia, no more, for $1,000. He left me with that bargain to call with this detective on a friend who knew the signers of these credentials and did not again call on me. The next morning the same detective called on me and introduced himself as Mr. Munson for whom I was to buy goods, and showed me credentials which I did not read further than to see they were signed by R. Toombs, Walker and others whose names only were familiar. I declined acting as his or their agent; said I was retained by Mr. Haig and no higher commission would tempt me, an introduction or credentials from Mr. Haig being what I wanted. He said Mr. Haig had been telegraphically called to Baltimore but his friend Mr. Wyatt could assure me he was his messenger. I walked with him to Mr. Wyatt's office and he assured me that Mr. Munson was all right and we came away after arranging that such goods as I bought should be forwarded to Mr. Wyatt's store and address. He then wanted me to go right ahead and buy goods which I was willing to do on receipt of the money. He said he would give me $6,200 at 4 p. m., but finally agreed to give me $25,000 at 11 a. m. so that I could go to Hartford that day, and left me about 10.30 a. m.

I immediately reported myself at U. S. marshal's office, who the day previous was at Washington and at whose dwelling I had called early in the morning, to inform him of all these circumstances and then told him all that had transpired; how that this man Munson claimed to have $200,000 at Adams Express and was to give me $25,000, seeking his instructions whether I should spend the money or not, and in his office after some little humbugging he arrested me. I shall complain of nothing since as that is the act causing all the rest.

The whole of this being necessarily a secret business these facts cannot be proved in detail but they can be circumstantially substantiated by Robert Wade and William W. Knight, of Philadelphia; also E. Chnton, L. A. Kettle and my wife, same place; by Rev. George Collins, chaplain to Baxter's Fire Zouaves; by Captain Williams, aide to General McClellan, and Mr. Nicolay, President's private secretary, all in Washington. The substance of the above I have written to Mr. Seward.

Allow me to add apologetically—first, that my wife and children are Americans and that I deemed it a privilege to do their Government a service which I believed I had the opportunity and qualification for; second, that my object was not mercenary. Marshal Millward and Mr. Franklin both suggested to me that as an informer I was entitled to half the property and so did Captain Williams. To each I distinctly said that I would rather be in employ of the United States which would prevent this, and said I did not do this for money. Furthermore I am the most pained at the arrest of Mr. Haig and Mr. Wyatt, having the appearance of being brought about by my treachery, which was the farthest from my thoughts and intentions. The officers in Philadelphia did not scruple to insinuate this to these men. I could explain all these things to you better if you could call on me.

I am very sorry to trouble you with such a long letter and repeat that I would be much obliged if you would allow Mr. Duane to read this and also Captain Brainard, harbor master of New York, who is an uncle of my wife and whose good opinion I would like to have.

Again apologizing for this long communication and begging you will assist me, I remain, sir, yours, very respectfully,

WILLIAM GILCHRIST.

OCTOBER 8, 1861.

F. Wyatt was arrested in Philadelphia in September for sending supplies to the South. I know him well and I have no doubt that the Government got the right man. He is a Virginian, I think from Richmond, brought up by Jos. R. Anderson, Tredegar Iron Works. He spent the winter of 1859-'60 in traveling through the South spreading the tale that M. W. Baldwin and Mr. Whitney were abolitionists and ought not to receive orders from "true-hearted Southerners." I met him there. He tried by talking against the South to draw me in also but he failed.

W. H. SEWARD:

Has Gilchrist been released yet? If so, when? It is important for me to know as he may leave for Canada without coming to this city. The warrant for his arrest is ready.

L. C. BAKER.

L. C. Baker being duly sworn according to law deposes and says: That he called at the place of business of William Gilchrist in Commerce street, Philadelphia, on the 19th day of September, 1861, and had a conversation with him then and there. This deponent said to the said Gilchrist that he had been sent by one James M. Haig to say to the said Gilchrist that he (Haig) could not keep his appointment to meet him that morning, to wit, the 19th day of September, as he was compelled to go to Baltimore, and this deponent was the person who had been mentioned by the said Haig to him (Gilchrist) as the agent of the Southern Confederacy. The said Gilchrist at first hesitated to communicate freely with this deponent, but upon showing him certain letters purporting to have been signed by one Howell Cobb, Robert Toombs and L. P. Walker, indorsing this deponent as the authorized agent of the Southern Confederacy to act in their behalf in the purchase of goods, the said Gilchrist communicated and talked with this deponent freely and stated that he had been an agent for the purchase of contraband goods for nearly three months, and that he has been shipping the said contraband goods to the said Haig for the purpose of being transported from Baltimore to the States of the so-called Southern Confederacy. The said Gilchrist further said at the time and place aforesaid that in consequence of the immense profit made by the said Haig in and from the sale of the said contraband goods he (Gilchrist) would not supply any more of the said goods at a less price than 25 per cent. commission on the purchases made here in the city of Philadelphia, 10 per cent. commission being the compensation agreed upon between the said Haig and him (Gilchrist) for the said purchases; that he (Gilchrist) was satisfied he was being watched by Lincoln's detectives, and that he was not willing to take his chances of being sent to Fort Lafayette for the price of 10 per cent. on the value of the goods which he might send to the said Haig, but proposed to this deponent to purchase all the goods which this deponent needed for the said Southern Confederacy at the commission of 25 per cent.

This deponent then asked the said Gilchrist if he had any contraband goods on hand for sale. He replied that he had some goods intended for Haig but that he considered them his (Gilchrist's) until Haig had paid him, but he proposed to sell them to this deponent for cash down and said that he would buy others for Haig. This deponent then asked Gilchrist to show him the goods to which he referred and he pointed out certain large boxes containing as the said Gilchrist said cannon primers, percussion-caps and surgical instruments. The said Gilchrist seemed very desirous to close the trade immediately. The said Gilchrist further stated to this deponent that he was a British subject and ran less risk in engaging in this service than an American citizen, as in case he got in any difficulty he could claim British protection. The said Gilchrist further stated explicitly to this deponent that he had sent goods as the agent of the said Haig to Baltimore which he knew had been transmitted to the States of the said Southern Confederacy by the said Haig. That the said Gilchrist further said that all the goods which he had sent to the said Haig and which had been transported to the States of the said Southern Confederacy were sent by him (Gilchrist) for the purpose of transportation to the said States by the said Haig. That the said Gilchrist believed that this deponent was at the time of said conversation an agent duly authorized to buy goods for the said Southern Confederacy. This deponent therefore charges the said Gilchrist with treason, in this, that he did levy war against the United States and did give aid and comfort to their enemies contrary to the act of Congress.

WASHINGTON, October 17, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

Your petitioner, Thomas H. Maddox, of said city, has been requested by James M. Haig, of Baltimore, and by F. Wyatt, of Philadelphia, now confined as prisoners at Fort Lafayette, in the harbor of New York, and fully authorized by them respectively to present to the Government their application for a release, and in pursuance thereof he makes the following statement in their names:

Said Haig is a merchant in said city of Baltimore and as such dealt extensively for various articles in his line of business with merchants and others in Philadelphia among whom was included said Wyatt. On a visit of business to Philadelphia in September last he was engaged in making various selections and purchases of stock and was engaged in the same with said Wyatt when they were both arrested and ordered into confinement as above stated. They were not informed of the cause of the arrest and can only conjecture that it was based on a belief that the stock negotiated between them for transportation to Baltimore by said Haig was intended ultimately to be sent for sale into some one of the seceded States. Said Wyatt declares that he knew of no such design on the part of Haig and that he does not believe any such design existed. Said Haig for himself declares that he is entirely innocent of any such intention, and avers that all and every article which he purchased or designed purchasing was solely intended for the Maryland market in his usual course of business at Baltimore.

They appeal to the justice of the Government as well as to its lenity. They are men of families who need their protection and presence. They are engaged in business and are suffering heavy losses and injuries by being thus cut off from its management. They are innocent of all offense against the law. They are willing to show their loyalty to the Government by taking the oath of allegiance and by giving their parole. They respectfully petition to be released from confinement.

T. H. MADDOX,
Counsel for Petitioners.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 20, 1861.

Hon. A. LINCOLN,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

MR. PRESIDENT: I desire most respectfully to call your attention to my imprisonment and beg most earnestly your kind consideration of my case. On the 20th of September (one month to-day) I was arrested in Philadelphia and without notice taken from my family and brought here and incarcerated. By this procedure I was deprived of a situation by which I was enabled to support my family, who are left entirely without means and at the mercy of a cold and uncharitable world, having no relations to whom they could look in an emergency like this for support.

On the day of my arrest I asked permission to procure counsel which was refused me, and on making inquiry as to the cause of my arrest was informed that I was arrested on suspicion and would be held prisoner upon the same grounds. The officers took possession of my house, grossly insulted and maltreated the female portion of my family, removed everything portable to a distant part of the city, broke locks of the furniture in the house, indiscriminately scattering the contents over the floors, and committed sundry other high-handed and unwarrantable acts, which I well know when brought to your attention would meet your just condemnation.

I am and have ever been a firm supporter of the Union which thousands of persons can attest, and have advocated that cause both by talking and writing. I have never at any time or under any circumstances given aid to the rebels, either directly or indirectly. Being a Southern man by birth, and refusing to return to my native State (at the earnest solicitation of all my relatives) when this rebellion broke out, I am disfranchised by them and now incarcerated by those with whom I have acted, and for whom in this bold strike for liberty and Union I boldly combatted against the high-handed measures of secession and disruption of the Government. I am informed of the sickness of my family and now have no recourse left but your just clemency, and beg you in behalf of my family that you will order my speedy release so that I may join my family.

I am willing further to attest my loyalty (if doubted) by taking the oath to support the Constitution and laws of the United States Government and in no way to hold intercourse with persons in the seceded States.

I have the honor, dear sir, to be, your most obedient servant,
F. WYATT.

DEAR SIR: I notice a paragraph in the morning prints of this city to the effect that a certain James M. Haig, who was arrested some time since and placed in Fort Lafayette on the charge of treason to our Government, had become a raving maniac and his release from confinement directed by your orders. I beg that you will pardon me for annoying you about this matter when I am so well aware that you are already overtaxed with business and I trust you will not deem it impertinent in me in addressing you. My only object is to guard the Government against deception.

This man Haig is by birth an Englishman but for the past thirty years or thereabouts has been a resident of this city, and is one of the most consummate rascals that ever walked the streets of our city, ready and willing at all times to do anything for money. There is no scheme of villainy but that he is ready to join in and lend a willing hand for gain, and he has been remarkably successful in managing to evade the clutches of the law in all his nefarious operations. He is a scheming, artful villain, and I have no doubt whatever that his insanity is altogether feigned. Take care now that he don't cheat you. He knows well how to act and carry out any purpose that he adopts and is fully competent to play the maniac to perfection. I warn you against this man. He deserves punishment and has no claim whatever for clemency. I should regret to see any injustice done him and I am far from desiring anything of that sort. I have learned to know that vengeance is with the Lord. He will in His own good time and His way punish all these traitors, and His ways are past finding out. It is only the baneful influence of Haig's liberty that I fear. Traitors here will be emboldened by finding a man like Haig released. None here for one moment believe anything else but that his insanity is altogether feigned. Take care, my dear sir, that you are not deceived in this matter.

With considerations of the highest order, I am, my dear sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WILSON.

1902 MOUNT VERNON STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

RESPECTED SIR: Will you be pleased to spare a few moments of your valuable time to listen to the plea of a desolate wife? My husband, William Gilchrist, was arrested on the 20th of September and sent to Fort Lafayette, where he now is. In having him removed from us myself and four children are suddenly deprived of all means of support and know not how to get through the coming winter. I, my children and nearly all my family are native-born and loyal citizens, General Cox, now in Western Virginia, being my brother, who would sacrifice every earthly thing for our dear country at this time, and I cannot believe that my husband is guilty of the accusation against him or that the cause of justice or of the Union will be in the least injured by his release. If it be possible to restore him to his family pray do so and receive the lasting gratitude of one who would not wish to be made happy at the expense of her country's honor.

Very respectfully,

REDELIA A. GILCHRIST.

SIR: Let William Gilchrist, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. I can do this in Washington easily, and have a hearty desire to spare the Government any trouble on my account. I do not believe any injustice is meant me. I do not wish to trouble you with long letters or the courts with trials but wish to put myself unreservedly in your hands.

Memorandum in reply to that of Lord Lyons of the 9th instant in regard to political prisoners alleged to be British subjects.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 11, 1861.

William Gilchrist.—Released from Fort Warren on the 6th of November by order of the Secretary of State. He was rearrested on the same day on a warrant issued out of the court in Pennsylvania. He has been indicted for treasonable practices and his case is now undergoing judicial investigation. If innocent he will be acquitted.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, November 20, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I learn from the U. S. marshal for this district that he transmitted to the State Department all letters and papers found in the possession of the man Gilchrist at the time he was apprehended for treasonable practices against the United States. I will be compelled to make use of those documents in the progress of the case which is being prepared against that person, and if you have no further use for them I will be obliged to you if you would direct them to be sent to the district attorney. The papers were sent to the State Department in connection with those of some other parties supposed to be implicated with Gilchrist in his treason, and it would probably be better to send them all if they are no longer of use to you.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Assistant U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia, Pa.

SIR: Your letter of the 20th instant has been received. The cases of William Gilchrist, James M. Haig and F. Wyatt are being investigated and the papers and letters found upon these parties are for the present needed at this Department. If it should be necessary to the proper preparation of the case you are prosecuting against Gilchrist that the papers be sent to you before the 1st proximo you will please so inform me; otherwise all the papers in the case will be forwarded to you about that time.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a list of prisoners of state, mentioning the time of arrival here, also the date according to their own account of confinement and their residence. I beg to mention the case of Mr. F. Wyatt, of Philadelphia. Though a stranger to me his appearance of ill health led me to ask him some questions. In conclusion he said he was willing to take the oath of allegiance with the usual stipulations required of all those who have been released. I learn that he has a family in Pennsylvania. * * *

SIR: I have appointed Tuesday next, 4 p. m., for a preliminary hearing in the cause of the United States against William Gilchrist. I do not think that the papers relating to that case which were in the possession of your Department will be necessary for the purposes of that hearing. I wish, however, to examine them before preparing the indictment. If they can be transmitted to me conveniently in a few weeks from the present time it will be all that I desire.

HON. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington City.

SIR: I have been retained by William Gilchrist as his counsel in the matter of the charge of treason against him in the U. S. circuit court for this district. He informs me that there are several important papers now in your office which bear upon his defense. I herewith inclose a memorandum of them and would respectfully ask that they be placed in my hands or in those of J. Hubley Ashton, esq., the attorney of the United States in this city, or in those of some one else with directions to permit access to them by Mr. Gilchrist or his counsel. I make this application with the more freedom as your long experience at the bar will enable you to appreciate the propriety of the request. An early answer will oblige,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN C. BULLITT.

Memorandum of papers made by William Gilchrist.

My letter to Secretary W. H. Seward from Sweeny's Hotel, New York, informing him that I was commissioned to buy army goods for a merchant in Baltimore, as he assured me and I believed for strictly legal trade, declaring that I was not a citizen and therefore he had no right to strain the laws, requesting that if my purchasing these goods was contrary to the wishes of the Government to be so informed by letter addressed to me at my office, Philadelphia, and promising to obey any wish expressed in such advice.

Captain Williams' letter to me, written perhaps some two weeks after, asking permission to lay my letter before General Porter. This letter has been sent with my papers, &c., to Washington by order of Secretary Seward.

Mr. Nicolay's answer to my letter dated early in September stating that he had handed General Curran's and my letter to General Porter with his recommendation. This has also been sent to Washington by Marshal Millward.

A press-copy book of letters written by me in course of my business.

A note case containing a few business memoranda, &c.

The possession of my press-copy book and note case or even access to them would enable me to give dates and otherwise refresh my memory greatly to my assistance. They have been sent to Washington by Marshal Millward.

BOSTON, January 9, 1862.

HON. CHARLES SUMNER, Washington.

DEAR SIR: My faith in your justice and humanity impels me to ask your attention to the case of my friend Mr. F. Wyatt, of Philadelphia, now imprisoned at Fort Warren by order of the Secretary of State. The inclosed extract of a recent letter received by me from Mr. Wyatt will make you familiar with the particulars thereof. I am aware that the prisoners at Fort Warren have been informed that any effort to effect their release through the influence of outside parties would be fruitless and prejudicial, and that they were directed to apply directly to the State Department. Mr. Wyatt complied with this order by twice addressing Mr. Seward and writing once to the President* without reply in either case, although his communications contained a detailed statement of his case, including the time and manner of his arrest as set forth in the inclosed extract. I have no doubt whatever of the accuracy of my friend's statements, and I have no hesitation in denouncing his imprisonment as an arbitrary and outrageous exercise of power unworthy a Christian nation. I doubt often that we are a Christian people. If we are we deserve the chastisement of God.

I should be gratified (and grateful too) if you would present Mr. Wyatt's case to the notice of Mr. Seward. He is in feeble health and moreover unless he can personally attend to his private affairs they will be involved in irretrievable ruin. If Mr. Seward refuse to release Mr. Wyatt unconditionally he may be willing to release him for thirty or sixty days on parole during which time he will if allowed visit Washington to attend to his cause in person. He says he is certain of being successful with Mr. Seward if he can only have an opportunity of conversing with him. You will, however, pardon my application to you. I know of no one else to hope aid from for my oppressed and suffering friend. God forbid that I should regard myself as a citizen of any nation in which for no sufficient reason—upon mere suspicion only—my fellow-man can be deprived of his liberty without trial, without appeal, without hope itself, to the sacrifice of his health and all his material, domestic and personal interests.

With great regard, dear sir, your constituent,

JOSEPH F. MORTON.

P. S.—I had some correspondence with you directly after you delivered your Worcester speech. Mr. Wyatt is perfectly willing to take the oath of allegiance.

[Inclosure.]

On the 20th day of September, 1861, I was arrested in Philadelphia by the U. S. marshal upon an order from the Secretary of State. When asked for the charges against me the only reply was that I was arrested on suspicion of holding correspondence with persons in the seceded States, to which charge up to the 1st of May I plead guilty as I wrote and received letters from my brothers and sisters in Virginia but from no other source. I was thrown into the miserable felon's prison at Philadelphia, refused counsel or communication with any friend, and from thence removed to Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. While in prison at Philadelphia the detectives ransacked my rooms, broke locks off furniture which happened to offer any resistance and removed every portable article (even my portrait which hung up in my parlor) to a distant part of the city, abstracting from my trunk a small sum of money which I had placed there to cancel a small debt nearly due at the time, and when requesting a return of the amount was told if I would give up the diamond breastpin I wore and a watch in my pocket the sum of money would be given up. This remark was made by the U. S. marshal and an ex-Member of Congress of the United States.

Since my arrest I do most solemnly assure you that I am as ignorant of the charges against me as you are, though I have asked for them again and again. I have signified my willingness for a trial or to accept my release on parole not to go south of Baltimore or Washington, and to hold myself ready for trial whenever called upon.

with your reply. If I erred in doing this I beg to apologize and to ask the favor of your prescribing the correct course to be pursued to effect the liberation of my friend whose health is in a precarious state and whose material interests will be seriously injured if not totally ruined by protracted confinement in prison.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, February 1, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that William Gilchrist who is charged with high treason was on yesterday morning remanded for trial after a somewhat prolonged examination of his case upon a writ of habeas corpus. Upon the argument of the cause the learned judge of the district court expressed a very decided opinion that the difficulty of prosecuting him successfully for high treason was very great, the difficulty growing out of the constitutional requirements as to the evidence on a trial for this crime. The overt act must be proved by the testimony of at least two witnesses, and confessions not made in open court cannot be given in evidence against the defendant. The larger portion of the testimony upon which the Government relies in this case consists of the prisoner's own declarations or admissions. And while upon a preliminary hearing such as has just taken place, the rule of law permits the confessions of a party charged with treason to be given in evidence it is more than questionable whether much of that species of testimony which was so potent on the hearing of the habeas corpus will not be entirely rejected when the case comes before a traverse jury.

There is a late act of Congress (that of July 31, 1861) under which a prosecution may well be based against the defendant. The charge would be conspiring to levy war against the United States. That offense is a misdemeanor under the statute. If the Government should elect to send a bill to the grand jury for that crime the difficulties which would be encountered in a prosecution for treason would be avoided. Inasmuch as the case has been before your Department I would like an expression of opinion if it be agreeable to you upon the propriety of electing to prosecute for the lesser offense. I am of opinion that it would be inadvisable to indict the prisoner for treason unless the Government should be confident of meeting fully the requirements of the Constitution and of the act of 1790 as to the testimony upon the trial.

I have the honor to be, with all submission, your obedient servant,

GEO. A. COFFEY,

U. S. Attorney.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: The case of William Gilchrist under writ of habeas corpus was decided before Judge Cadwalader last evening. The judge remarked upon giving his decision that the prisoner or counsel for the defendant could expect no favors at the hands of the Government as it was a case in which the neck of the prisoner was in danger. Gilchrist was affected to tears and says he has never before realized his real condition. It is now only necessary to go before the grand jury with our witnesses for an indictment. In the meantime what shall be done with the prisoner? I am much afraid he will escape from the local authorities and when wanted will be non est

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia, Pa.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant relative to the case of William Gilchrist. In reply I am directed by the Secretary of State to say that if in your judgment a conviction is more certain on an indictment for the lesser crime than that of conspiracy to levy war against the Government of the United States he would advise a prosecution therefor. Mr. Felix Wyatt was engaged in the same proceedings with Gilchrist and I am directed to suggest to you the propriety of his indictment and prosecution for the same offense. He is at present confined at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, February 5, 1862.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant relative to the prosecution against Gilchrist. The view of the district judge in regard to his case is a very just one. He thinks that Gilchrist is not a man whom it would be safe or prudent to permit to go at liberty but that it would be extremely difficult upon technical grounds to convict him of high treason. The learned judge therefore said that if the defendant's counsel pressed the Government to trial upon the indictment for conspiracy in case that form of prosecution should be adopted he would be bound to give the United States an opportunity to send a bill to the grand jury for high treason. The probability is that I will send up a bill for conspiracy to levy war, and if we should be forced to try I will have an opportunity to present an indictment for the greater offense.

DEBTORS' APARTMENTS, MOYAMENSING PRISON,
February 23, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON.

DEAR SIR: On the 13th of August last I called at the War Office with a letter of introduction to Hon. Simon Cameron. I could not obtain an audience, but in writing a note stating the nature of my business Assistant Secretary Scott referred me to General McClellan and I had an interview with Captain Williams, his aide. At his request I embodied in a letter written to him from Brown's Hotel that day my anticipated ability to discover and control the channel of Governor Letcher's and Jeff. Davis' supplies of contraband goods. Captain Williams encouraged my plans and I came home. His promised correspondence was postponed, and I wrote on same subject to Mr. Nicolay. Both of these gentlemen referred my letters to General Porter, in whose hands they doubtless are, and from whom I expected communications but received none.

In consequence of being forced to keep my strategy alive I was implicated with the real offenders, and on 20th of September was arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette along with James M. Haig, of Baltimore, and F. Wyatt, of this city. Mr. Haig was discharged, temporarily insane, on 26th of October and Mr. Wyatt under your proclamation of amnesty of 22d instant.* I am held in custody of the U. S. marshal here and have been now a prisoner over five months, and my present object is to beg that you will extend your amnesty to my case. My family are impoverished and suffering and all concerned with me have been released. I should prefer being sent to Fort Lafayette, as those under charge of piracy in that prison have been discharged, and the newspapers have very much aggravated my case. My address is care James Quinn, keeper, this prison. May I beg an early intimation of your intentions, as I have a sick and destitute family awaiting my help? I refrain from further detail, knowing the value of your time, and having written Hon. W. H. Seward in full from Fort Lafayette.†

Humbly begging your kindness, I remain, your obedient servant,
 .WILLIAM GILCHRIST.

SENATE CHAMBER, February 24, 1862.

SECRETARY OF WAR.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed letter from Hon. Charles Chapman refers to the case of F. Wyatt, now imprisoned at Fort Warren. Can he be released in conformity with a late order?

Truly, yours,

J. DIXON.

[Inclosure.]

HARTFORD, February 21, 1862.

Hon. JAMES DIXON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sorry to trouble you again in regard to Mr. Wyatt but I have received a letter from my friend, Mrs. Cowles, calling my attention to a new phase in the policy of the Administration touching political prisoners. I understand that the whole matter is committed to the Secretary of War and that the purpose is to discharge all such as have not acted as spies. I may not be correctly informed but if I am I trust Mr. Wyatt's case does not come within the exception.

* This is an error. See Stanton to Dixon, March 3, post.

† See Gilchrist's letters to Seward, ante.

I am aware that Mr. Seward for some reason satisfactory to himself was disposed to hold him in confinement indefinitely. Not being advised of the ground upon which his purposes were formed I am of course unable to say how just this protracted confinement may be. If he is to be prosecuted for any overt act it is fair that he should know wherein he has offended and have accorded to him the privileges of a fair trial. I do not suppose from what I learn of the man that such a proceeding is really contemplated and I am satisfied that he may be safely discharged.

My own opinions in regard to the mode of proceeding which has been adopted in this and some other cases in the loyal States you know already, but they are of no importance to those in power. I think, however, the time will come when their soundness will be felt and acknowledged. If you can consistently call the attention of Secretary Stanton to this case I wish you would do so at an early day. I have a high respect for his ability and purity of purpose, and trust he will do that in the premises which he thinks is just to the Government and the prisoner. As you know I have no acquaintance with Mr. Wyatt and have formed my estimate of him from Mrs. Cowles' representations, and I know her to be an estimable lady.

Yours, truly,

CHAS. CHAPMAN.

SIR: I had the honor to receive your note of March 31 inclosing a memorandum left with you by Lord Lyons† relative to the case of one Mr. Gilchrist, who it seems is imprisoned at Philadelphia under indictment for statutory offenses against the United States. The memorandum consists of brief extracts of a letter from the British consul at Philadelphia to Lord Lyons, and stating only the character of the indictment suggests the granting of a pardon but does not state the facts of the case nor those mitigating circumstances (if such exist) which ought to induce the President to interpose the clemency of the Government between the law and the prisoner. Certainly it would give me pleasure to gratify Lord Lyons in anything consistent with the duties of my place but the memorandum (understood as an application for a pardon) is too informal and too barren of facts on that foundation alone to advise the President to issue the warrant. And if the application were intended to be addressed to this office requesting the exercise of its discretionary powers to stay the prosecution or to enter a nolle prosequi the same necessity exists for some statement of the defensive or mitigating facts. In ignorance of them I should not be warranted in giving the desired instruction to the district attorney. Doubtless if the case be one proper for a pardon the needful facts can be easily supplied.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 3, 1862.

Hon. EDWARD BATES, Attorney-General.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of yesterday relative to the case of Gilchrist.

This person was arrested last summer for political reasons and especially for supplying the insurgents with munitions of war. He has been a long time confined in Fort Lafayette, and consequently may under existing circumstances be considered to have been sufficiently punished for his offense, a repetition of which there is now no danger. As there is reason to believe that his discharge would be acceptable to the British Government good policy would seem to indicate that this wish should be gratified.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, April 9, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: My absence for a few days and the pressure of certain official matters accumulated in my absence prevented my giving a more prompt attention to your letter of the 3d of April touching the case of Gilchrist. I now have from the U. S. attorney at Philadelphia a more full statement of the case than is contained in your letters or the memorandum sent you by Lord Lyons, and upon this fuller view I have no objection to the discharge of the prisoner now in Moyamensing jail, moved thereto by the express desire of the British Government sustained by your recommendation. Still there is a question upon which I crave your advice: Shall the discharge be by pardon or by nolle prosequi? The man is in judicial custody under indictment. The pardon will operate upon delivery. The nolle prosequi I believe can only be entered in open court and I do not know when the court sits.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD BATES.

Since writing this letter I have ascertained that the court is in session so I will direct a nolle prosequi.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 10, 1862.

Mr. Seward presents his compliments to Lord Lyons and has the honor to inform him that the Attorney-General, to whom his lordship's memorandum relative to the case of Gilchrist was referred, has since carefully investigated the subject and has reached the conclusion that the prisoner must inevitably have been convicted of the crime with which he has been charged. In view, however, of the probability that a repetition of the offense may not under existing circumstances be expected and of his lordship's interest in Gilchrist a nolle prosequi in the case has been ordered and the prisoner will be discharged.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, April 11, 1862.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq., U. S. Attorney, Philadelphia.

SIR: Urgent application has been made to me for the discharge of William Gilchrist, a British subject, who stands indicted in the U. S. circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania and whose case was reported to me by Mr. Ashton in his letter* of the 3d of March. Lord Lyons, the British minister, takes a lively interest in the case of the accused and desires his discharge, and Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, sustains his lordship's request upon grounds of national comity and wise policy. I yield to the force of these suggestions partly because the accused has already suffered a considerable punishment, but chiefly because the occasion enables us to show a graceful courtesy to the minister of a great nation and a politic generosity toward the prisoner. Therefore, sir, I request that you will cause a nolle prosequi to be entered upon the indictment against the said William Gilchrist to the end that he may be freely discharged.

I remain, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWARD BATES,
Attorney-General.

EDWARD BATES,
Attorney-General.

Cases of Messrs. Harbin, Watkinses, Jones, Dents and Others.

George F. Harbin was arrested in Washington, September 23, 1861, by E. J. Allen acting under orders from Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal. Harbin was charged with having written letters denouncing the Federal Government and invoking the success of the rebel arms, and in earnest sympathy with the success of the insurrectionists. Applications having been made for his release stating that he was willing and anxious to take the oath of allegiance an order was issued by the Secretary of State January 9, 1862, for the release of Harbin and others. January 11, 1862, Brigadier-General Porter, pro-provost-marshal of Washington, returned* to the Department of State the order for the release of Harbin with the following indorsement upon it:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, January 10, 1862.

I am instructed by Major-General McClellan to say that considering the character of the within-named parties (Harbin and others), as shown at the time of their arrest, it is deemed a matter of military necessity that they should for the present be retained in custody.

Respectfully,

S. WILLIAMS,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

The said George F. Harbin remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

By order of Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington (as appears by the report of E. J. Allen), Rudolph Watkins and George S. Watkins were arrested September 23, 1861, in Georgetown, D. C. They were charged with being spies; with having aided in sending men to the rebel army and forwarding communications to the South. Application having been made for their release the Secretary of State issued an order to that effect January 9, 1862, on their taking the oath of allegiance, &c. January 11, 1862, Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal, returned the order for the release of the two Watkinses with the following indorsement upon it.† The said Rudolph Watkins and George S. Watkins remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day they were transferred to the charge of that Department.

Thomas A. Jones was arrested by a detachment of the Sickles Brigade near Pope's Creek, in Maryland, and brought to Washington under an order from Col. R. B. Marcy, issued about the 4th of October, 1861. October 26, 1861, E. J. Allen, through the provost-marshal of Washington, reported the facts connected with the arrest of Jones and the charges upon which he was arrested, from which it appears that Jones was engaged with others in furnishing information to the rebels and in transporting men to Virginia for the purpose of joining the rebel army and also in the nightly transportation of contraband goods to the enemy. January 9, 1862, the Secretary of State directed the release of said Jones and others on their taking the oath of allegiance and making the required stipulations. January 11, 1862, Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, returned the order for the release of Jones and others with the following indorsement upon it.‡ The said Thomas A. Jones remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

George Dent, sr., was arrested about the 16th of November, 1861, by order of Brigadier-General Porter, in Virginia nearly opposite to Popes' Creek. He was charged with having in connection with others conveyed men, arms and ammunition across the Potomac River to aid the rebel cause; with being actively engaged in forwarding correspondence to and from Virginia and also that he was an authorized agent of the rebel army. On the 9th of January, 1862, an order was issued by the Secretary of State directing the release of Dent and others on their taking the oath of allegiance, &c. January 11, 1862, Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, returned to the Department of State the order for the release of Dent and others with the following indorsement upon it.* The said George Dent, sr., remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862.

The first intelligence received by the Secretary of State in regard to George Dent, jr., was an application for his release from the Old Capitol. On the 9th of January, 1862, an order was made by the Secretary of State directing the release of said Dent and others on his taking the oath of allegiance, &c. January 11, 1862, Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, returned the order for the release of Dent and others with the following indorsement upon it.* Brigadier-General Porter states in his letter returning the order for the release of Dent and others as follows:

I would respectfully represent that the above-named prisoners (Dent and others) are of the most dangerous character and have been actively engaged in furnishing information to the rebels and in transporting men to Virginia for the purpose of joining the rebel army as also in the nightly transportation of contraband goods to the enemy.

The said Dent remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON, October 24, 1861.

I have known Mr. George F. Harbin, who is now held as a political prisoner, for several years. I have during this time been the medical attendant of the family. He is very young and may have been indiscreet, but I should be loath to think he had done any disloyal act willfully. His sisters are most excellent ladies, and while I have never exchanged a word on the political questions of the day with the young man I have with his sisters, and that too early in the spring, and I have never heard a disloyal sentiment or word from them.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I understand my case is before you for investigation. Not having a chance to defend my case I have thought it would be well to adopt the following, viz:

The charges against me as I understand are as follows: That I have been engaged in ferrying persons to and from Virginia, carrying arms and ammunition to Virginia; that I kept a horse and carriage to convey persons to and from my place; that I had been to Virginia myself and when arrested I had a double-barrel gun loaded with buckshot, also a revolver with me. The revolver I have had since 1856 for self-protection; the double-barrel gun was left with me until the owner called for it. I knew nothing of its charge until it was discharged in my presence after my arrest. I understood that troops were scouring the counties and making arrests, and I as well as many others went to Virginia to escape arrest. Hearing the troops had left I returned home. I had never taken up arms and never intended so to do. The horse and carriage was left with me by a man by the name of McKenny who said he belonged in Washington. He brought with him in said carriage five runaway negroes which belonged in Virginia to a man—I forget his name. Said negroes were released from prison in Washington by order of, as McKenny said, General Mansfield or General Scott, which of the two I have forgotten. The horse and carriage were to remain with me until he (McKenny) returned from Virginia. If there were arms or ammunition carried to Virginia I have no knowledge of the same.

I do not deny but I have carried some persons across the river to Virginia. I carried several families of mothers and children to Virginia whom they said had husbands living there. Some of them said they had passes but I did not see them. I carried men also. I never inquired their business. I had not carried any person to Virginia for some two or three weeks before I went there myself.

I further understand that I am charged with carrying horses across the river which is certainly as false a charge as any man ever was charged with. After losing two very valuable boats by the Government I repaired a small-bottom boat for my express use; that is to say fishing and crabbing. Persons frequently came to me after said boat was repaired to get me to carry them to Virginia. I positively refused upon the ground that I had her repaired for my own purpose and if I attempted it I would lose her. A great part of the work was done by free negroes which is known to be a fact; and furthermore every man on the Potomac River that had a boat has been guilty of the same offense charged against me. Where there was a boat there was no use in saying "no" when men from a distance came and said they wanted to go to Virginia on important business and must go. I have known in several cases where they after being positively refused took the boat and crossed the river themselves. Apart from conveying men across the river there have been men arrested in my county and released that were engaged in recruiting and sending men to different points on the river to cross and giving other aid and comfort to the enemy.

I have said already more than I intended and more than necessary, but I being the only man from my county held under arrest as prisoner causes me to feel more mortified and to suffer more than I should have done if others had been made to suffer the same; but it is frequently the case that the innocent have to suffer for the offenses of the more guilty which is now my case. I am the only man of the county held as prisoner and consequently am paying the penalty of the whole county. What I did which seems to be treason to the Government I did for profit which was not the case of many in the county. They fed, transported and furnished money for the Southern cause. I was not able to do that and did not do it. All I did I got paid for which I do not think I ought to be blamed for. I have a large family to support, and being a poor man I thought that if I could make something by carrying a few persons across the river it would be no harm; but instead of profiting by the operation I have lost severely. I have lost two valuable boats, one fine horse, saddle and bridle and revolver that cost $20. That of all most valuable is my liberty and to be separated from a distressed wife and eight little children. Also I have lost much by being from home at this important season of the year when a crop was to be taken care of and a crop of wheat to be seeded, besides a great deal of work that should be done very soon before winter sets in. I have no one at home to carry on such work and no one that knows anything about a great deal of work I intended to have done this fall.

The above is a long and uninteresting letter but I am in hopes you will see my object and sympathize with my family if not myself; besides I have had much suffering since my arrest. I was kept in camp eleven days, having nothing to sleep on but the naked ground and nothing but a blanket I fortunately brought with me, and but little that I could eat the biggest part of the time. I have been from home now five weeks next Tuesday. It seems to be a long time. I am willing to make oath on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty [God] that the above statement is the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I am further willing to take the oath of allegiance.

Yours, very respectfully,

THOS. A. JONES.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 26, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: In obedience to your orders I have the honor to report that about the 1st of September last the following letter was placed in my hands:

PHILADELPHIA, August 26, 1861.

Hon. M. BLAIR.

MY DEAR SIR: As a lover of our glorious old Union I deem it my solemn duty to inform you that every night letters are carried from the post-office at Port Tobacco, Md., to King George County, Va., thence direct to the headquarters of the rebel army. My own wife has been requested to send letters to the care of Doctor or Mr. Dent to Port Tobacco, thence they were to be carried across,

Hoping that your noble efforts to cut off all this clandestine communication now so generally carried on from lower Maryland across and by secessionists all along the line may be successful, I am, very truly, yours, &c.,

A. ALLKINS.

On the 1st of September the following memorandum was received at my office:

Rev. J. H. RYLAND, Sixteenth and K, Washington :

Information from Rev. Mr. Wilmer, of Port Tobacco, in constant communication by boats with Virginia (Mitchells, Stones and Brent, Posey and Middleton, chief agents, Port Tobacco; George Dent and Tom Stone, Pope's Creek).

On the 1st of September also John Atwell, of this city, stated at my office that his brother-in-law at Pope's Creek informed him while on a visit to his wife's family there a while before that there were and had been a great many persons going over into Virginia at that place to Persimmon Point, directly opposite, it being the place where the sailors from the Pawnee were shot about ten days before in going ashore there to see about a small boat then loaded lying at the shore. That he (Atwell) had the day before received a letter from his wife at Pope's Creek, which he produced, stating that the Union troops had come there the week before and taken possession of Tom Jones' boat, which he carried men across to Virginia in, but that he had bought another on Monday and was taking passengers over night and day, keeping the boat on the Virginia side to keep the Northerners from getting it. This letter was dated August 27, which was about ten days after Atwell was at Pope's Creek himself and received the above information from his brother-in-law.

On the 14th of September a colored prisoner was brought to my office for examination who made in substance the following statement: That his name was William Hill; his age about twenty-six years; that he had been a slave to James Grymes at Mathias Point on the Potomac River all his life; that he had left Mathias Point on the Saturday night previous; that he had come away in a boat with some colored boys who had been sent from the Maryland side by their master, Mr. Thomas Jones, with some passengers to the Virginia shore; that he (Hill) left Mathias Point for good, he hoped; that James Grymes' farm was about a mile below the batteries at Mathias Point; that Jones' on the Maryland side was below Grymes' on the Virginia side, while George Dent lived right opposite Grymes; that Jones and Dent both kept row-boats to take people across the river; that they landed at Grymes' house; that the U. S. officers had taken Jones' boats away from him; that he (Jones) did the principal part of the ferrying, though Dent did considerable; that they never crossed horses or wagons, only footmen; that the crossing was mostly from the Maryland side, very few crossing over from Virginia; that passengers crossed from the Maryland side nearly every day or night; that they always found conveyances waiting at Grymes' to take them out into the country; that when Jones had passengers to bring over in the night he gave a signal by placing a light in his upper windows and then the wagons came down out of the country to Grymes'; that when persons on the Virginia side wanted the boat to come over they gave a signal by a light at Grymes' at night and by hoisting a white flag in the daytime; that Jones kept his boat up a gut on the Maryland side; that his boat had been taken away from him twice by the U. S. officers but had been replaced by him each time, and that he was then using Dent's boat which had once been taken from him but restored; that Grymes interested himself both in military matters and his farming business and called himself a "shore guard."

On the 16th of September in accordance with your orders Lieut. W. M. Wilson, of the Fourth Cavalry, with a mounted company and accompanied by one of my operatives and Mr. John Atwell, before mentioned in this report, as guide started for Pope's Creek for the purpose of arresting Thomas Jones, George Dent and James Grymes. Lieutenant Wilson reported to me on the 21st of September that he arrived at his destination at about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 17th and after surrounding the house of Jones entered it and made a thorough examination of it and the premises but did not succeed in finding Jones; that he seized and brought away all the correspondence he could find in the house and smashed up a boat which he found lying at the landing near the house; that he then proceeded to the house of George Dent, arriving there about daylight; that he surrounded the house and demanded admittance which after some little delay was given; that he then proceeded to search the premises amid the loud remonstrances of the family; that Mr. Dent was gone; that he afterward ascertained from the servants and from interrogating those in the house that he had left for Virginia by boat accompanied by his son and some twenty or twenty-five others about 11 o'clock that night; that that place he was certain from information he had gathered there was and had been the grand depot for the arrival and departure of goods and men for the rebel army; that he took from Dent's house all the correspondence he could find, together with the following articles which he considered contraband, to wit: Two shotguns, about three pounds of powder, about thirty pounds of shot, one uniform coat, one pair of epaulettes and three boxes percussion-caps.

My operative who accompanied the expedition reported in addition to the above that while at Jones' Lieutenant Wilson took a colored man aside and questioned him as to the whereabouts of Jones and was told that he went away that night about 11 o'clock. The negro said that Jones had some signals whereby he knew when any one wanted to go over the river; that when Jones who was then on the Virginia side would see those signals he would come over with his boat. On going to Dent's the operative ascertained from the servants that Dent and Jones had been in the habit of carrying over the river all persons that wanted to go as well as goods, provisions, &c.; that Dent and Jones with about twenty-three others had just gone over; that a man had come there that night and informed Dent and Jones that the soldiers were coming to arrest them; that they had left at about 11 p. m.; that they had told the women folks to raise a white cloth to let them know when it was safe to come over; that they had some other signals which the servants did not understand; that they did not make any signals in the night but in the daytime, and that the boats came over about 8 p. m. to take over whatever was to go.

On the 17th of September I dispatched one of my operatives to Mathias Point, Va., to make some observations for the Government in that vicinity. In his report to me on the 20th of the month he says:

At Port Tobacco I found a troop of U. S. cavalry (Lieutenant Wilson's, above mentioned) and the people all in a state of the most intense excitement. As soon as the cavalry left the inhabitants held meetings at the taverns and stores and throwing off all restraint talked over their opinions so freely that I could easily see that Union men were almost unknown in that locality. Our party of three, Turner, Cole (two secessionists he had fallen in with) and myself made known our design of crossing the river into Virginia and all that were present seemed willing to do all in their power to aid us. It appeared that Mr. George Dent who had previously done the ferrying had just been compelled to fly for safety to Virginia and that circumstance had broken up the regular way of crossing. He was accompanied by a Mr. Jones and a Mr. Wilson whom I understand our cavalry were after.

By careful inquiry I learned that John Shackleford, a deputy sheriff of Charles County, who had hidden a trunk full of carbines, was down at Chapel Point and designed crossing that night. His baggage was to be sent him from Port Tobacco, and I engaged to take it to him and cross in his company. Our party united in hiring a suitable conveyance and went together to Chapel Point, four miles below. On arriving there we learned that a small party together with John Shackleford had gone in a boat along shore about a half an hour previous for the purpose of intercepting the regular ferry-boat near George Dent's house. We waited at the store of a Mr. Dilahae for the boat to return. It did so about 12 o'clock, with Shackleford still aboard, they not having been in time to catch the other boat. I learned at this place that sixty had crossed at George Dent's the night previous, and just ahead of our troops who were sent there to arrest some of them. We found it very difficult to get this boat to take us over, as the parties who owned it had not been in the habit of crossing and were afraid. By paying an exorbitant price, however, we succeeded in getting a very inefficient number to manage the boat to undertake crossing with us. It is called eight miles from this point to Mathias Point, and in one hour and a half we landed safely on the opposite shore near the latter point. Mr. Cole and myself went up the [road] and discovered a house near by which we approached boldly making considerable noise in order to attract the attention of the pickets. We found the house vacant and no pickets within hailing distance. We learned from a negro woman near by that this house belonged to a Mr. Grymes, and that another Mr. Grymes owned a house half a mile below where the nearest pickets were stationed, and that the nearest pickets above were directly at the point about the same distance away. We returned to our boat and went down to the house of the other Mr. Grymes where the pickets were stationed. We were very near landing before they discovered us, and they were considerably surprised at our coming under the circumstances. * * * This place is the principal landing for Marylanders, and two boats are kept here for crossing the river. They are hidden by being drawn up the beach within the spiles driven across the mouth of a ravine. * * * I was permitted to return Wednesday night and was ferried over by George Dent, jr. * * * Captain Quincy gave me a letter to his wife and one to his brother-in-law, of Baltimore. From reading them I learn that many Baltimoreans have been going to Mathias Point by way of the Patuxent boat and Benedict and thence across the country to the Potomac. * * * Some ladies, wives of officers, have reached Virginia via Benedict and Mathias Point within the past week.

During the latter part of September and the first of October I had three other operatives in Southern Maryland in the secret service of the Government. One of them reported that on the 1st of October while at Plowden's Wharf, about sixteen miles northwest of Leonardtown, old man Wible told them that the soldiers had arrested Doctor Dent and that at the camp Dent told the officer who had him in charge that he wished to go out in the field a few minutes. The officer went out with him and Dent got over the fence into a field of corn while the officer sat on the fence waiting for him. Dent started off on a full run, the officer after him but the latter could not overtake him. He then went back to camp and had the corn-field surrounded but Dent got away. The operatives were informed on the same day in the same neighborhood by Mr. Joseph Herbert, who kept a contraband ferry, that he (Herbert) was to take Doctor Dent over the river on the morrow night. While they were at Newport near Port Tobacco Mr. George Lancaster, a secessionist, speaking of Doctor Dent said that he (Lancaster) would rather lose what little property he had there than to hear of his friend being taken prisoner; that he (Dent) had done more for the "good cause" than any other man in the country. While at Piscataway October 3 the operatives were informed that the soldiers had taken Mr. Jones, of Pope's Creek, and another man through there on the Sunday before on their way to Washington.

On the 4th of October Thomas Jones, of Pope's Creek, and Samuel G. Acton having been arrested by the Sickles Brigade and brought into camp were brought here on telegraph dispatch from Col. R. B. Marcy and confined in the Thirteenth Street Prison. Acton stated to me in prison that he was direct from Richmond and was going to Anne Arundel County to see his family. When arrested he was found hid in the bushes with Jones. One of my operatives who was in Richmond, Va., about the 1st of October informs me that during a conversation he had with the Hon. J. P. Benjamin, Acting Secretary of War, the latter remarked to him that he had heard that a man by the name of Acton had been arrested by the Federal troops in Maryland. He said that one Acton had been charged with important business at the North for the Confederate States and he wished my operative who had gained his confidence to inquire into the matter when he came North and let him know about it when he returned to Richmond. I have to request that my operative be excused from testifying in the matter as it is impracticable for him to do so, he being now and almost constantly absent in the secret service of the Government.

Among the papers of George Dent taken possession of by Lieutenant Wilson and posse were the following:

No. 1.—Letter from G. Donnellan, headquarters Brooks' Station, July 21, 1861, to George Dent inclosing a letter addressed to Doctor Wivill, as stated, to be forwarded without delay instructing him (Wivill) how to connect with the "courier line" to be established next day from Grymes' house, Mathias Point, to the headquarters of General D. Ruggles at Brooks' Station. Dispatches of an important character he said were to come out that week to General Beauregard. He says to Dent:

Please keep on the qui vive and all expense incurred shall be made satisfactory to you or any other person rendering service. Please so inform our friends and also Doctor Wivill. General Ruggles who knows of my authority has stated herein to the same effect as I represent.

Indorsement by General Ruggles:

The bearer of this is authorized to certify bills to be paid at Richmond. All communications should be forwarded rapidly.

DANIEL RUGGLES,
Colonel, Provisional Army, Commanding Forces.

No. 2.—R. J. Brent, Baltimore, July 20, 1861, to George Dent. He says:

My friends Messrs. Carson and Armistead, of this city, are going to your neighborhood on business. If they should call on you please give them every facility and attention as they are gentlemen of character and in every way worthy of confidence.

NOTE.—From the printed card at the head of the sheet on which the letter is written it would appear that Carson is a Baltimore banker and it is not unlikely that the business of himself and companion in Dent's neighborhood had some connection with Southern financial matters.

* * * * *

Among the papers of Thomas A. Jones taken possession of by Lieutenant Wilson were the following:

No. 1.—Letter from H. Rives Pollard, Richmond Examiner office, August 3, 1861, to Thomas Jones requesting him to have The Baltimore Sun sent to him (Jones) at Allen's Fresh and to forward it to him (Pollard) by persons coming into Virginia.

No. 2.—George F. Harbin, salesman in Meyerberg's store, 48 Market Space, Washington, D. C., writes to Jones August 8, 1861, that he is well and in fine spirits since the great victory at Manassas and expects from rumors to soon be living under another President. He thinks that Lincoln is pretty nearly played out and that one more victory in favor of the South will knock down his house.

No. 3.—Mr. S. B. Zimmerman writes to Jones from Richmond August 5, 1861, that he thinks of joining the Southern army and wants Jones to have his tobacco carried carefully to Baltimore so that he can get the proceeds when he comes over.

No. 4.—Letter from George F. Harbin, Washington, July 8, 1861, to Thomas A. Jones. He hopes and sincerely believes that the day is not far distant when the people of the North will condemn Abe's cruel acts and hurl him from power.

No. 5.—Mr. E. L. Rogers in a note without date states that he lost a hand trunk at Grymes' while crossing the river there and wants Jones or somebody else to find it. He also discloses the fact that they transported chloroform there in jugs marked "Neat's-foot oil."

My operative who was in Richmond about the 1st of October says in his report that Captain Quincy, agent of what they called the "Underground railroad" down there via Pope's Creek, had been supplying the publishers in Richmond with New York and Philadelphia papers only two days old for the past six weeks and that he was only stopped by the arrest of certain parties at Pope's Creek.

About the 23d of August last the following letter was placed in my hands by the provost-marshal for me to operate upon:

PATENT OFFICE, Washington, August 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: On yesterday a lady sent some information about a secessionist in Georgetown to General McClellan and signed her letter "A friend to her country." She withheld her name for good and satisfactory reasons but I have advised her that it is not likely any attention will be paid to an anonymous communication. She has therefore intrusted the substance of her letter to me and I hasten to send it to you:

"Rudolph Watkins is a young man residing in Georgetown who has made it his business for months past and does now to convey secessionists from this city to his uncle's house, a Mr. Gregg [Dent], in Charles County, Md., near the Potomac River, whence they are taken over to Aquia Creek and thence to Richmond. The trip takes two days. The father of this Rudolph Watkins holds an office in the Navy Department and he and his family are regarded by their Union neighbors as secessionists."

This lady is reliable and discreet and she does not withhold her name from any false modesty but only because to give it would injure the usefulness of others.

Yours, most truly,

J. VAN SANTWOOD.

On the 7th of September one of my operatives ascertained that Rudolph Watkins had stated to a young lady that he had conveyed at least fifty persons down to Charles County, Md., who were going into Virginia, and that his uncle who was a farmer near the river had conveyed them over into Virginia. On the 9th of September a lady, under an arrangement with one of my operatives, called on Rudolph Watkins and told him that she had a letter that she desired to know if he could by any means send to Richmond, Va. Rudolph replied that he would take the letter and send it. He asked if there was anything wrong in it, and she replied that there was not as far as she knew. He said his uncle's name was Dent and not Grymes; that Grymes lived on the Virginia side, and helped persons on to Richmond. She gave him 25 cents to send the letter, with which he expressed himself satisfied. He said that his uncle would get the letter over to Grymes. On the 18th of September one of my operatives had a professional interview with Rudolph Watkins, during which the latter stated that he was as good a Southern man as there was in the country, and placed himself at the service of the former, supposing him to be a secessionist fresh from the South on business of the Confederate States. He spoke as being on the best of terms with Dent, Jones and Grymes, of Pope's Creek notoriety. The next day he said he would like to go South, but the "old man" would not consent to it; that he had his uniform all ready, as also his cousin Dent. On the 21st of September he gave my operative, whom he considered of the right stripe, a letter of introduction to a friend at Pope's Creek, of which the following is a copy:

GEORGETOWN, D. C., September 21, 1861.

J. M. BOWMAN, Esq., Allen's Fresh, Md.

DEAR JOE: The bearer of this letter, Mr. William Stephens, came across the river on Monday last and landed at Pope's Creek. Since then he has heard that the Government has sent troops down there, and fearing that Uncle George and the rest of the gentlemen living in that neighborhood may have left, he desires me to write this letter to you and beg that you will if in your power advise him what course to pursue. He has some very important papers with him that he is quite anxious about. If you can help him in any way without endangering yourself in any way you will confer a great favor upon him, for which I am sure he will be truly grateful. He certainly is all right on the question. I do not think myself that the reports he has heard are true. However, as I do not know I cannot advise. Use your own discretion and do all you can.

I remain yours, &c.,

RUDOLPH.

On the 23d of September one of my operatives learned from a reliable source that Rudolph Watkins took Lieut. Clarence Derrick, late of the U. S. Army, who resigned for the purpose of joining the Southern army, to his uncle George Dent's, near Port Tobacco, for the purpose of having him conveyed to Virginia. The informant did not recollect the exact date of the act but thought that it was since the battle of Bull Run.

On the night of the 23d of September a number of my operatives in company with a squad of the provost guard in Georgetown according to your orders proceeded to arrest Rudolph and George S. Watkins at their residence in that city, taking possession of their papers, &c. Among the papers taken possession of at the residence of the Watkinses at the time of their arrest were the following: Letter from Eleanor Dent to George S. Watkins, July 27, 1861. She says her father was perfectly charmed with the news of the defeat of the "Grand Army." Letter from H. Ashton Ramsay, step-brother of the Watkinses, dated Richmond, Va., June 8, 1861, sent by Harris Forbes who comes back for more recruits. Letter from Rudolph to his father dated at his "Uncle Todd's," June 13, 1861. He states that his uncle George is very busy conveying persons to Virginia, and that it is really astonishing how many cross from Maryland to the other side of the river.

On the 23d of September, on the developments of the letters of George F. Harbin to Thomas A. Jones (see Nos. 2 and 4) said Harbin was arrested and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison to await further developments and for the purpose of preventing further treasonable communication in a certain direction.

From the foregoing report it appears that George Dent and Thomas A. Jones, of Maryland, and James and Benjamin R. Grymes, of Virginia, have been actively engaged up to about the 16th of September in forwarding men and contraband goods and correspondence from Maryland into Virginia near Pope's Creek, Dent at least being an authorized agent of the rebel army, and he and the Grymeses probably being still engaged in the same business on the Virginia side of the river; that Rudolph Watkins has been in active co-operation with them here forwarding men and letters to them according to his own admissions to my operatives and others whom he supposed to be secessionists; that George S. Watkins and George F. Harbin have been in correspondence and earnest sympathy if not active co-operation with them, the former inquiring about Maynard rifles here for Dent, &c., and the latter particularly violently denouncing the Federal Government in his letters and invoking the success of the rebel arms, &c.; and that the evidence in the case of Samuel G. Acton as far as it has been developed is strongly indicative of his being a spy of the most dangerous stamp. I know of no extenuating circumstances in the case of any of the above parties.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,
E. J. ALLEN.

Statement of George W. Smith, of Bryantown, Charles County, Md.

The secession feeling commenced about April last, 1861. The principal leaders in the secession party and those who have aided against the Government are, first, James A. Mudd; lives about one mile from Bryantown; has been conveying men and boxes supposed to contain munitions of war from Baltimore and different counties in the State to Pope's Creek on the Potomac. The men were strangers from Baltimore and other places. Mudd paid the expenses. This has been carried on since April last. Hillary Burch, at Benedict, has been running a regular line of passengers to Pope's Creek in a wagon, carrying arms, &c., daily to Pope's Creek. Robert L. Burch, of Bryantown, has been carrying arms and ammunition to Pope's Creek in his wagon, driven by Dennis Burch. Y. Posey, of Port Tobacco, has been running a regular line from [there] taking passengers, arms and ammunition from Benedict to Pope's Creek. Thomas A. Jones, of Pope's Creek, is the man who receives the men, arms and ammunition at that place and conveys them over to Virginia in his own boat and with his own negroes. Thomas Stone, at Pope's Creek, is also engaged at the same business. Stone has also been collecting men to carry over to Virginia. Luther Martin, of Allen's Fresh, Charles County, is now daily running men and ammunition from Benedict to Pope's Creek.

The boxes containing the guns about a week ago came from Anne Arundel County, Md. Supposes at least 200 have left the neighborhood of Bryantown and been carried to Virginia to the secession army. The wagon that carried the passengers, arms and ammunition from Bryantown to Pope's Creek belongs to the cavalry company at Bryantown and is in possession of James A. Mudd.

Smith states positively that he is guilty of no intentional wrong. He admits he has acted wrong, but he did it innocently, having been persuaded that there was no wrong in what he did by Mudd and others. He most piteously asks to be discharged* by taking the oath, and declares he will be true and give information of anything that may be done against the Government in that region. I would recommend his discharge, as I think this is all that can be made out of him, and he can be used hereafter if necessary.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, Washington, D. C., November 1, 1861.
HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: In addition to the letter I addressed to you last week I have to say to you that I am a long way from home and am among strangers and have no friends to do anything for me in the way of getting a release, and counsel prohibited. I leave my case with you and beg your honor to give me a hearing soon. You will find inclosed or attached a copy of a letter† from my wife and will see her condition.

Very respectfully,

THOS. A. JONES.

WASHINGTON, November 11, 1861.

Assistant Secretary SEWARD:

I will send a statement of such facts as I am acquainted with. My husband is a native of Augusta, Me. He has been living in Baltimore for the last ten years and working at gas fitting. Last fall work was dull there. He and his family moved to Philadelphia with the hope of getting something to do, but there he met with no success. He remained until the 1st of April, when he left for Richmond, where he obtained work with Mr. Slanny, of Philadelphia, for five months when his material gave out, and he was on his way home when arrested. The winter is setting in and I have no way of supporting myself and children, and am without a home, living about from place to place without a protector. You will confer a great favor by having his case attended to and give him a trial as soon as possible as one of my children is dangerously ill and I may have to return to Baltimore in a short time.

Very respectfully,

ANNA E. ACTON.

WASHINGTON, November 18, 1861.

Mr. J. DENT.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty to address you a few lines in reference to my case. I was in hopes to have heard from you before this, but not having done so I will again call your attention to the same, which you so kindly offered your services when you were to see me. I received a letter from home since I saw you and my family are still in great distress about me and say they are in hopes some kind friend will intercede and get me released so I may get home soon to relieve them of some of their troubles. I have an affectionate wife at home and eight young children all dependent upon me for protection and support; and further my wife is expecting to be confined now very soon, in a week or two at the most, which causes her more distress as well as myself; also the time has come when all farmers have to make arrangements for the next year, and if a portion of said arrangements is not made very soon it cannot be made at all; and further I have not provided any winter clothing, shoes, &c., or anything else for the comfort of the family and I cannot do it until I get released or see some one from home. Therefore I beg of you for my family's sake to use all of your influence to get me released so I may once more return home to relieve them of some of their sorrows and afflictions. I shall expect to see you in a day or two or hear from you when you will be able to give me some cheering news.

With great respect, I remain, your respected friend,

THOS. A. JONES.

P. S.—It will be eight weeks to-morrow since my arrest, which seems to me years.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, Washington, D. C., December 5, 1861.

His Honor WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: The condition of my family and my affairs at home generally demand of me to trouble you again in reference to my release. The crimes which I am charged with let them be true or false cannot be now remedied by imprisonment which has been now nearly three months.

There have been to my knowledge parties arrested and released since my arrest who were guilty of more serious charges than ever I was and who were better able to stand the loss of time from home, they having small or no families at all. I have since my arrest suffered much myself but that suffering is light to that of my family who are solely dependent upon me for support and many necessities and comforts of life which they cannot get without me. I have lost between $400 and $500 worth of property which the Government has the use of now. I am a citizen of Maryland and expect to live under her laws, and am willing to take the oath of allegiance and abide by the same; therefore under the circumstances I cannot think you will turn a deaf ear to the within as many of the charges against me are utterly untrue and I defy them to be proven; therefore I appeal to you in behalf of my wife and children to have me released as soon as circumstances will admit. Your compliance with the above will receive the thanks of myself as well as of a distressed family.

Your obedient servant,

THOS. A. JONES.

WASHINGTON, December 6, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: You will do me a great favor by giving my case your earliest consideration. I have been confined in prison since September 23 without knowing what the charges against me are, and as I have several sisters depending on my labor for a support I hope you will not refuse to give me a trial. I am innocent of having committed any act against the Government. I can prove this if you will give me a trial. I have not taken part in the politics of our country. I never voted in my life, not being old enough at the last election to do so. I am a Roman Catholic, and coming from a slave district (lower Maryland) I hold as political sentiments those of the anti-Know Nothing or Democratic party. But as a mere expression of opinion is not a crime I do not see why I am made to suffer for it. If it is a crime I have sinned unknowingly. I have resided in this city for the last seven years, and the records will show that I am and have been a law-abiding citizen. I am willing and have been at any time since my arrest to take the oath of allegiance. This you have been informed of by my friend Dr. S. A. H. McKim. If you cannot find the time to investigate my case, and if it be consistent with law I would take a stringent oath of parole so that I could attend to my business, and thereby assist in supporting my family. I am a property owner to a small extent in this city, and I do not intend to leave this place (nor ever was it my intention to leave it). I hope, sir, in consideration of the situation at home and (you will find on investigating) my innocence you will grant my request.

I remain, yours, respectfully,

GEO. F. HARBIN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith the statement of Mr. George Dent, of Charles County, Md., a state prisoner now in confinement in this city, in response to certain charges which he learns from unofficial sources are the ground of his arrest. In this statement he peremptorily denies that he has voluntarily or designedly committed any act of hostility against the Government of the United States, and frankly states the circumstances which have caused his arrest. I know Mr. Dent well and am confident that his statements are entitled to the fullest credit. The fifty years of life which have been vouchsafed to him have been spent in inoffensive retirement on his estate in Maryland and I do not believe there is a citizen of the county in which he resides who would venture to impeach his integrity or veracity.

I also take the liberty of inclosing a letter* from Mr. Thomas A. Jones, another prisoner from the same county in Maryland, in which he makes a strong appeal to the mercy of the Government. My acquaintance with Mr. Jones is slight, but as he admits in part the truth of the supposed charges against him and is willing to give any pledge which may be required for his loyal conduct in future he hopes that his imprisonment of ten weeks and other severe injuries he has suffered have sufficiently atoned for past offenses.

In conclusion permit me to express the hope that the cases of Messrs. Dent and Jones will be found fit subjects for the exercise of the paternal clemency of the Government. A native myself of the county in which these gentlemen reside, and intimately acquainted with the sentiments and characteristics of the people, may I venture to suggest the opinion that a conciliatory policy will be most effective in repressing hostility in that portion of Maryland? It is in this spirit that I invoke your kindness in behalf of Messrs. Dent and Jones.

Very respectfully, &c.,

JOSIAH DENT.

[Inclosure.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1861.

MR. JOSIAH DENT.

MY DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request I will proceed to give a fair and honest statement of facts in reference to my case now pending before the Government authorities. I understand the charges against me to be that I voluntarily acted as an agent in conveying individuals, arms and letters across the Potomac River and thereby aided the enemies of the United States. In reply to this I have to state that although on several occasions persons were conveyed across the river it was done against my strong desire, but owing to the sentiment prevailing in the county at that time and my close proximity to the river I found it utterly impossible to resist the pressure with which I was surrounded without rendering myself obnoxious to the whole neighborhood. I can prove that on several occasions I was reproached and distrusted because I refused to allow my boat to be used in conveying persons across the river. I can prove that I several times concealed my boat and at length hauled her up and gave positive orders that she should not be placed in the water, but having occasion to leave home for a few days when I returned I found that during my absence persons had taken her and crossed the river notwithstanding my positive orders to the contrary.

With regard to letters, on one occasion only a budget of mail matter was sent to me from Virginia to be forwarded, but I firmly declined acting in any such capacity and destroyed the letters in presence of several citizens of Charles County. As to my conveying arms to the enemy I utterly repel the charge for I never crossed the river until I heard that I was to be arrested, and so far as I know nothing of a contraband nature was conveyed across the river in my boat. So far as my loyalty is concerned I never had any intention either directly or indirectly to aid the enemies of the United States, and I positively refused to allow my son to join the Southern army at a time when numbers of the young men of the county were leaving for that purpose and although I was subjected to reproach for refusing my consent.

While in Virginia I remained in a position as near my own home as I could safely get at the house of an old lady who is a relation of mine, and where I was arrested, and strictly refrained from giving the Southern troops any aid or information whatever and also prevented my son from doing so.

With the assurance that what I have written above is a true and unreserved statement, I remain, sir, yours, truly,

GEORGE DENT.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: I respectfully request an examination on your part into the grounds of arrest of Mr. George Dent, of Charles County, and if there be no adequate ground for his detention according to law I respectfully request that he be discharged. I venture to make this suggestion because Mr. Dent writes me that he knows nothing he has done worthy of confinement and he is a truthful gentleman. Of his political views I know nothing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. WINTER DAVIS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 19, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: Herewith I send a letter from Peter W. Crain, esq.,* of Charles County, Md., relative to the cases of George Dent, George Dent, jr., B. J. Cross, Thomas A. Jones, G. Watkins and R. Watkins, prisoners confined in the Old Capitol Building in this city, which I will thank you to read and return to me with your opinion as to the propriety of releasing these persons on taking the oath.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

BALTIMORE, December 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: Some two months since I was introduced to you by Mr. Cowan, at which time I stated I had been requested by the wife of Samuel Acton to apply to you for his release. You were kind enough to say that General Sickles would be applied to for the nature of the charges against Acton and that an answer to my request in behalf of his wife and little children would be given me in a few days. You will excuse me, my dear sir, for thus trespassing. Acton's delicate wife continues to press upon me the case of her husband. I have known Acton for years as a good mechanic, and I understood he was in Philadelphia and then in Richmond after the 19th of April to procure work.

* Not found.

When on his way home the last time he was arrested as I understand while crossing the Lower Potomac with one Jones, and I am inclined to think had with him perhaps some remittances due to merchants here. Acting on these impressions I hoped the Government would release him if nothing else was charged against him. Believing as I do almost in the infallibility of good government sooner than in revolution, I respectfully ask that you will be kind enough to say whether there are charges that forbid his release or whether I shall again wait upon you in person. Your compliance will greatly oblige,

Respectfully,

THOS. E. HAMBLETON.

I would refer to Reverdy Johnson, Johns Hopkins and John Clark as to who the writer is, as I desire to do nothing wrong knowingly.

BALTIMORE, December 19, 1861.

Hon. U. S. Attorney-General BATES.

HONORED SIR: I hope I am [not] trespassing in asking a personal kindness. Some two months ago at the request of the wife of Samuel Acton I waited upon Mr. Seward to obtain his release. Mr. S[eward] was kind enough to assure me his case would be inquired into at once. Samuel Acton I have known as a most excellent mechanic for years. During the past spring he was out of work and as I have been informed was in Philadelphia and then in Richmond, the latter place affording him good wages. On his way home to see his wife he was arrested while crossing the Lower Potomac with one Jones, and is now in prison in Washington. Further of Acton I know nothing, and as you are the only one of the cabinet that I am personally known to I will take it as a personal kindness if you have the leisure to say to Mr. Seward that you have personal knowledge of the writer. Acton's delicate wife and little children are appealing to me almost daily. If I had knowledge of any wrong intent on his part I would be the last man to raise a request in his behalf. I know he could not obtain work here after our terrible 19th of April. He was poor and had to do something, and acting upon this impression I have responded to the solicitude of his wife to ask his release if no charges are against him that forbid it. Your compliance will greatly oblige,

Yours, truly,

THOS. E. HAMBLETON.

[Indorsement.]

OLD CAPITOL PRISON,
Washington City, D. C., December 22, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to my case again. I have been confined in prison three months without knowing what the charges against me are. I have a family of sisters depending upon my labor for a support, and as I have never violated any law that I am aware of in any manner whatever I do think it very hard that I am kept in prison when I have always been willing to take the oath of allegiance. I am ready to prove my innocence if you will grant me a trial, or even an interview with you or General Porter. I reside in this city and have never visited or corresponded with any one in the States in rebellion against the Government. I have never aided the enemies of the Government in any way whatever. I have been pursuing my business in this city for six years and the records will show that I have been a law-abiding citizen. All of this I can prove if I am allowed a trial. My friends will call on you in a day or two I hope and give you sufficient evidence of my innocence. I hope my petition may meet your early consideration and that I may be permitted to return to my home to comfort my family.

Yours,

GEO. F. HARBIN.

SIR: I was arrested on the 23d day of September and have been confined in prison since my arrest without knowing what the charges against me are. I was informed at General Porter's office at the time of my arrest that I was charged with treason, but no act was specified. If I had been informed of any charges of having committed any act of hostility against the Government I could have given you sufficient evidence of my innocence long before this time; but as it is I am entirely ignorant of what I am charged with. I have never corresponded with any one in the States in rebellion. I have never aided the enemies of the Government in any manner whatever that I am aware of. I have never been in any of the States in rebellion nor ever did I intend to go. I have been pursuing my business in this city for the last six years, and my numerous friends are ready to give you ample assurances of my integrity. I am ready and willing to take the oath of allegiance. This I have been willing to do at any time. I have a large family of sisters who are without protection or support during my absence. I trust, sir, that this my appeal may meet your favorable consideration. All I ask is a trial, for I feel sure that I can satisfy you of my innocence.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of an order from you directing the release of George Dent, sr., George Dent, jr., Thomas A. Jones, Rudolph Watkins, George S. Watkins and George F. Harbin, prisoners confined in the Old Capitol. I would respectfully represent that the above-named prisoners are of the most dangerous character and have been actively engaged in furnishing information to the rebels and in transporting men to Virginia for the purpose of joining the rebel army, as also in the nightly transportation of contraband goods to the enemy; that the prisoners Dent and Jones were duly accredited agents of the rebel government for the purposes above set forth, and in the house of Dent was found a copy of the signals arranged for signaling between the Maryland and Virginia shores as appointed by the officer commanding the rebel forces at that time at Mathias Point; that the two Watkinses were unceasing in their endeavors to acquire information of the numbers, arms, positions, &c., of our army in Virginia and forwarding the same to Dent to be transmitted to the rebels. They (the Watkinses) were also engaged in sending forward to Dent contraband goods and persons for transportation to Virginia.

Knowing the extremely dangerous character of these men and the probability that untruthful representations connected with these cases had been made to you I submitted the subject of their release to Major-General McClellan, who directs that it is a military necessity that these persons should be held in custody, and I have the honor to herewith inclose to you the order for the release of the within-named parties with the indorsement thereon† of Major-General McClellan for such further action as may be deemed necessary thereon.

DEAR SIR: In the case of Samuel G. Acton, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report as follows: On the 4th of October last (as I had the honor to report to you on the 26th of that month in connection with other matters) Thomas A. Jones, of Pope's Creek, and one S. G. Acton having been arrested by a detachment of the Sickles Brigade and brought into camp were brought here on telegraphic dispatch from Col. R. B. Marcy and confined in the Thirteenth Street Prison. Acton stated to me in prison that he was direct from Richmond and was going to Anne Arundel County to see his family. When arrested he was found hid in the bushes with Jones. One of my operatives who was in Richmond, Va., about the 1st of October informed me that during a conversation he had with the Hon. J. P. Benjamin, Acting Secretary of War, the latter remarked to him that he had heard that a man by the name of Acton had been arrested by the Federal troops in Maryland. He said that one Acton had been charged with important business at the North for the Confederate States and wished my operative (who had gained the confidence of the powers at Richmond) to inquire into the matter when he came North and let him know about it when he returned to Richmond.

It will be remembered that Thomas A. Jones, the man that Acton was found concealed with, had long been actively engaged with the notorious George Dent in forwarding men and contraband goods and correspondence from Maryland into Virginia in co-operation with James and Benjamin R. Grymes on the Virginia side, Dent at least being an authorized agent of the rebel army. There is no doubt but that Acton at the time of his arrest was a spy of the most dangerous kind and ought to be kept in secure confinement until the war is over. His intimate association with Jones, the associate in active treason of George Dent, shows that he belonged to that dangerous nest of traitors, and that like them he should not be allowed to go at large while there is any opportunity for him to operate against the Federal cause. I know of no mitigating circumstances in his case. I inclose herewith the letter of Thomas E. Hambleton to the Attorney-General, required to be returned to the State Department.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 15, 1862.

THOMAS E. HAMBLETON, Esq., Baltimore, Md.

SIR: Your letter of the 19th ultimo to the Attorney-General has been received. In reply I have to state that it is deemed inexpedient at the present time to direct the release of Samuel G. Acton.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE MARYLAND FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,
Baltimore, January 16, 1862.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Your kind note of yesterday was duly received. The inclosed letter of General Dix I was about to present in person to your distinguished father, but I now inclose it merely to acquaint your father and yourself of the writer, with the request that you will please return it to me. Suffer me to say in reference to Samuel G. Acton that I have only acted in the spirit of humanity in asking either his trial or release. I know nothing of his offense. His wife comes to me in tears; her children are suffering and if he were out upon my recommendation I would require him to report to me once a week or report him to the Department. I make this proposition, my dear sir, in that spirit which I believe would make more friends for our blessed Union than to keep individuals confined without an open charge or giving them a trial. Let all traitors be dealt with summarily.

Hoping the Government is strong enough to deal generously with humble individuals unless they stand charged openly with treason I submit this suggestion as helping to inspire that high prestige with our people which I so much desire to see in them.

Very respectfully,

THOS. E. HAMBLETON.

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure of introducing to you Thomas E. Hambleton, esq., president of the Maryland Fire Insurance Company and one of the water commissioners of this city. He wishes to see you, as he informs me, on business. I am, very respectfully,

OLD CAPITOL PRISON,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1862.

General PORTER or Maj. E. J. ALLEN.

DEAR SIR: Having been a prisoner over four months I take the privilege of writing a few lines to you to solicit your sympathy, if not for myself for the sake of a distressed wife and nine children, one of which is a stranger to me it having been born since my imprisonment. If you are a father or husband and could see things in their true light I am sure you would give my case an impartial consideration and grant me a speedy release.

Located as my place was there are not twenty men in my county or the adjoining counties that would not have done the same as myself. Apart from that there are always some prejudiced persons ready to magnify things and make them as bad as possible which I have no doubt has been the case with me. I do not know who my accusers are nor do I know what the charges are, having never seen a list of the same. I have heard there were several. Some or the most of them are utterly false and I defy them to be proven. If I could have had a trial I could have satisfied you of the same. There are portions of the charges I have denied.

There are many prominent State Rights men of my county and the adjoining counties who furnished men and means for the Southern cause, went to Virginia themselves, remained some time, came back, were arrested, sent to Fort Warren and other prisons; have since been released and are now at home. Others perhaps of more prominence came home, took the oath and are now at liberty. I cannot see that my case possibly could be worse than those referred to. One of them I understood kept a regular ferry and wagon for that purpose. He left the State; took with him some of his negroes; left them South. He came home, was arrested, sent to Fort Warren, was released, and is now at home. All that I ask is that the same amnesty be granted me that has been granted others.

I understood that I was to be arrested. I went to Virginia to prevent arrest. Was in Virginia about one week. Was never in the Confederate camps or fortifications of any kind. Never gave them information of any kind. Came home to see my family. Intended to have returned in a short time only to prevent an arrest. I live in Maryland, own property in Maryland and expect to abide the laws of the same. Was arrested 24th day of September, 1861. Suffered many privations since, especially the eleven days I was in camp. Suffered much on account of the distressed condition of my family, knowing they were entirely dependent upon me. I have not heard of nor do I know of any family in Maryland whose situation has not been more comfortable than that of mine under the same circumstances. I beg of you in the name of humanity to give my case your earliest attention and grant me a speedy release.

You will find attached a letter* written by my sister which I wish you to read and consider the same. I expect to take the oath of allegiance and expect to observe the same to the strict letter of the law, which is all the best Union man of the State can do.

Very respectfully, yours,

THOS. A. JONES.

Apart from what I have suffered mentally I have suffered pecuniarily to a great extent. Say nothing about what I have lost by being from home, I have lost the following, which the Government has the use of: Two fine boats, one valuable horse, all of my oats, gun, revolver and other things I do not now remember, but I am in hopes Uncle Sam will not let me lose them. What little property I have I have worked for, every cent of. It would seem hard to lose it, besides I owe a great deal of money, and it requires all of my means and power to support my large family at the best of times.

T. A. J.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1862.

HON. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I am induced by the urgent necessity of attention to my family's interests to request if admissible a release on parole for a week or ten days, for the faithful observance of which I am willing to give any pledge required. I have been a prisoner for the last five months without any knowledge whatever of the charges the Government may have against me, and every effort that I have made to obtain a hearing has been unsuccessful. I have a wife and three children residing in Baltimore entirely dependent on my exertions for their support, and the anxious desire to make some provisions for their maintenance is my only reason for asking the above-named indulgence. During the whole of last winter I resided in Philadelphia and until May, when business purely of a private character took me to Richmond.

I returned in September for the purpose of seeing my family and on my way from the banks of the Potomac I by mere chance stopped at the house of Mr. Thomas Jones, in Charles County, for whose arrest a warrant had been issued, that fact being unknown to me. The troops came while I was there and took me prisoner also though I solemnly protest that I was in no manner implicated in Mr. Jones' affairs, and from first to last have had no participation whatever in the political troubles agitating the country.

* Omitted.

Under these circumstances and in view of the almost destitute condition of my family may I appeal to you, sir, to grant me the indulgence requested above, which believe me no one could appreciate more gratefully than your obedient servant,

S. G. ACTON.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, Washington, February 28, 1862.

Hon. P. W. CRAIN.

DEAR SIR: In The Star of yesterday I find an order issued by order of the President appointing two commissioners to examine our cases. One of the commissioners I find to be Maj. Gen. John A. Dix who I understand is a gentleman of liberal feelings. You will please see him and try and make a favorable impression in my behalf. I received a letter from home dated 13th instant informing me of the illness of my wife. I received a private message yesterday that she was still ill. There are several reasons why my case should be acted on favorably. First, the condition of my family; second, my services are wanted on the farm as it is now working time; third, that the Government has between $400 and $500 worth of my property; fourth, I have been a prisoner for upward of five months and the most of the time I have been confined in a room where there has been some one sick all the time, and some of the cases have been of a malignant form. The last statement can be proven by the medical attendant and supervisor of the prison which I have been confined in.

Please give the above your especial attention as it may be the last chance for some time. I am in hopes to be able to give you satisfaction for all the trouble you have taken for me.

Yours, respectfully,

THOS. A. JONES.

HEADQUARTERS PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL,
Washington, March 15, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Thomas A. Jones is the officially accredited agent of the rebel Government for conveying information and material thereto. In his house and that of his confederate, George Dent, sr., at Allen's Fresh, Md., were found the signal regulations then in use between them and the rebels. Jones is a most dangerous man to be at large even for the shortest length of time.

Respectfully,

E. J. ALLEN.

COMMISSION RELATING TO STATE PRISONERS,
Washington, March 21, 1862.

W. P. WOOD, Esq.,

Supt. of the Old Capitol Military Prison, Washington, D. C.

SIR: You will please discharge * * * George Dent, sr., George Dent, jr., Thomas A. Jones and George S. Watkins, prisoners confined in the Old Capitol Military Prison, on their taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

I, Thomas A. Jones, of Charles County, Md., do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Union and Constitution and the Government of the United States as established by that Constitution against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

THOS. A. JONES.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 21st day of March, 1862.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

NOTE.—George Dent, sr., George Dent, jr., and George S. Watkins also subscribed to the same oath on the same day.

COMMISSION RELATING TO STATE PRISONERS,
Washington, April 1, 1862.

W. P. WOOD, Esq., Superintendent, &c., Washington, D. C.

SIR: You may release Mr. Rudolph Watkins upon his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

Case of Henry E. Johnston.

Henry E. Johnston was arrested by order of the Secretary of State September 24, 1861, at Baltimore, and committed to Fort McHenry. He was charged with being disloyal and with conveying contraband letters and information to and from the insurrectionary States contrary to the President's proclamation. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 8, 1861, directing General John A. Dix to release Johnston on his engagement upon honor to return into the custody of General Dix at Fort McHenry if required and when notified by the Secretary of State. The said Henry E. Johnston remained upon his parole February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Cases of Messrs. Clay, Kearny, Grubbs and others.

This person [William Grubbs] was arrested in Kentucky with some fifteen others on the 24th of September, 1861, by order of General Anderson, who represented him as one of the leading men of the company who were accused of scouring the country to persecute Union men and to enforce enlistments of men in the rebel cause. After his arrest he was sent by order of the Secretary of State to Fort Lafayette and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th day of November, 1861, Grubbs was discharged from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance and binding himself to neither enter any of the States in insurrection nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States nor transmit any correspondence between any disloyal persons nor do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection.

Henry G. Thurber, of Oldham County, Ky., was arrested on or about the 24th of September, 1861, by the Home Guard of Kentucky, under orders of General Anderson, charged with disloyal and seditious conduct and particularly with conspiring to levy war against the United States. After his arrest he was sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State and was afterward transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th of November, 1861, Thurber was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.

Frank M. Crow, of Oldham or Nelson County, Ky., was arrested by the Home Guard of Kentucky, under order of General Anderson, on or about the 24th of September, 1861, while on his way, as charged, to join the rebel army, accused of disloyal and seditious conduct and especially of conspiring to levy war against the United States. After his arrest he was by order of the Secretary of State sent to Fort Lafayette and subsequently to Fort Warren. Crow was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct, November 28, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State.

J. W. Griffith was arrested in Nelson County, Ky., by order of General Anderson about the 1st of October, 1861, and sent to Fort Lafayette. Afterward transferred to Fort Warren. Griffith with three others was on his way from Floydsburg, a community of disloyal citizens, to join the rebel army. He was released by order of the Secretary of State on taking the oath of allegiance November 28, 1861.

Anderson McDowell, of Oldham County, Ky., was arrested by order of General Anderson on or about the 24th of September, 1861, charged with disloyal and seditious conduct and with scouring the State to persecute Union men and enforce the enlistment of men in the rebel army. After his arrest he was sent by order of the Secretary of State to Fort Lafayette and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th of November, 1861, McDowell was released on taking the oath of allegiance with provision against going to, corresponding or aiding others to correspond with the insurrectionary States or doing anything hostile to the United States.

John W. Robards, of Harrodsburg, Ky., was arrested by order of General Anderson on or about the 18th day of September, 1861, charged with disloyal and seditious conduct, and particularly with scouring the country to persecute Union men and to enforce the enlistment of men in the rebel service cause. After his arrest he was by order of the Secretary of State sent to Fort Lafayette and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th of November, 1861, Robards was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.

Stephen H. Wooldridge, of Harrodsburg, Ky., was arrested by order of General Anderson on or about the 24th day of September, 1861, charged with disloyal and seditious conduct, and particularly with scouring the country to persecute Union men and to force others to enlist in the service of the rebel cause. After his arrest he was sent by order of the Secretary of State to Fort Lafayette and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th day of November, 1861, Wooldridge was released on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.

Joseph T. McFeal is one of a band of fifteen or twenty arrested in Kentucky on or about the 24th of September, 1861, by order of General Anderson, charged with disloyal and seditious conduct, and especially with scouring the country to persecute Union men and to enforce the enlistment of men in the ranks of the rebel forces. After his arrest he was by order of the Secretary of State sent to Fort Lafayette and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th of November, 1861, McFeal was discharged from custody on taking the oath of allegiance, binding himself thereby neither to enter any of the rebel States nor correspond with persons therein nor transmit any correspondence between any disloyal persons nor do anything hostile to the Government of the United States.

Joseph Back, of Marion County, Ky., was arrested by the Home Guard by order of General Anderson on or about the 24th day of September, 1861, accused of disloyal and seditious conduct, and especially of scouring the country to persecute Union men and acting in aid of persons recruiting for the rebel forces. After his arrest he was sent by order of the Secretary of State to Fort Lafayette and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. On the 28th day of November, 1861, the said Back was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance to the United States with stipulations against future misconduct.

William E. Kearny or Carney was arrested in Kentucky by order of General Anderson on the 24th of September, 1861, on the charge of treasonable and seditious conduct, and was by direction of the Secretary of State sent to Fort Lafayette and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. Among the offenses imputed to the set of men with whom Kearny was taken was scouring the country to persecute Union men and to enforce the enlistment of men in the rebel cause. General Anderson represented this man as one of the leaders. On the 26th of November, 1861, he was ordered to be released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance and binding himself not to enter any insurrectionary State nor correspond with any person therein nor do any act hostile or injurious to the United States, and also that he had not paid or given and would not pay or give anything to any person for aid in obtaining his release.

Lewis S. Holsclaw, of Kentucky, near Louisville, was arrested on or about the 24th of September, 1861, by the Kentucky Home Guard under orders of General Anderson while he was on his way toward Tennessee with the alleged intent to join the rebel army. He was charged with disloyal and seditious conduct and particularly with conspiring to levy war against the United States. After his arrest he was sent by order of the Secretary of State to Fort Lafayette and subsequently to Fort Warren. On the 28th day of November, 1861, Holsclaw was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

BIG HILL, MADISON COUNTY, KY., September 25, 1861.

Brig. Gen. G. H. THOMAS, Commanding Camp Dick Robinson.

SIR: I send you fourteen prisoners whom I caused to be arrested yesterday morning. They were making their way to Zollicoffer's brigade. The most of them are from Clark County, the remainder from this. They all acknowledge this to have been their place of destination with one exception, who is Col. William Harris, of this county. The colonel is ranked among the traitors of this county, but whether it was his intention to join the Southern army or not is more than I can tell. You can hear his story and do what you think best with him. I send all the arms, accouterments and ammunition belonging to the prisoners, to wit: Six pistols, two bowie-knives and four guns. I wish you to retain their arms until I come down, which will be by to-morrow morning, i. e., if I get on with the organizing of the Home Guards pretty fast, which I think I will do. Madison County is all in a blaze and the Home Guards are turning out very well.

Just now the boys brought in James B. Clay, a man by name of Tipton, also William Grubbs. I got from Clay two pistols and a shotgun. I send the whole with the guard. Lieutenant Bollen will hand you this and all the prisoners with their arms and ammunition.

In haste, yours, &c.,

W. A. COFFEY,

Major, Colonel Wolford's First Kentucky Volunteers.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of the department commander that a party of Home Guards have by my direction on the road between Richmond and London, Ky., captured (night before last) Mr. J. B. Clay and fourteen others of more or less consequence (with abundant proof on their persons) on their way to join the enemy. I will send them to Louisville as soon as they are examined by the district marshal.

DEAR SIR: I send to you Lewis Holsclaw who was arrested for bearing arms against the United States. As evidence against him I send his gun, cartridge-box, bayonet scabbard, &c. He says these things were left with him by a friend who left him, and while thus alone he was arrested. The truth is this fellow belongs to the so-called Southern Confederacy and should be severely dealt with.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. JOHNSON,
Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

CAMP ANDERSON, KY., September 26, 1861.

HENRY DENT, Esq.:

I send herewith four men—(1) Joseph W. Griffith, dressed in uniform and says he belongs to Captain Griffith's Ward Lancers, under the command of Col. Jack Allen; (2) Frank M. Crow, uniform cap and belongs to same; (3) Henry G. Thurber, belongs to same company; (4) Anderson McDowell, says he belongs to the Ward Lancers, that he uniformed himself and drilled on horseback.

There can be no doubt about these men at all. McDowell says all four belonged to the same company though I believe he was misled and is now very penitent. If he were released he might reform, but I am unwilling to do so but leave the case for the action of the law. Griffith is a thorough secessionist and deserves in my opinion the full extent of the law.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. JOHNSON,
Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

A writ of habeas corpus returnable on Monday has been issued by Judge Catron in the case of James B. Clay who was arrested with fourteen others and sent here by General G. H. Thomas. I shall not resist it thinking that this course and his being placed under heavy bail for conspiracy if not for treason will produce a good effect.

SIR: I have the honor to send herewith papers in the cases of * * * Lewis Holsclaw, Griffith, Crow, Thurber, McDowell, Joseph Back, Robards, Wooldridge and McFeal arrested under circumstances showing that they were on their way to join the rebel army. Together with the men above named I also send Carney [Kearny] and Grubbs, prisoners arrested by order of General Thomas, taken with arms in their hands. Witnesses were sent on with these men, but the ring-leader, James B. Clay, having been released on giving bail no investigation was made by the court in these cases. General Thomas will be instructed to send on an abstract of the testimony in these cases with a list of the witnesses.

Acting under the advice of all the prominent Union men here I discharged the others upon their taking a very strong oath. Their rearrest (now impracticable as they have left the city) would have a very injurious effect. Many men lately prominent against us are being won to our side by the course we have adopted. I shall send on all who in my opinion would not be faithful to their oaths. Twelve such are sent to-day with Kearny and Grubbs.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Verneigerholz is a neighbor of mine who wishes to make inquiries about some men, Messrs. Griffith, Crow, Thurber and McDowell, who have been arrested. Mr. V[erneigerholz] is a loyal citizen and he thinks a good effect would be produced in the neighborhood by liberating them on taking the oath of allegiance. I believe myself they would stay at home and behave themselves.

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 2, 1861.

General ROBERT ANDERSON, Louisville, Ky.

DEAR SIR: Joseph Griffith, F. M. Crow, Henry Thurber and A. McDowell have been arrested in Nelson County, Ky., as I understand making their way to the so-called Confederate Army. They started from Floydsburg, Oldham County, Ky., heretofore a community of disloyal citizens, upon whom a release of the prisoners would exert a good effect; besides I am confident their discharge from arrest upon taking the oath of allegiance will make them good and loyal citizens. Messrs. E. D. Hobbs, J. B. O'Bannon and many other loyal citizens will vouch for the above statements.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. THEODORE VERNEIGERHOLZ.

I know of no more intolerant (I mean intolerance of a healthy kind) Union man than Mr. Verneigerholz and when he pleads for a secessionist there must be valuable reasons for it. Edward D. Hobbs and J. B. O'Bannon have both been urgent with me for the conditional release of the men named above and I cheerfully and cordially join in the request.

General ROBERT ANDERSON.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, loyal Union men of Jefferson and Oldham Counties and of the city of Louisville, would respectfully petition you in favor of the release of the U. S. prisoners Joseph Griffith, F. M. Crow, Henry Thurber and A. McDowell, citizens of our neighborhood, some of us residing within a mile or two of them. We would state that they are all young men who took the step with which they are charged in haste, not properly weighing the character of the offenses they were about committing, and from what some of us know of our personal knowledge and others of us from what we have heard from reliable sources we believe they are heartily sorry for what they have done and would willingly take the necessary oath and if required give security for their loyalty and good behavior, and we believe the exercise of clemency toward these misguided young men would do no harm to the cause of the United States but on the contrary would have a good effect in the neighborhood in which the said prisoners reside. We would be very far from intending in this step to do anything which would seem unbecoming or officious on our part, but make this appeal believing that the grant of our petition would prove of great service to these misguided young men and of service to our country.

Very respectfully,

EDW. D. HOBBS.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 13, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been lodged in this fort and beg to address you in reference to my release. I was arrested by the Home Guard below Lebanon, Ky., on 18th of September; was conveyed to Louisville. There I employed a counsel and my trial was appointed for 2d of October. Early in the morning of that day before day I was removed to Indiana and from there sent here without being allowed my trial or an interview with my counsel, George A. Caldwell, esq. When arrested I was on my way to work with farmer V. T. Smith, of Dripping Spring, as per agreement with him. I have never carried arms in any cause, being afflicted with white swelling for seven years past and now suffering with it, but least of all would I carry arms against the United States as I am and always have been a Union man and have voted the Union ticket at last election and always would. I have a mother and two sisters depending on me for their support and I beg that you will release me so that I may do so, and I am willing to give all the assurances I can to the Government that it may require. An answer to this would be a great favor.

Very respectfully,

J. W. ROBARDS.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 13, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I was arrested by the Home Guard of Kentucky 24th of September on my way to my home, from which I was but a short distance, and taken to Louisville via Camp Dick Robinson. At Louisville I engaged as counsel George A. Caldwell, esq., and my trial was appointed for 2d of October but before daylight on that day I was taken to Indianapolis and sent here. I was and am willing to give security for any charge that may be brought against me. I reside in Madison, Ky., and have a family depending on me. I have never carried arms and am unable, my right arm being useless. I was fifty-one years of age last January and am physically unable to endure this imprisonment and hard fare. I am a Union man and will be glad of an opportunity to take the oath.

Hoping that you will kindly and quickly order my return home, I remain, yours, respectfully,

WM. GRUBBS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 18, 1861.

Hon. JOSEPH HOLT, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you do me the favor to call at the State Department to-day? I wish to make some inquiries respecting the cases of Grubbs and Robards.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[No date.]

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In compliance with Mr. Kearny's wishes—whom I know to be a friend of the Government—I herewith forward his communication to your excellency, trusting it may effect his release from Fort Warren.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. B. WILDER.

[Inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, *October 21, 1861.*MR. E. B. WILDER, Newark, N. J.

DEAR SIR: After my compliments to you I would say that if you go to Washington I want you to see Mr. Seward and do what you can for my release. I was arrested in Kentucky by the Home Guards in my own neighborhood. I had never taken up arms against the Government nor did I ever anticipate doing such a thing. I am a plain farmer, and have no desire to interfere with the politics of the day. I have always been for peace, and that is the height of my offending. There were fourteen others arrested in my neighborhood, and all have been discharged by taking the usual oath, and I would be willing even to remain in the Northern States till released by the Government if it was required of me. You will please show this letter to Mr. Seward or any officer of the Department. I have a large family dependent upon me for a support, and I do not think the Government can possibly have any object in keeping me here as I have no influence, and if I had it should be exercised in behalf of the Government; and if it is not consistent with the views of the Department to release me from this fortress they will confer a favor by letting me know the nature of the charges preferred against me so that I can prepare my defense.

I remain, yours, with great respect, &c.

W. E. KEARNY.

DEAR SIR: I presume it is somewhat unusual for you to receive a letter from one who has been himself accused of conspiracy and treason against the United States Government, but I believe that the slight acquaintance I have had the honor to have with you will induce you to put some faith in the truth of the statement I am about to make to you.

On the 24th of September I was arrested in an adjoining county. At the time of my arrest two men, both married, were arrested with me, both men returning to their homes where they would certainly have gone but for the arrest. With fourteen others they were sent to Louisville with me. Upon my discharge on bail fourteen of the sixteen prisoners were released on taking the prescribed oath. Of the two arrested with me one was released with the other thirteen, all taking the oath of allegiance. The other, an old man of sixty years ready and willing to take the same oath who had been arrested as I have before mentioned, married and on his way to his home, has been sent on and is I understand now confined at Fort Lafayette. The name of this man is William Grubbs. He is very poor; has left a wife and several children dependent on the charity of his neighbors. He has been no leader and is not competent to be a leader of rebels. I ask as a personal favor that this man may be discharged and sent home to his family if in your judgment the statement I have made does not entitle him to it of right.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES B. CLAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 29, 1861.

MADISON C. JOHNSON, Esq., Lexington, Ky.

SIR: Herewith I transmit to you a copy of a communication* received at this Department in reference to the case of William Grubbs who was arrested in Kentucky and is now a prisoner at one of the military posts of the United States. Will you please examine the case and report to me whether in your judgment there is sufficient reason for detaining him as a treasonable or dangerous person?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

VERNON, IND., November 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Feeling a deep and abiding interest in the perpetuity of our glorious Union and wishing and trusting that justice may be meted out and the full penalty of the law be enforced upon its enemies, yet I think in some cases persons have been arrested and conveyed to Fort Lafayette without intentionally having done anything to the detriment of the Union cause. And I write you at this time in reference to one such person. I refer to Mr. William E. Kearny who is at present confined at Fort Lafayette. He with seventeen others was arrested near Lexington, Ky., the last of September and conveyed to Louisville and tried (or an examination had) and all released save him, and from all I can learn he would have been released had it not been for the testimony of one Curtis Knight, who has ever been a bitter enemy to him and his family. And as a large family are dependent upon him for their support, and believing most sincerely that if an opportunity were given him he would take the oath of allegiance and faithfully abide by it and return home to fulfill his duties to his family in providing for their comfort [sic]. His father-in-law, Francis Emerson, is one of the staunchest Union men in Clark County, Ky., as are all of Mr. Kearny's brothers. Being a brother-in-law of his I speak that which I know to be correct.

In conclusion, believing that if you will give this case an examination the dictates of humanity will prompt his discharge upon his taking the oath, I would most respectfully urge upon behalf of his family (as well as my own) that he may be offered his discharge. Will you be so kind as to give this matter your early attention and inform me of the result as soon as convenient, as his family most anxiously desire to learn something in reference to his case?

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. H. NEWCOMB.

SAINT LOUIS, MO., November 4, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: In passing through Louisville, Ky., I conferred with a number of prominent Union men as to the propriety of discharging all or any of the prisoners recently confined in Fort Lafayette, and I found their convictions very decided and earnest against such a step. The arrest of these traitors has done immense good in Kentucky and has given the Government a prestige for determination and power which would be destroyed by this retrograde movement at a time when the invading enemy is still upon the soil of the State. This is the general if not the universal sentiment.

I believe it was J. B. Clay who wrote you urging the discharge of Grubbs. Upon inquiry I am assured that his case is of a most aggravated character. The appeal I believe is made to you in the name of his wife and children, whom, however, he himself did not hesitate to abandon in order that he might scour the country for the purpose of persecuting Union men. Dr. T. S. Bell, of Louisville, is acquainted with the facts and I have asked him to communicate them to you. The doctor is one of the purest, truest and most gifted of the friends of the Government in our State and whatever he says on the subject may be accepted as worthy of all credit.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. HOLT.

NORTHERN BANK OF KENTUCKY,
Lexington, November 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your communication of the 29th ultimo I have endeavored to ascertain whether or not there is sufficient reason for detaining William Grubbs as a treasonable or dangerous person, and as the result of my inquiries would report: That W. Grubbs is between fifty and sixty years of age, poor, with a family; that he is by universal consent a bad and worthless man, and that when arrested he was about attempting to join Zollicoffer; that he is of no value to his family on account of his worthlessness. Being so low in moral and mental attributes I think it dignifies him far too much to retain him as a state prisoner unless you can confine him in some penitentiary and set him to work. I do not regard him as dangerous to the Government but as very disagreeable to all his neighborhood, and hence no effort was made by any one to have him released in Louisville.

Respectfully,

M. C. JOHNSON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 16, 1861.
M. C. JOHNSON, Esq., Lexington, Ky.

SIR: Your report in the case of William Grubbs has been duly received and I thank you for attending to the request so promptly

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

NEW YORK, November 24, 1861.
F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I wish to make report to you in relation to several political prisoners arrested in Kentucky who are in my judgment proper cases to be considered together.

First. William Grubbs, of Madison County, Ky.; fifty-five years old; has no property; has a wife and two children; no education and little intelligence. He is disabled in the right shoulder and could not be a belligerent if he would and has not the sense or position to make him a dangerous conspirator; is willing to take the oath of allegiance.

Second. Henry G. Thurber, Oldham County, Ky., eighteen miles from Louisville; twenty-six years old; carpenter by trade; was going South because (as he says) he feared he would be arrested as he had voted the State Rights ticket. Probably he was going to enlist, because he did not feel safe in Kentucky after the arrest of Governor Morehead. He is now willing to take the oath of allegiance.

Third. Frank M. Crow, Oldham County, Ky.; twenty-four years old; has a wife now in Kentucky; no property and no influence. His case is just the same as Thurber's in all respects. Will take the oath.

Fourth. Joseph W. Griffith, Oldham County, Ky.; thirty-six years old; no family; journeyman cabinetmaker. Was going to Tennessee because as he says "I was informed that I was to be arrested for having some time before belonged to the State Guard, which was disbanded." Says he joined the State Guard supposing he would be paid and was to defend Kentucky. When it was disbanded found he was mistaken. Will take the oath.

Fifth. Anderson McDowell, Oldham County, Ky.; forty-eight years of age; no wife, four children. A farmer, on shares, owning no land or other property. Was going South for the reason as he says that he feared arrest, having voted State Rights in the election. His politics are—to go with the people of Kentucky. Will take the oath.

Sixth. John W. Robards, of Harrodsburg, Ky.; twenty-one years old; is ignorant. Has supported his mother and two sisters as well as he could by working at farm work for wages. When arrested he says he was going to Warren County to get work. Has little intelligence and no politics. In no respects a dangerous man. Will take the oath. Says he always was ready to take it.

Seventh. Stephen H. Wooldridge, Harrodsburg, Ky.; twenty-nine years old; no family; occupation, overseer of farm work on plantation; no property; works for wages; been some time out of employment and is destitute. When arrested he was from home, going as he says to see if he could get work. Thinks the old Government better than the new one. This man has more sense than the last, but is a very common man. Never had any objection to taking the oath; has none now.

Eighth. Joseph T. McFeal, of Harrodsburg, Ky.; thirty-seven years old; has wife and four young children; journeyman cabinetmaker. When arrested was going South because as he says he was informed and believed that all of his political opinions were to be imprisoned. Wished the Union preserved then and now, but agreed with Governor Morehead in thinking that it could only be done by concessions. Left home from fear, and would be glad to take the oath as he would now be safe in Kentucky.

Ninth. Joseph Back, Marion County, Ky.; forty-four years of age; millwright by trade; does jobs and farms a little on hired land; has wife and four children; very poor; no property of any kind. This man is very stupid. Says he when drunk started South with some other men. When he got sober backed out and went home and was arrested at his home. Has not the sense to understand the meaning of the contest. Will take the oath.

Tenth. Lewis S. Holsclaw, or Hetzclaw, or Hodsclaw. He does not know how to spell his name. From near Louisville; thirty-two years old; no family; carpenter by trade; very little property and no intelligence or influence. When arrested says he was going to Hickman to visit friends, but probably was going to Tennessee. Never was in favor of Kentucky going out of the Union of her own accord, but thought she would be conquered. He is of no account at home or elsewhere, except for a soldier. Will take the oath.

These men were all arrested by the Home Guard of Kentucky when it was under general orders to arrest; most of them by Home Guards who did not know who they were. All were probably arrested upon the supposition that they were disloyal and were going South, and it may be that they were disloyal. I do not think that now there would be any danger in setting them at liberty. They are very inferior men. They are not conspirators and have no influence in society. I think we can fill all our forts and prisons with much better men who are much more dangerous than they. They are of no use as hostages on whom to execute the lex talionis, for if they were hanged few would know it and fewer still would care. Unless they can be made available in an exchange of prisoners where the rate was man for man they should be set at liberty.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

P. S.—I should include William E. Kearny, arrested in Clark County, Ky., in the above list but I am embarrassed by the circumstance that Hon. William H. Ludlow* has contrived to make himself the solicitor of Mr. Kearny (and several others) upon conditions that he (Ludlow) is to receive pecuniary compensation for getting them their liberty. This would look so much like selling the clemency of the Government that I am not disposed to forward the speculation. Yet to exclude him for that reason may not be just. What should be done in such a case?

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 26, 1861.
 SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have received your report in the cases of Grubbs, Thurber, Crow, Griffith, McDowell, Robards, Wooldridge, McFeal, Back, and Holsclaw, together with your remarks in the case of W. E. Kearny. In reply I have to state that I have directed the release of all but Kearny upon condition that they take the oath of allegiance and engage not to enter any of the insurrectionary States nor hold any correspondence with persons residing therein and that they will not do any act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States. I have also directed the release of Kearny with the additional condition that he will not pay to any person whomsoever any sum of money as a fee or otherwise for procuring his discharge or for interceding in his behalf. These orders I have forwarded to John S. Keyes, esq., the U. S.

marshal at Boston, and have requested him to communicate with the prisoners at Fort Warren and inform them that this Department will not recognize any one as an attorney for political prisoners and will look with distrust upon all applications for release through such channels, and that such applications will be regarded as additional reasons for declining to release the prisoners. He has also been requested to inform them that if they have any communication to make to the Government they are at liberty and are requested to make it directly to this Department. I will thank you to visit the prisons in New York Harbor and make similar communications to the persons there confined. I have also to inform you that the pass which was granted to Mr. Ludlow has been revoked.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 26, 1861.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

SIR: Let William E. Kearny, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. Further that he has not paid and will not pay to any person a fee or give to him anything of value as a condition for interceding for his liberation. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

NOTE.—Same order concerning prisoners Frank M. Crow, Anderson McDowell, William Grubbs, Lewis S. Holsclaw, Joseph Back, Stephen H. Wooldridge, Joseph T. McFeal, John W. Robards, Henry G. Thurber and J. W. Griffith.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Boston, November 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I received the orders for the discharge of eleven political prisoners at Fort Warren and duly executed them, they all taking the oath of allegiance and the stipulations required, and one A. Robert Carter, who declined day before yesterday, to-day accepted the conditions and was released. I communicated to all the political prisoners your instructions as to the employment of attorneys but did not to the prisoners of war, at the suggestion of Colonel Dimick. If you desire it I will make the communication to them at my next visit. * * * Many of these prisoners discharged this week have no money or means of returning to their homes and must depend on charity to get to their friends. The hardship of some such cases induced me to ask if the Department will give any directions by which they can be relieved.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, November 28, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the oaths of the following-named persons who have been released by your directions, viz: * * * S. H. Wooldridge, Henry G. Thurber, Joseph Back, Frank M. Crow, L. S. Holsclaw, J. W. Griffith, Anderson McDowell, William Grubbs, J. W. Robards, J. T. McFeal, and W. E. Kearny.

I am, sir, with highest respect, your obedient servant,

J. DIMICK,

Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

[Inclosure.]

I, W. E. Kearny, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, loyalty and allegiance to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law, hereby stipulating that I will neither enter into any of the States in insurrection against the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States nor transmit any correspondence between any disloyal persons without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. Further that I have not paid and will not pay to any person a fee or give to him anything of value as a consideration for interceding for my liberation. So help me God.

W. E. KEARNY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 28th day of November, A. D. 1861, at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

J. DIMICK,

Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

NOTE.—On the same date F. M. Crow, H. G. Thurber, J. W. Griffith, J. T. McFeal, Joseph Back, J. W. Robards, William Grubbs, Anderson McDowell, S. H. Wooldridge and L. S. Holsclaw subscribed to the same oath.

Case of John C. Stovin.

This individual [John C. Stovin] is an Englishman by birth and the first that is known of him in this country he came to Cumberland, in the State of Maryland, to reside about the year 1854, where he married the daughter of Dr. George Lynn and settled as a permanent dependent of his said father-in-law. He left Cumberland about the year 1856 and it is understood that he went to Illinois and was absent from Cumberland about two years, when he returned again to the house of his said father-in-law and resumed his dependence upon him and continued the same until his death in 1860. From that time he remained a burden upon the widow and family of his said deceased father-in-law until the time of his arrest as hereinafter stated. On the 16th day of July, 1859, this Stovin declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and made oath renouncing forever his allegiance to Queen Victoria in the circuit court for Allegany County, in said State of Maryland, according to the form of the statute provided in the case of citizens or subjects of other countries desiring to become citizens of the United States. From the outbreak of the rebellion in December, 1860, he has been a secessionist and a sympathizer with the rebellion and his associations have been with persons of like sentiments, so that he incurred the dislike and suspicion of all the loyal people of Cumberland. In the summer of 1861 when Colonel Wallace, of the Eleventh Indiana Volunteers, had his regiment stationed at Cumberland a detachment of said regiment under Captain Lyman was directed to perform some duty at the house of Josiah H. Gordon, a disloyal member of the house of delegates, and Stovin came there while he was engaged in such duty and interrupted the performance thereof and was arrested by the said Captain Lyman and detained for two or three hours, when he was discharged, and he thereafter boasted that he would make a claim through the British minister against the Government of the United States and recover a large amount of damages for said arrest by Captain Lyman. He also threatened to poison a spring from which the said Eleventh Indiana Volunteers used the water, and in frequent seditious conversations constantly justified the rebels of the insurrectionary States in their rebellion, during all which time the said town of Cumberland was threatened by the rebel forces and frequent alarms were spread among the inhabitants of immediate attacks, and great insecurity was felt owing to the presence in town of many sympathizers with the rebels of whom Stovin was notorious. Wherefore it was deemed judicious as a precautionary measure to take the said Stovin into custody, which was accordingly done by direction of the Secretary of State on or about the 8th of October, 1861, and he was soon after placed in confinement at Fort McHenry. He immediately appealed to the British minister to interfere for his release but more especially to urge a claim in his behalf against the Government of the United States for damages by loss of property and interruptions of business by reason of his arrest and detention to a large amount, while the fact was that he never possessed property to the value of a dollar nor was ever engaged in any business on his own account nor ever had credit or character enough to establish him in any business. The apparent danger of rebel attacks and of seditious uprisings having passed away and the consequent necessities for the detention of Stovin having therefore ceased he was at the instance of the British minister discharged from custody on or about the 13th day of November, 1861, and the said minister informed thereof.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

GENERAL: I inclose herewith to you information* which has been placed in my hands relative to J. C. CUMBERLAND, MD., October 8, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: This morning a party of cavalry from Williamsport arrested John C. Stovin. If you wish to secure more of the rebel bands in this section of our State place Stovin in solitary confinement, when he no doubt will implicate some of those whose names I give below, men who have used him to act the spy and letter agent. Those men I have no direct legal means to convict, but Stovin no doubt has.

With the sole wish to serve my country, very obediently,

DAVID TAYLOR.

W. W. McKaig, attorney; Dr. R. S. McKaig, merchant; C. A. Thurston, attorney; Thomas Devecmon, attorney; John P. Roman, attorney; Dr. G. Stubblefield, nothing; Judge Perry, circuit court; James M. Schley, attorney; Samuel Smith, attorney; Dr. T. A. Healey, physician; Dr. B. A. Daugherty, physician; Michael Trieber, hotel keeper; Ashriel Willison, horse dealer; William Blake, merchant tailor; Capt. C. H. McBlair, late U. S. Navy; Daniel Wineon, canal supervisor.

P. S.—I may be mistaken in some of those men, but they are an installment of a party who with Stovin have met at the Revere House, kept by Michael Trieber, and have kept up no doubt a rebel mail running. Stovin is a shallow knave, and could be very easily made to convict a large number of the traitors here.

CONFIDENTIAL.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 18, 1861.

Right Hon. LORD LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the note of Consul Bernal which you unofficially placed in my hands.

John C. Stovin on the 16th of July, 1859, in the State of Maryland, on oath in open court renounced his allegiance to every foreign prince, potentate or sovereignty whatever and particularly to Queen Victoria. With your passport in his hand countersigned by me he was found on the 10th day of this month actively engaged in seditious proceedings to foment the insurrection in the State of Maryland which has only been prevented by the presence of a large military force and the erection of extensive fortifications. The public safety requires that for the present he remain in custody. He is confined at Fort McHenry under a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. I shall not lose sight of the prisoner's case nor allow him to remain unnecessarily long in custody.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., October 18, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have examined the case of Mr. John C. Stovin so far as any examination is practicable. There is nothing against him except the allegations contained in the letter of Mr. David Taylor herewith returned. Mr. Stovin, who is a British subject as I suppose, states that he was the agent of a company whose operations have been suspended by the war; that he has been waiting for the reopening of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; that he knows all the parties in Mr. Taylor's letter; that he has never met them at the Revere House except casually; that he has never been engaged in transmitting or receiving letters to or from Virginia, and that he has never taken any part in the contest now in progress between the Government of the United States and the Confederate States which are in insurrection against it. There is no evidence to rebut this statement or to sustain that of Mr. Taylor. He says that he and Mr. Taylor had a quarrel some months ago and that Mr. Taylor is a naturalized Englishman. I did not let him know there was a letter from the latter.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 19, 1861.

GEORGE A. HOFFMAN, Postmaster, Cumberland, Md.

SIR: Will you please inform this Department whether in your judgment there is sufficient reason for detaining John C. Stovin who was recently arrested in your village as a disloyal and dangerous person?*

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, October 26, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: In your confidential note of the 18th instant you do me the honor to inform me that Mr. John C. Stovin on the 16th of July, 1859, renounced in open court his allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate or sovereignty whatever and especially to Queen Victoria.

You will perceive, however, by the inclosed copy of a dispatch from Mr. Bernal, Her Majesty's consul at Baltimore, that Mr. Stovin adheres to his assertion that he has only taken the oath declaring his intention to renounce his allegiance to the Queen and has not taken that by which an alien on becoming an American citizen actually renounces his allegiance to his natural sovereign.

It was on the faith of a solemn assertion to this effect that a British passport was granted to him and submitted to you for counter signature. You will perhaps remember that the passport stated on the face of it that Mr. Stovin was "a British subject who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States but had not actually become a citizen thereof."

I could not feel any hesitation in sanctioning the granting of a British passport to a person to whom that description was applicable. In fact soon after the notice requiring persons in these States to provide themselves with passports was issued I made particular inquiries at the State Department respecting the cases of British subjects who had declared their intention of becoming American citizens. I was informed in reply that the Government of the United States had no right and was under no obligation to grant a passport to a foreigner who had merely declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. It was pointed out to me that the law requires a period of several years to elapse before that intention can be carried into effect and that the person who may have declared it may change his mind and has entire liberty to do so.

It was added that until the final act of naturalization such a person is to all intents a subject or citizen of his native country and therefore that foreigners whether they may have declared their intention to become citizens or otherwise must obtain passports from the proper authorities of their own country.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most humble servant,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

BRITISH CONSULATE, Baltimore, October 22, 1861.

LORD LYONS, K. C. B., &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt this morning of your dispatch of the 19th instant referring to the case of Mr.

* No answer to this inquiry can be found.

Stovin. I went down to Fort McHenry and procured an order from the commandant to "see Mr. Stovin in the presence of the officer of the day on guard." He repeated the story he has always told—that he took an oath declaring it to be his intention to become a citizen of the United States and renounce his allegiance to any foreign prince, &c. But as your lordship is doubtless not aware these are only preliminary steps which confer no actual or present rights and privileges, and it is not until some time afterward (two years I believe) that the individual can take the second oath and receive his final papers of naturalization. In the meantime he has none of the privileges of an American citizen. This second and final act Mr. Stovin declares he never performed.

He is confined in a small guard room with several other persons. In the course of a conversation that I had with General Dix in regard to his case he was good enough to tell me that he had written to Mr. Seward respecting the examination held by him, namely, that the only allegations against Mr. Stovin were contained in a letter written by a gentleman (whose name he did not give me); that these charges were firmly denied by Mr. Stovin and that there was no evidence either to sustain the former or rebut Mr. Stovin's denial. This was the substance of General Dix's report to the best of my recollection.

In reply to your lordship's inquiry I beg to state that the passport issued by me to Mr. Stovin distinctly said that the bearer was a British subject who had announced his intention of becoming an American citizen but had not actually become one.

I have, &c.,

F. BERNAL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 2, 1861.

Right Hon. LORD LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have received your note of October 26. I give you herewith a copy of the [naturalization] oath* which was taken by John C. Stovin on the 16th of July, 1859. You will see that although it is a declaration of an intention to become a citizen of the United States it is nevertheless an absolute and permanent abjuration of his allegiance to his native sovereign. My view in communicating the fact to you was that you might probably not be so deeply impressed with a claim upon you made by a person who had voluntarily renounced the allegiance upon which your interposition was sought.

I am not disposed, however, to raise a question upon his claim to the protection of the British Government and I shall treat the same as fully conceded. Maryland occupies a peculiarly important position in regard to the Federal Union. Immediately south of it an insurgent army has for a long time invited co operation in Maryland and threatened this capital. An army has been stationed there and fortifications built by authority of the United States. The law and courts have proved temporarily unreliable for the maintenance of the Federal Union there and it has therefore been found necessary to place some agitators of division temporarily in military custody. John C. Stovin is one of these persons. Although he was furnished by you with a passport with my consent it is found that he used it to disturb and endanger the public peace and safety.

He cannot be released from custody consistently with the welfare of the community in which he lives. On the other hand if he shall give reliable assurances of the loyalty he owes to the United States his duress will not be prolonged a day beyond the time when the danger to be apprehended from his being set at large shall have passed.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 11, 1861.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston, Mass.

SIR: Let J. C. Stovin, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, be released on his engaging upon oath that he will neither enter into any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.*

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 14, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.:

* * * It is presumed you have received the order for the release of Stovin. At all events discharge him.

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: You will no doubt recollect the correspondence which passed between us in the months of October and November last respecting the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. John Carville Stovin.

Mr. Stovin has now submitted to Her Majesty's Government a printed statement of a claim which he makes against the Government of the United States for pecuniary compensation for his imprisonment and for the loss of property which it entailed. I do myself the honor to transmit to you a copy of the statement.†

Mr. Stovin complains in the first place of certain acts done on the 19th of June, 1861, which appear to Her Majesty's Government to have been acts of lawless interference by certain military officers of the United States Government with his personal liberty and also with his property, a horse belonging to him having been taken without payment. It does not, however, appear that these acts were authorized or sanctioned by the Government of the United States or that Mr. Stovin may not have adequate civil remedies for them by the laws of the United States as now administered.

* This order was repeated November 18 to Colonel Burke at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor.

† Stovin's statement omitted; it is a recitation of the circumstances of his arrest, and a denial of the alleged causes therefor, with a demand for $150,000 damages.

The interference with his personal liberty was only of a few hours' duration and Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to treat instances like this of mere casual abuse of military power by individual soldiers and officers as furnishing sufficient grounds for international complaint.

Her Majesty's Government conceives, however, that the subsequent arrest of Mr. Stovin on the 7th of October and his imprisonment from that time until the 14th of November are acts of which the responsibility clearly belongs to the executive government of the United States. It appears from the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 10th of October last that Mr. Stovin was accused of being found in the course of that month actively engaged in seditious proceedings to foment insurrection in the State of Maryland and that his arrest and imprisonment were justified by the United States Government under the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the public safety required that for the present he should be kept in custody. The accusation was denied by him as soon as he had an opportunity of learning its nature. Her Majesty's Government do not perceive that any attempt was ever made to support or substantiate it in any manner whatever. The name of the accuser was not divulged and the charge itself appears to Her Majesty's Government to have been absolutely false and groundless.

Mr. Stovin was nevertheless arbitrarily detained in prison for more than a month; he suffered during that time very severe hardships and by the sudden and violent interruption of his business he seems to have undoubtedly incurred serious and unavoidable pecuniary losses, although the amount at which he himself estimates them may perhaps be much exaggerated. It seems therefore to Her Majesty's Government that Mr. Stovin is entitled to ample redress for these injuries; and Her Majesty's Government have accordingly instructed me to bring this case before you and to ask for compensation for him.

In order to avoid all possible misapprehension I will say distinctly in conclusion that in laying before you Mr. Stovin's own printed statement I by no means intend to express either for Her Majesty's Government or for myself any opinion as to the particular sum, $150,000, at which he himself estimates the compensation due to him.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: With reference to the note which I had the honor to address to you on the 19th of last month concerning the claim of Mr. John Carville Stovin, I beg to submit to you an extract from a letter which I have received from Mrs. Lynn, mother-in-law of that gentleman.

Mrs. Lynn believes that a commission has been sent to Cumberland to investigate matters connected with the claim in question. I do not know whether or no she is correctly informed, but if an investigation of the kind be in progress it appears to be not unreasonable that she as representative of the interests of her son-in-law should ask to be heard in support of his claim.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

Extract from letter of Mrs. Lynn to Lord Lyons.

CUMBERLAND, April 10, 1862.

* * * I learned by accident yesterday that a commission sent here by the Government of the United States was taking affidavits in reference to the claim of my son-in-law, J. Carville Stovin, against the United States for imprisonment. Mr Stovin cannot safely reside here owing to the prejudice against him and he has no one to care for his interest but me. I was surprised therefore to learn that this commission instead of giving me notice went about the work in a secret manner and from that manner am inclined to believe that the personal enemies of Mr. Stovin were selected to act as witnesses.

I understand that the charge against Mr. Stovin of complicity with the Southern Confederacy is dropped and an effort is now made to show that his loss was less than he claims. I do not know how this may be, but I do know to my sorrow that this wrong resulted in taking the bread from me and my fatherless children and being satisfied that it was without cause. * * *

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 16, 1862.

Right Hon. LORD LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have received your note of yesterday accompanied by an extract from a letter of a Mrs. Lynn, of Cumberland, Md., touching the complaint of her son-in-law, Mr. John C. Stovin, against this Government and asking to be heard in support of the complaint. As the complaint referred to has been presented in the name of Her Majesty's Government no such application from Mr. Stovin or his representatives can be entertained. Any information, however, which Her Majesty's legation itself may think proper to communicate in support of the claim of Stovin will be impartially considered.

I avail myself of the occasion to offer to you a renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Cases of J. H. Maddox and Thomas H. Maddox.

The only papers on file in the Department of State in the case of [Joseph H.] Maddox refer exclusively to his release, being mostly correspondence relating thereto, his bond, parole, &c. From statements in the letters of Maddox on file it would appear that he was arrested on the order of the Navy Department, charged with being about to attempt to go to Virginia, and was sent to Fort Lafayette; thence transferred to Fort Warren from which he was released on his parole not to enter into or correspond with any person in the seceded States or do any act hostile to the Federal Government November 21, 1861, according to an order from the Department of State, November 2, 1861.

This person [Thomas H. Maddox] was arrested by the military authorities in Maryland and sent to Fort Lafayette September 24, 1861, by order of Lieutenant-General Scott. He was charged with disloyalty to the United States Government. Maddox was released by order of the Secretary of State October 3, 1861, on taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating not to hold any correspondence with persons residing in the insurgent States without consent of the Secretary of State.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Case of William F. Getty.

W. F. Getty was arrested in Washington October 1, 1861, by order of Brig. Gen. R. B. Marcy and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison and from thence transferred October 30, 1861, to the Old Capitol. He was charged with being a spy and with having in violation of the President's proclamation crossed the lines of the Federal forces and visited Richmond. The report of the provost-marshal of Washington by his agent, Major Allen, dated October 29, 1861, shows that Getty endeavored some time during the last of September to obtain a situation as a secret agent of the United States Government, pretending that he knew many secessionists in Baltimore who could not be known to the police of that city. Having been sent to General Dix with a letter from Colonel Marcy, he was referred by the former to Marshal Dodge, of Baltimore, and receiving no encouragement returned to Washington. On the 30th of September Colonel Marcy telegraphed to General Dix making inquiries about Getty and received a reply stating that the police report that—

Mr. Getty is a very bad man and is a spy of the Confederates. We arrested his paramour, a notorious courtesan, and read his letter to her. We know him well.

The following extract from the letter above referred to indicates that Mr. Getty was or had been engaged in practices inimical to the United States Government:

FREDERICK, MD., Wednesday Night.

DEAR BECKIE: Jennie was arrested on her way up, but I guess she has been released by this time. Even if not nothing can be done with her. If it had been my case I should have fared differently. * * * I was sorry that she was detained, but it was far better for her to have been arrested than for me. * * *

FRANK.

Jennie Smith, the person referred to in the above letter, was arrested in June, 1861, at the Relay House, and on searching her under garments a quantity of percussion caps and military buttons were found. She is represented to have been a violent secessionist and as having visited the rebel camps in Virginia. The said William F. Getty remained in custody at the Old Capitol February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 29, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to report that a man named William F. Getty arrived here about the 21st of September last from the South; that he was on the following day brought by Mr. Hanscomb, of The New York Herald reporting force, to the residence of General McClellan. Getty represented that he was originally from Baltimore but had been in Virginia, and was there employed by General Johnston, of the rebel army, in writing army orders, &c. Getty made some disclosures to General McClellan calculated in his estimation to give General McClellan a favorable impression of his adaptation to enter the secret service. Soon after he (Getty) made application to Colonel Marcy, chief of staff, for a situation in the secret service of the United States Government under General McClellan, and was at that time referred to me.

In conversation with Getty he told me that he was well acquainted with prominent secessionists in Baltimore, whom he said could not be known to the police force acting under the orders of General Dix. I expressed to Getty my unqualified confidence in the honesty, ability and resources of Provost-Marshal Dodge and his very able assistant, Mr. McPhail. Still Getty insisted that he knew of rebels in Baltimore whom he himself could reach and whom no one else could. I suggested that he might procure a letter from Colonel Marcy to Major-General Dix, to whom he might impart the information which he claimed to possess, and that General Dix might deem it best to give him employment in his department. Getty also pretended to have valuable information about the movements of the secessionists on the Western Shore of Maryland. Having procured a letter of introduction from Colonel Marcy to General Dix Getty left for Baltimore accompanied by Mr. Hanscomb, of The New York Herald, who has been a very warm friend of Getty ever since his arrival here.

Getty called at my office on the 30th day of September last and stated that he had seen General Dix and the general would like very much to avail himself of his services but that he (General Dix) had no fund provided out of which he could pay him (Getty), and that the general had so stated to Colonel Marcy. After a consultation between Colonel Marcy and myself in reference to Getty it was deemed advisable to telegraph General Dix and learn from him of the truth of Getty's statements. The following is a copy of the dispatch sent to General Dix:

WASHINGTON, September 30, 1861.

Major-General DIX, Commanding, Baltimore:

Have you seen Mr. Getty? Do you think his services valuable? If so Mr. Allen will employ him and detail him for your use.

R. B. MARCY,
Chief of Staff.

On the following day a reply was received from General Dix of which the following is a copy:

FORT McHENRY, October 1, 1861.

Col. R. B. MARCY:

I sent Mr. Getty to the police who as Mr. Allen will tell you are thorough and efficient. They report to me as follows:

"Mr. Getty is a very bad man, and is a spy of the Confederates. We arrested his paramour, a notorious courtesan, and read his letter to her. We know him well."

JOHN A. DIX.

I was in the company of Colonel Marcy when he received the foregoing dispatch from General Dix and was by him ordered to arrest Getty as a spy, which order was executed by Getty's arrest within an hour after it was given to me, and he has been ever since confined in the prison corner of Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, northwest, Washington.

Getty upon his arrest denied the charge of being a spy, and I dispatched one of my operatives to Baltimore with letters to General Dix and to Provost-Marshal Dodge and Assistant McPhail for the purpose of obtaining all the evidence which they or either of them might possess bearing on Getty's case. I have further to report that Getty in his conversation with me never alluded to his having had an interview with Marshal Dodge until after the receipt of the telegram from General Dix to Colonel Marcy, and then only when asked by me if he had not seen Marshal Dodge he gave me an affirmative answer, commencing at the same time to use terms of discredit in regard to the marshal aforesaid which were cut short by my arresting Mr. Getty and sending him to the prison as aforesaid. Upon the arrival of my operative at Baltimore he called upon Provost-Marshal Dodge and every facility in his power as well as in that of Deputy McPhail's was furnished to my operative and no opportunity on their part was allowed to pass that might aid his mission, and I beg leave to say here in my report to you that I feel greatly obliged to both of those able and efficient officers for the many ways in which they have shown their kindness to me personally and to very many of my operatives while employed in the business of this office.

Provost-Marshal Dodge stated to my operative in substance that the information which Getty pretended to have in his possession and for imparting which he asked in return that he should be employed in the service of the United States, and in a most responsible position, was nothing more than what had already been published in The Sun newspaper of Baltimore, and therefore possessing no possible value to the Government. The marshal stated further to my operative that Getty's character was bad; that he was associated with a courtesan named Jennie Smith who with Getty went to Virginia in June last; that the said Jennie Smith was arrested by Colonel Jones, of the Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, at the Relay House, having at the time on and about her person a large number of percussion caps; that from Getty's own statement the provost-marshal, Mr. Dodge, was satisfied that Getty had been at Richmond and Winchester, Va., and that his sentiments previous to going to Virginia were secession.

I have further to report that Deputy Provost-Marshal McPhail confirmed and corroborated the facts related to my operative aforesaid by Marshal Dodge, and also further stated that only the week before my operative aforesaid went to Baltimore in relation to Getty's case he (McPhail) had arrested the same woman, Jennie Smith, searching her person and the house in which she was found, and finding upon her person several letters from Getty as Jennie herself acknowledged, over different signatures, sometimes signing himself as "Frank" and again as "Will;" that Deputy McPhail gave to my operative two of said letters, one dated at Frederick, Md., Wednesday night, and addressed to "Beckie," who appears to have been another woman who sometimes passed as "Mrs. Getty;" that the last-mentioned letter reads as follows:

DEAR BECKIE: Jennie was arrested on her way up, but I guess she has been released by this time. Even if not nothing can be done with her. If it had been my case I should have fared differently. Tell Jennie to come up by way of Ellicott's Mills. She can get a buggy to take her to the Mills. After she passes the Relay there is no danger whatever. I was sorry she was detained, but it was far better for her to have been arrested than for me. I expect to see her in a few days.

FRANK.

That the other letter which my operative received from Deputy Marshal McPhail was written by Getty to Jennie Smith, the aforesaid courtesan, and reads as follows :

HARPER'S FERRY, VA., Monday, June 10, 1861.

DEAREST: It is almost impossible to get a letter to you as bridges are being burned almost every day between this point and the Point of Rocks; and as to receiving your replies I can only advise you to direct to Point of Rocks, and take the chances of friends going up and coming down. Mr. Kappelle is still here. We will probably go down to Richmond this week. If I do I will tell you so before I leave.

In haste,

WILL.

P. S.—You had better write Mr. Minnes and have him get letters from box 581 and forward them to you.

That Mr. McPhail told my operative further that he learned from Jennie Smith while she was under arrest by him, as aforesaid, that herself and Getty while in Virginia were agents of The Baltimore Sun; that Jennie stated to him (Mr. McPhail) that she was in favor of the South, and that she would prefer to help them if she could; that Jennie further stated to him (Mr. McPhail) that she had been in company with General Johnston, of the rebel army, several times. And further Mr. McPhail told my operative that he had heard of Getty's arrival in Baltimore, and was on the lookout to arrest him when he learned that Getty had been to the office of the provost-marshal in Baltimore seeking employment with a letter from General Dix, and that he had in his company Mr. Hanscomb, one of the reporters of The New York Herald, being the same gentleman alluded to before in this report.

I beg further to report while in this connection that when Mr. Getty first applied to me for employment after having been referred to me by Colonel Marcy that he (Getty) offered to act as a secret agent of the Government with no other reward than to be allowed to receive at some point on the Potomac near to Frederick, Md., The Baltimore Sun and pass with it beyond our lines into Virginia. A proposition which upon its face was evidence of his unfitness for so responsible a trust as he sought at the hands of General Dix and Colonel Marcy, as well as of his anxiety for some pretext for communicating with the enemy to no good purpose for this Government.

I have further to report that my operative aforesaid called upon General Dix at Fort McHenry where he was received by the general and aided in every way that my operative could desire. My operative reports to me that Major-General Dix told him that Getty came to Fort McHenry at the time before alluded to when he sought employment of the provost-marshal in Baltimore, and brought letters to him (General Dix) from Colonel Marcy, and that Getty on that occasion was accompanied by Mr. Hanscomb, reporter for The Herald aforesaid, and that he made application to him (General Dix) for employment, he (Getty) stating to him (General Dix) that Colonel Marcy and General Porter were very anxious that he (General Dix) should give him (Getty) employment. He (Getty) had never seen General Porter on the subject. That General Dix further stated to my operative aforesaid that as Getty and Hanscomb left his office that Hanscomb remarked to Getty that they (meaning himself and Getty) should have to go back to Washington.

I also ask to further report that upon my operative leaving Baltimore, Deputy Marshal McPhail gave him a letter from himself (McPhail) addressed to me in which he stated among other things in substance that Getty had been engaged ever since the war commenced in giving aid and comfort to the enemy; that he was the chum and lover of the notorious Jennie Smith, who when arrested in June last at the Relay House was found to have percussion caps and military buttons under her garments, and that his (McPhail's) impression was that Getty was gathering information for the rebels rather than for the Federal Government. In concluding his letter to me, the deputy marshal aforesaid says: "If Getty is not guilty of the charge of being a spy he is certainly not fit to be trusted by the Government on account of his associations." In concluding this already perhaps too lengthy report permit me to add that although the evidence of this case is not as full and complete as might be necessary to sustain the charge against Getty of being a spy yet it goes very far to show that he is a dangerous man to be at large in the present exigency of the Government. His own loyalty is at least doubtful and his associations are with persons who sympathize with our enemies. He is an active, educated man, possessing in no small degree the elements of character and the use of means which render his safe-keeping in my judgment a military necessity.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

COMMISSION RELATING TO POLITICAL PRISONERS,

Washington, March 21, 1862.

W. P. WOOD, Esq.,

Supt. of the Old Capitol Military Prison, Washington, D. C.

SIR: You will please discharge William F. Getty * * * on [his] taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,

EDWARDS PIERREPONT,

Commissioners.

I, William F. Getty, of the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Union and Constitution and the Government of the United States as established by that Constitution against all enemies whether domestic or foreign; and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

WM. F. GETTY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 21st day of March, 1862.

EDWARDS PIERREPONT.

Case of William H. Aymar.

William H. Aymar, of New Orleans, claiming to be a British subject, was captured on the 1st of October, 1861, on the schooner Joseph H. Toone, of which he was nominally the owner, off Timblier Island to the southward, apparently endeavoring to evade the blockade and enter the port of New Orleans. The capture was made by Captain Alden, of the U. S. steamer South Carolina. Aymar was detained, as well as the vessel and crew, and was lodged in Fort Lafayette on the 12th of November, 1861. The schooner Joseph H. Toone was an American-built vessel and no information is at hand relative to her transfer to British ownership. It does not appear that any inquiry has been instituted touching the time, place or other circumstances or the good faith of her change of nationality, nor touching the reality of the pretended ownership of Aymar, which he says accrued by purchase just previous to her sailing on this voyage. Aymar left New Orleans on the same vessel on the 25th of August, 1861, and safely evading the blockade arrived at Havana, where the vessel was discharged, again loaded and cleared for Tampico, Mexico, and sailed on the 25th or 26th of September, and was captured on the 1st of October, as before stated. On the 23d of November, 1861, Aymar was released from confinement. In Aymar's correspondence are occasional expressions showing the nature of the enterprise in which he was engaged with his vessel when captured. In a letter addressed to Henry L. Church, who appears to be a partner of Aymar, dated December 6, 1861, he says.*—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON, November 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Mr. William H. Aymar, a British subject who is imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, has made an appeal to Mr. Archibald, Her Majesty's consul at New York. I have the honor to request you to cause orders to be given to enable Mr. Archibald to visit the prisoner.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., November 19, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the 1st of October, 1861, the British schooner Joseph H. Toone, Captain Pennington, bound from Havana to Mexico, owned by me (a British subject) and having on board a cargo principally belonging to Spanish subjects, was seized by the U. S. steamer South Carolina, Captain Alden, and myself, captain and crew have been sent to this fort as prisoners of war. Feeling convinced that the United States Government will do me justice and restore my property on proper proof of my innocence of any intention to run the blockade or in any way violate the strict neutrality which I in common with all Her Britannic Majesty's subjects am commanded to observe, I trust that you will give the necessary instructions for a prompt examination, or if that is not practicable allow me to give sureties to remain in the Northern States until my presence is required by the proper tribunals.

I remain, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. AYMAR.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 21, 1861.

The Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 19th instant requesting that Mr. Archibald may be enabled to visit William H. Aymar, a British subject imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, and to state in reply that orders have been given for his discharge.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

COLONEL: You are hereby authorized to discharge from custody William H. Aymar, a British subject, understood to be in confinement at Fort Lafayette.

I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, November 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant directing the release of William H. Aymar. I have to state that Aymar together with ten other prisoners was this morning released in pursuance of your order dated 22d instant and turned over to Marshal Murray.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Intercepted letter of W. H. Aymar, after his release.*

SAINT ANDREWS, NEW BRUNSWICK, December 6, 1861.

HENRY L. CHURCH,

(Care Mr. Dyas, Richmond Road, London, Canada West.)

DEAR CHURCH: If you are a regular reader of the New York papers you will have noticed that your humble servant was for a time confined as a prisoner of war in Fort Lafayette. As the statements were very incorrect, I will relate all the circumstances of the case from beginning to end.

On the 25th of August last I left New Orleans as passenger on board the British schooner Joseph H. Toone, bound for Havana, Cuba, and loaded with rice, &c. I was interested in the rice, which was sold in Havana to great advantage. After discharging the schooner was put on the berth for Tampico, Mexico, and was soon laden with a general cargo, arms, &c., for said Mexican port. Circumstances caused me to purchase the J. H. Toone just previous to her sailing for Tampico, and in company with other passengers I sailed in her for Tampico on 25th or 26th of last September. Immediately after leaving Havana we experienced a very strong gale which lasted several days, driving us from our course and preventing the captain taking daily observations. On the 1st of October, when from forty to fifty miles from land and to the southward of Timblir Island we fell in with the U. S. steamer South Carolina, Captain Alden, and much to our surprise (as the J. H. Toone was a British vessel, was owned by a British subject, myself, and was quietly proceeding to her port of destination, Tampico) we were seized on suspicion that it was our intention to run the blockade. She had on board a cargo principally belonging to Spanish subjects, and which consisted of articles frequently sent from Havana to Mexico. This cargo had been properly cleared by the custom-house authorities in Cuba, and invoices and bill of health had been duly approved by the Mexican consul.

* There were other intercepted letters, but only one is used as indicating the tone of the whole.—COMPILER.

For some hours after our seizure I confidently expected the release of my vessel, cargo and passengers and was naturally very much surprised when I was informed by Captain Alden, of the steamer South Carolina, that he had concluded to detain vessel and cargo and should send myself, passengers and crew to New York as prisoners of war. Of course I protested at such extraordinary proceedings, but my remonstrances were of no avail and I in company with Mr. Lewis, a brother of General Lewis, of New Orleans, and others taken from the Toone were transferred to a U. S. steam-ship and after remaining on board of her one month we were with all my crew sent to New York in steam-ship Powhatan, and after being compelled to submit to much indignity we were on the 12th of November safely lodged in that far-famed hotel, Fort Lafayette, where I presume we would all have remained until the end of the war had I not been a British subject and entitled to the protection of my Government.

Immediately on landing from the Powhatan I addressed a letter to the British consul at New York, who at once sent me a legal adviser through whom my case was represented to the proper authorities at Washington and to Lord Lyons. The result was an immediate order for the release of all who had been on board the J. H. Toone, with the exception of three or four who were merely placed on parole until their testimony could be taken by the prize commissioners. Our release took place on 23d of November and since that time I have been busily engaged pushing my claim for value of vessel and cargo. I am now quite confident of success and my lawyer tells me that the case is a clear one and that he has no fears for the result. He (the lawyer) occupies a very high position at the bar and is the legal adviser of the British and Spanish consulate and I have every confidence in him and in his ability. The case will probably be decided in thirty or sixty days. All the evidence or testimony has been taken and it is altogether in favor of the vessel. In fact the United States Government or the captors now admit that they seized us merely on suspicion, but in law we were on the high seas being more than forty miles from any land. The claim will amount to at least $100,000 and I am compelled to be in Havana the latter part of this month in order to have the proper authenticated invoices and certificates forwarded to my attorney in New York.

Before I was released I was handed by the marshal a written obligation* which I was requested to sign. * * * I refused to take any such oath or obligation on the ground that I was a British subject, and my nationality prevented my interfering on either side, as my Queen had commanded me in common with all her subjects to observe a strict neutrality. My objection sufficed and I was allowed to go on my way rejoicing, and when I recover my property or the value thereof I will be still more rejoiced; but I am perfectly satisfied that I shall not only get well remunerated for my vessel and the shippers for their goods but hope also one of these days to get damages for false imprisonment.

When I left New Orleans, August 25, your brother was in good health and spirits and hopeful for the future. Just previous to leaving he and I made a short visit to Rienzi Plantation and spent three or four days with Mr. Richard Allen. I also left James Allen in good health. Last season's business closed very satisfactorily—better than I anticipated, but what of the future? Gloomy for the South? Not so. The Southern ports are certain to be opened before many months. Some of the Atlantic cities may have their harbors closed, but the cotton heretofore shipped Cases of Richard H. Stanton and others.

Richard H. Stanton, of Maysville, Ky., was arrested on the 2d day of October, 1861, by order of General Nelson, together with six others whom the general styles "active secessionists," viz: William Hunt, William T. Casto, Isaac Nelson, George Forrester, B. F. Thomas and James H. Hall. In communicating the fact of this arrest to the War Department General Nelson says:†

In pursuance of the said request of General Nelson, Stanton, as well as the persons arrested with him, was soon afterward transferred to Fort Lafayette for safe custody. Stanton by his own representations and through many other persons who interested themselves in his behalf claimed to be loyal and to be guiltless of any act which should have caused his arrest. It has generally happened in the history of arrests made for disloyalty and for precautionary purposes during the present rebellion that persons against whom there has been the most explicit proof or for whose detention the most emphatic reasons existed have made the loudest and most continuous asseverations of loyalty and have marshalled their hosts of personal friends to sustain such asseverations with unexampled unanimity. Although General Nelson did not send forward proofs of the charges which he made against Stanton it was not therefore deemed that the professions of the prisoner and the ex parte testimony of his friends ought to be taken as conclusive of his innocence, especially as in his very appeals for discharge he made and reiterated statements quite inconsistent with such loyal regard for the duties of citizenship as can inspire undoubting confidence in cases like this. On the 4th of November, 1861, Stanton addressed a letter to the Secretary of State in behalf of himself and the others above named arrested with him in which speaking for the whole party he alleges that they had never "engaged in the rebellion or intended to do so, never contributed money, never advised men to go in the Southern army nor in any other manner committed any act of disloyalty to the Government," and then says:

It is proper, however, to say to you that we were in favor of Kentucky's maintaining a neutral position in the contest and equally opposed to the invasion of the State by the Federal forces as by the Confederates, and advocated that policy.

It is unnecessary to remark that the expression of these sentiments is as conclusive proof of a disloyal heart as the commission of any of the acts mentioned by General Nelson.

On the 17th of December, 1861, Stanton addressed a letter to the President of the United States in his own behalf in which he repeats his offensive parallel between the national forces and the rebels, and has the effrontery to use this language:

I was, however, most earnestly opposed to the sending of arms into Kentucky and believed that the arming of one political party against the other could result in no good and was only calculated to engender trouble. I was opposed also to the invasion of the State by either the Federal troops or the Confederates and advocated in good faith the perfect neutrality of Kentucky.

On the 26th day of December, 1861, the said Stanton was released from custody on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.

William T. Casto was arrested at Maysville, Ky., his residence, on the 2d day of October, 1861, by order of General Nelson as being one of a clique of rebels there who were fomenting treason and disturbance in Eastern Kentucky. He was sent to Camp Chase in Ohio and subsequently to Fort Lafayette at General Nelson's request. On the 29th of November, 1861, General Nelson wrote to the Department of State requesting Casto's release on taking the oath of allegiance. On the 4th of December, 1861, in compliance with General Nelson's request Casto was ordered to be released on his taking the oath of allegiance but he declined to receive his discharge from confinement on such terms. On the 17th of January, 1862, another order of like import was made for his enlargement but he again refused to comply with the conditions. The said Casto remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.

Isaac Nelson was arrested by order of General Nelson in Kentucky in October, 1861, and sent to Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio, and from thence transferred to Fort Lafayette. General Nelson writing to the Secretary of State under date of 29th of November, 1861, says:

In October last for reasons that met the approval of the War Department I arrested and sent to Columbus, Ohio, the following active secessionists, viz, R. H. Stanton, William Hunt, William T. Casto, Isaac Nelson, George Forrester, B. F. Thomas and James H. Hall, and I beg to request that these men with the exception of R. H. Stanton may be released on their taking the oath of allegiance.

An order was issued from the Department of State dated December 4, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Nelson on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was released December 7, 1861.

George Forrester was arrested October 2, 1861, in Kentucky, by order of Brigadier-General Nelson and sent to Columbus, Ohio, and from thence he was at the request of General Nelson transferred to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. He was charged with disloyalty and with being an active secessionist. On the recommendation of General Nelson an order was issued from the Department of State dated December 4, 1861, directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Forrester on his taking the oath of allegiance, &c. He was accordingly released December 7, 1861.

B. F. Thomas was arrested by order of General Nelson at Maysville, Ky., and committed to Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio, October 2, 1861, and from thence transferred to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with fitting out men and raising money for the rebel government. An order was issued from the Department of State dated December 4, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Thomas on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the United States nor hold correspondence with persons residing in those States nor do any act hostile to the United States. He was accordingly released December 7, 1861.

William Hunt was arrested in Kentucky by General Nelson about October 1, 1861, taken to Camp Chase in Ohio, and afterward transferred to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with being a violent secessionist and attempting to aid the rebels with money and with recruiting men for the Confederate Army. He was released by order of the Secretary of State December 7, 1861, on taking the oath of allegiance.

James H. Hall was arrested October 2, 1861, at Maysville, Ky., by General Nelson, committed to Camp Chase and afterward transferred to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. Hall was charged with having strong secession sympathies and with assisting the rebels with money and men. He was released December 7, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State on taking the oath of allegiance.

The first information the Department of State had concerning this man [William B. Tolle] was a letter from General W. Nelson dated October 5, 1861, directed to Hon. S. P. Chase and referred to this Department, in which General Nelson says he arrested Tolle and others on the 2d instant on a charge of fitting out men for the Southern army, subscribing moneys, &c., and asking his release at the request of his Union relatives; that he will be kept under surveillance, &c. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 5, 1861, directing A. C. Sands, U. S. marshal of Ohio, to release Tolle on his taking the oath of allegiance, engaging not to enter or hold correspondence with any insurrectionary State during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 17, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

CAMP KENTON, Maysville, Ky., October 5, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Washington City.

DEAR SIR: On the 2d instant I arrested several traitorous scoundrels who were engaged in fitting out men for the Southern army, subscribing moneys, getting up nightly drills and doing the manner of things usual among the secessionists. These men with the Hon. R. H. Stanton at their head I sent to Cincinnati to the care of the U. S. marshal there, and I trust they will be cared for effectually. Their arrest has relieved the community here of an incubus the most depressing.

Amongst them is a man named W. B. Tolle. His wife is a good Union woman of a good Union family. Hon. W. H. Wadsworth, the Member of Congress from this district, offers to be responsible for his future conduct if I will ask his release and provided Tolle will take the oath of allegiance of which there even seems to be some doubt. I promised his father-in-law to ask his release this morning, and I request that you will do me the favor to cause him to be discharged if he takes the oath of allegiance. My object is to show these rascals that we believe ourselves strong enough to afford to be generous. I will have him kept under surveillance and if he shows the slightest restiveness I will bag him afresh. His public arrest attracting attention to him will take away his power to do harm and make him afraid to attempt it. The rascal subscribed $200 to fit out a secession company, but at the earnest request of his Union relatives I am willing he should be let off—till next time.

Begging your favorable attention to this, I remain, yours, truly,
W. NELSON.

[Indorsement.]

Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

Though averse in general to the release of parties arrested yet if the case is in your jurisdiction I hope you will give the order Nelson desires. The prisoners I believe are at Camp Chase, near Columbus.

S. P. CHASE.

CAMP KENTON, Near Maysville, Ky., October 7, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: On the 2d instant I ordered the arrest of Hon. R. H. Stanton, formerly Member of Congress from this district, and with him six other active secessionists and sent them down to Cincinnati, Ohio, to the care of General Mitchel. This man Stanton is the head of secession in Northeast Kentucky. He is the depositary of money for fitting out men from this and adjoining counties for the Southern army. He was actively engaged at the time of his arrest in establishing and maintaining nightly drills of armed traitors. He is in regular correspondence with Richmond, Va.

He received and announced to his traitor friends a message from Breckinridge but the day before his arrest to this effect: That he (Breckinridge) would be back at Prestonburg on or about the 10th of October and would assume command as general, and that all the companies willing to serve under him would meet at that spot; and further that the main body of Beauregard's army would winter in Kentucky and that they (the secessionists) need not be afraid; they would be supported. As many as eight mounted messengers have left Stanton's house in one night. He has harbored in his house an officer of the Confederate Army. Two hundred and fifty-nine armed men of this neighborhood have gone to Prestonburg under his advice and aid. He is the soul of the rebellion in this part of Kentucky. After becoming satisfied of his doings I arrested him and sent him to General Mitchel and he is now at Camp Chase.

My object in writing is to request that he may be removed farther from the scene of his villainies. He is too close to us still. He is a man of wonderful intellectual energy, personally truculent and cowardly but morally a very Catiline. His arrest has struck secession dumb here.

Very respectfully,

W. NELSON,
Brigadier-General,

HARRISON TAYLOR, Esq.,

F. T. HOOD, Esq.

GENTLEMEN: We appeal to you as fellow-townsmen and personal friends to lay before the proper authorities this communication and if possible procure our release or return to Kentucky. We assure you that it is not our intention and never has been in any manner to violate any law of the Federal or State government or to resist the authorities of either. The constituted authorities of the State having declared by legal enactments the policy of the Government and the duty of its citizens the only course for us and all other persons in the State is to give cheerful obedience to the laws. This we have always intended to and we pledge ourselves we will in good faith do if permitted to return home.

We authorize you for each and all of us to pledge us to the proper authorities that as good citizens we will give implicit obedience to the laws of the Federal and State governments and in no manner knowingly resist or violate either. We are citizens of Kentucky; our fate and our fortunes are identified with her and she having decided the controversy between the parties we deem it our duty cheerfully to acquiesce in the decision of the constituted authorities and to give to the laws of Kentucky and of the United States our cordial obedience. We trust you know us well enough to believe that this pledge will be kept in good faith.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: In pursuance of your telegram to the marshal of this district directing the release of W. B. Tolle, of Mason County, Ky., a prisoner at Camp Chase, Ohio, I have the honor to inform you that the prisoner has been released on taking and subscribing the oath of allegiance to the Government, which oath subscribed by him is herewith inclosed.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. BALL,
U. S. Attorney.

NEW YORK CITY, November 4, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Myself and six other citizens from Maysville, Ky., were arrested at that place on the 2d day of October, 1861, by order of General Nelson, then in command of the camp at that place, under a general charge of treason against the United States. At the time we were taken we were engaged in our usual and ordinary occupations, never having been in any manner engaged in the rebellion or intended to do so. We never contributed money, never advised men to go in the Southern army, nor in any other manner committed any act of disloyalty to the Government. We have never been informed of any specific charge against us and are utterly unconscious of having done anything to justify our arrest.

It is proper, however, to say to you that we were in favor of Kentucky maintaining a neutral position in the contest and equally opposed to the invasion of the State by the Federal forces or by the Confederates and advocated that policy, hoping that the State would be in a position to maintain peace within her borders and mediate between the two sections so as to restore peace and safety to the Union. But Kentucky by her legally constituted authorities decided not to remain neutral and passed laws in pursuance of that policy. As good citizens we felt it our duty to obey the laws of the State and at the time of our arrest as we had always done were giving cheerful obedience to the laws of both the State and Federal governments.

When arrested at Maysville one circuit judge issued a writ of habeas corpus in our behalf which was not allowed by the general to be executed and we were hurried away from the State. In Ohio a similar writ was issued by the judge of the U. S. court and that forbidden to be executed by General Mitchel who sent us to Camp Chase where we have been kept for a month and are now on our way to Fort Lafayette where we have been ordered.

Thus you see that we have made every effort in our power to have a legal investigation of our case and to meet any charges which may exist against us if any but with no effect. We are citizens of the State of Kentucky, disposed to obey all the laws of it and the Federal Government, and have been thus as we most humbly conceive most unjustly dealt with. We have never been disloyal to the Government nor intended to be, and are willing in good faith to take the oath of allegiance and keep it with scrupulous fidelity. We appeal to you to permit our release on the condition that we take the oath of allegiance; or if you prefer it direct that we be returned to Kentucky and delivered to some U. S. commissioner to inquire into our cases and if there be any charges against us that we may be tried by the loyal tribunals of this country.

The following are the names of the prisoners: R. H. Stanton, Benjamin F. Thomas, William Hunt, William T. Casto, George Forrester, Isaac Nelson and James H. Hall.

* Omitted.

We understand we are ordered by you to Fort Lafayette. The prisoners from that fort have been ordered to Fort Warren. We beg you not to permit us to be taken to Fort Warren but return us to Cincinnati or to Kentucky by the guard now with us, that our cases may be legally examined if you will not order our release upon the terms above proposed.

Very respectfully,

R. H. STANTON.

MAYSVILLE, KY., November 11, 1861.

The undersigned citizens of Maysville would state that they are well acquainted with their fellow-citizens R. H. Stanton, James H. Hall, Benjamin F. Thomas, Isaac Nelson, William T. Casto, William Hunt and George Forrester who have lately been arrested in our city and sent out of our State for either past political offenses or from apprehension that such offenses might be committed by them. We are informed by those in whom we have confidence that all these prisoners (with the exception of Mr. Casto, who protests his innocence of any offense and demands a trial) have over their own signatures pledged themselves to abide by and perform all the laws of the State and Federal governments and yield a cheerful acquiescence to all such authority; that as Kentucky has taken her position in the controversy now dividing the country, and that as good citizens whose interests are identified with her they will do nothing to militate against that position. We are also informed that all of these prisoners without exception have signified their entire willingness to take the oath of allegiance to the State and Federal governments, and this they propose to do cheerfully and willingly. They are also willing to be tried by any of the courts of Kentucky for any and every charge that may be preferred against them or to give any bonds with security of undoubted character for their future good behavior. From our personal knowledge of these gentlemen and their standing, position and character in our community if they should now under all the circumstances take the oath of allegiance or otherwise promise fidelity and loyalty to the general and State governments we believe that full confidence may be placed in their complying with that obligation.

October 14, 1861. These men were arrested in this city, sent to Camp Chase and from there to Fort Lafayette where they are now confined. We understand that they are political prisoners. We are not, however, fully informed of the exact nature of the charges preferred against them or upon which they were arrested.

The original communication from them is in the possession of Brigadier-General Nelson but we transmit herewith a true copy of it. Without intending to be understood as indorsing the protestations of innocence contained in the document we respectfully ask that they may be discharged from imprisonment and returned to their families upon condition that they will come under such obligations as will satisfy the Government and the community to which they desire to return of their intention hereafter to conduct themselves as loyal, obedient citizens to the constituted authorities of both the Federal and State governments. We also take the liberty of laying before you a copy of the proclamation of Brigadier-General Sherman, lately in command of the Military Department of Kentucky, concerning arrests of this character.

HON. SECRETARY OF WAR:

I have read the letter on the other side of this sheet from General Sherman to William Nelson Newell. I have no hesitation in advising the release of Isaac Nelson upon his agreeing to be a loyal citizen of SIR: In October last for reasons that met the approval of the War Department I arrested and sent to Columbus, Ohio, the following active secessionists, viz, R. H. Stanton, William Hunt, William T. Casto, Isaac Nelson, George Forrester, B. F. Thomas and James H. Hall. At my request these persons were afterward transferred to Fort Lafayette. The campaign on the Big Sandy has completely quieted the eastern portion of Kentucky for the present at least, and I beg to request that these men with the exception of R. H. Stanton may be released on their taking the oath of allegiance which they are willing and anxious to do. I am satisfied that this course in regard to them would be of service to the cause in that portion of the State. Their power to do harm is at an end even if they were so inclined, and they are too small game to hold longer.

Not so, however, with Stanton. He served several terms in Congress and is an astute, truculent fellow and the head of the secession movement in Northeastern Kentucky. This man's industry and being wholly unscrupulous renders him too dangerous to be turned loose.

Trusting that it may suit your views of policy to grant my request, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Having called to pay my respects to you without succeeding in obtaining an interview I trouble you with this letter. A number of my constituents and townsmen were arrested by Brigadier-General Nelson in Maysville, Ky., sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, and thence to Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. I remember the following, viz, R. H. Stanton, esq., W. T. Casto, James H. Hall, Benjamin F. Thomas, William Hunt, Isaac Nelson and George Forrester. These persons were arrested without warrant and instantly hurried from their homes and State and a trial by habeas corpus denied. The public safety may require the arrest and detention in this manner of dangerous and important persons; nevertheless I do not entertain a doubt but that a number of these citizens should at once be discharged and sent home to their families and friends. I will name such as I place in this class: William Hunt, Benjamin F. Thomas, Isaac Nelson, George Forrester and James H. Hall. The four first named are unimportant persons—very much out of place in Fort Lafayette. I do not believe anything can be established against them but secession talk and sentiments. * * *

General Nelson after their arrest freely consulted with me and I with him and I assert that no facts came to our knowledge compromising them. General Nelson promised me before we left for Prestonburg to interfere in their behalf, and expressed the opinion that they should be allowed to come home. Their families (my neighbors) are in great distress. They promise obedience to the laws. They are slight, unimportant people. I strongly recommend their immediate release and to this end I am a respectful petitioner. I protest against their further imprisonment without a trial at least in the loyal and peaceful place of their arrest.

It would be gratifying to the Kentucky Members of Congress as well as to myself to know that Mr. Stanton and Charles S. Morehead and other Kentuckians held as prisoners are made as comfortable as their former standing and habits require and the public interest permits. I trust you will excuse this remark since I have heard through a colleague that Mr. Morehead was not comfortably lodged.

With sentiments of great respect, I have the honor to be, very truly, your obedient servant, &c.,

W. H. WADSWORTH,

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, New York, December 11, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The inclosed letter was received by me this day from R. H. Stanton now confined in Fort Lafayette. I know nothing of the merits of his case beyond the fact that the five Kentuckians discharged by me on Saturday in pursuance to your order vouched for his loyalty and his willingness to take the oath of allegiance. I accordingly promised to forward any communication that he might send me in relation to his arrest to the Department of State, and await your instructions.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT MURPAY,
U. S. Marshal.

[Inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., December 7, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal.

MY DEAR SIR: I understand you were at the fort to-day, and I regret that I could not have had an interview with you. The Kentucky prisoners who were arrested with me you are aware were released to-day. Our cases are precisely alike. None of us had committed any offense and there existed in the Department at Washington no charges against either of us. I am detained I have not the least doubt through the instrumentality of one or two malignant men who have abused the confidence of General Nelson. I have never taken any part in the rebellion, never designed to do so, nor have I contributed in any way to aid it. I have always given cheerful obedience to the laws, never advocated the secession of Kentucky, and have always been willing to take and keep in good faith the oath of allegiance. I have been informed by Mr. Forrester that you kindly propose to intercede for my release upon a statement from me of what I am willing to do. I do not know anything else I can do more than take the oath of allegiance. The rebellion does not rage in my region nor do I know of any intention there upon the part of anybody to engage in it. If I had the disposition to do wrong I could do no harm there and no possible injury could result from my release. If you can aid me in effecting it I shall be under everlasting obligations to you.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

P. S.—My health has been very much impaired since my confinement and I feel sure I cannot improve in that respect while here.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., December 17, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

President of the United States.

SIR: Near three months ago while giving cheerful obedience to the laws and in the peaceful pursuit of my usual and ordinary occupations I with several other citizens of Maysville, Ky., was arrested by order of General William Nelson and sent to Ohio, where I was imprisoned at Camp Chase for a month and from thence transferred to this fort where I have been kept confined ever since.

At the time of my arrest there was no insurrection in my neighborhood and none intended or contemplated. I had never engaged in the rebellion or thought for a single moment of doing so. I never encouraged others to do so, but on the contrary exerted myself to restrain the young men of my county from going off to the rebel army, and practical proof of this fact I am informed is on record in the State Department.

I was, however, most earnestly opposed to the sending of arms into Kentucky, and believed that the arming of one political party against the other could result in no good and was only calculated to engender trouble. I was opposed also to the invasion of the State by either the Federal troops or the Confederates and advocated in good faith the perfect neutrality of Kentucky, believing if the war could be kept from within her borders it would not only save her from a terrible calamity but place her in such a position as would enable her to mediate between the parties and bring about a restoration of peace and re-establishment of the Union. I sincerely believed if when in your letter to Governor Magoffin you left the matter of the withdrawal of the Federal troops from the State to the Union Representatives of Kentucky they had agreed to a withdrawal both armies would have been withdrawn and the State not only saved from the horrors of war, but in a position by her wise counsels to have brought about a peaceful settlement of the national troubles. In accordance with these views I voted. My views in this respect may have been unwise and erroneous but they were at least sincere. Because I entertained and advocated them I was I suppose considered a secessionist.

I never did advocate the secession of Kentucky and no man lives who can truthfully say I did. I know that I have been misrepresented and maligned to the Government. It can only have been done by men who are my personal foes. I declare to you upon the honor of a gentleman that I never had a thought of disobeying any law of either the State or General Government or taking part in any rebellion either against the State or Federal Government. When the legislature of Kentucky after Governor Magoffin's receipt of your letter refused to request the withdrawal of the Federal troops and established a different policy, I considered the questions which before that had divided the people as finally settled and as a good citizen I deemed it my duty to submit to and obey the laws which the constituted authorities of the State had enacted in pursuance of that policy. I did obey the laws and never had a thought of doing otherwise.

General Nelson when he caused my arrest knew nothing personally of my disposition or sentiments. I feel satisfied if he had known my real views, conduct and intentions I would not have been arrested. He doubtless acted from the representations of others who misled him. It was natural to suppose that because I was earnestly opposed to arming one party in the State against the other, opposed to making Kentucky a bloody battlefield and in favor of neutrality that I was therefore a secessionist and rebel. I was neither, and at the time of my arrest was giving cheerful obedience to the laws, quietly pursuing my ordinary business and with no thought or intention of disloyalty either to the Federal or State government.

I have signified my perfect willingness to take the oath of allegiance and have never doubted that my public and private character were a sufficient guarantee that I would keep it in good faith. It seems, however, that I cannot be released and am kept a prisoner here. Those arrested with me have all been released upon taking the oath of allegiance and I cannot comprehend the reason why I am made the solitary exception to a rule which it seems has been applied to all others against whom no charges of crime are alleged, which I understand is true as to myself. I appeal to your justice and humanity to cause me to be released. I declare before high Heaven that I have done nothing or ever intended to do anything which if done would merit this punishment. If I am charged with any act of disloyalty or intention to commit any act of disloyalty it is a monstrous falsehood come from whom it may.

I have a very large, helpless and dependent family, perhaps as large if not the very largest in my neighborhood, upon whom my exile from home and imprisonment falls most heavily. They need my care and protection, and I beg you to interpose your authority and spare them further suffering by ordering my release. With great confidence in your sense of justice and humanity, I am, with the highest respect, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., December 18, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to inclose you an article taken from The Maysville (Ky.) Eagle of the 12th instant containing a refutation of a vile and infamous calumny which it seems has been used to fasten upon me the guilt of disloyalty, and I respectfully ask that the article may have your attention. I have been imprisoned now near three months and though having made every exertion in my power to ascertain what charges were made against me this is the only specific and definite one of which I have yet heard. I suppose it forms the basis of General Nelson's request of the Department that I may be detained as a prisoner. It turns out to be a base and slanderous falsehood and shows with what facility in these times bad men may engender mischief.

If there are any other charges against me directly imputing disloyal acts or intentions or even insinuating them against me I declare before high Heaven they are false no matter by whom made, and I pledge my life that they are as susceptible of as clear and satisfactory a refutation as the one referred to in The Eagle. General Nelson when he caused my arrest knew nothing nor could he have known anything personally of either my conduct, disposition or sentiments in regard to the then existing troubles. He has no doubt therefore been imposed upon and misled by bad men who are too ready in these times to invent slanders upon those whom they dislike and to magnify mere suspicions into veritable facts.

With the highest respect, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

[Inclosure.]

The gentlemen who were arrested in this city by order of General Nelson last fall have been released and have returned to this city, with the exception of Messrs. Stanton and Casto who were detained in custody. The citizens of Maysville are pleased with the release of these gentlemen from confinement, receiving it as an indication that the Government has satisfactory assurances that their being at liberty will not be productive of evil to the cause or disturb the peace of this community. We are informed that Mr. Casto refused to take the oath and the Government officials did not feel justified in releasing him until he had entered into obligations of fealty to the Government.

We have not been informed of the special reasons which induced the longer confinement of Mr. Stanton but we are told it was done by the order of General Nelson who may have evidence against him sufficient to warrant a civil prosecution. We feel that it is due to Mr. Stanton to correct a misstatement concerning him made by this paper on what any one would take as good authority. In speaking of the skirmish at Grayson we said that one of the prisoners had made a confession which implicated Mr. Stanton in a conspiracy to invade Kentucky and seize upon this city. We are informed that the man, whose name is Martin, has made oath that he never made such a confession and that he knows nothing of any connection of Mr. Stanton with the raids upon this State.

FRANKFORT, KY., December 19, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned Union members of the General Assembly of Kentucky earnestly request that Richard H. Stanton, of Kentucky, now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, may be returned to Kentucky for trial before the proper tribunal within this Commonwealth. We are satisfied that the detention longer of Mr. Stanton will subserve no public interest. His return for trial will gratify many true friends of the Government, satisfied as they are that if Mr. S. has been guilty of an offense against the Government he will be punished; if innocent an opportunity will be afforded him to vindicate himself.

Very respectfully,

George P. Webster, Cyrus Campbell, Jno. W. Finnell, L. W. Andrews, Geo. H. Yeaman, Joseph Ricketts, J. R. Thomas, W. L. Conklin, Rich'd J. Browne, F. L. Cleveland, Rich'd A. Buckner, Geo. M. Thomas, Wm. J. Heady, H. Griffith, J. H. Harney, V. B. Young, J. W. Anderson, B. J. Clay, James Calvert, J. B. Cochran, R. Cochran, A. A. Curtis, Alf. Allen.

We would be satisfied with the release of Mr. Stanton upon his taking the oath of allegiance and voluntarily coming under obligations to the Government and to the community to which he desires to return to conduct himself as a loyal citizen to the State and Federal governments.

George Poindexter, H. Taylor, W. C. Ireland, P. L. Maxey, V. B. Young, D. P. Mears, L. W. Andrews, Alex. Lusk, Otho Miller, Joseph Ricketts, James Calvert, J. B. Cochran, R. Cochran, C. F. Bruneaux, A. A. Curtis, J. R. Underwood, B. R. Young, N. A. Rapier, R. Gibson, Alf. Allen, Zeb. Ward, D. W. Johns, John W. Campbell, J. R. Thomas, W. L. Conklin, R. J. Browne, F. L. Cleveland, H. Griffith, Wm. J. Heady, J. H. Harney, J. Tevis, Nat Wolfe, J. W. Anderson, J. P. Sparks, S. G. England, W. S. Rankin.

The undersigned Union senators concur in the request that R. H. Stanton be restored to his liberty on taking required oath.

FORT LAFAYETTE, December 22, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

SIR: I had the honor a few days since to address you on the subject of my imprisonment at this place. You will pardon me if I again trespass upon your attention. I have never been allowed to know the exact charges upon which I have been now three months confined, but General Leslie Coombs, of Kentucky, informed my brother a few days ago that he had heard in Kentucky that General Nelson's charges against me were of having had meetings and consultations at my house in aid and encouragement of the rebellion, and also that I had some agency in procuring arms for the intended resistance to the Government in that quarter. If it be true that such charges are made against me I can only say that they are in every particular false and untrue without even the shadow of a foundation in truth. No such meetings or consultations were ever held at my house at any time by anybody nor would I have for a moment permitted it. No arms to my knowledge were ever procured or sought to be procured by me or any one else of whom I knew nor was any resistance to the Government ever intended or contemplated that I know of. The whole story is a fabrication. Fortunately for me two gentlemen of the highest standing and respectability, Mr. Hiram Bassett, teller in the Maysville Bank of Kentucky and now grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, and his father, James Bassett, esq., lived at my house at the time and have actual personal knowledge that these charges of General Nelson are false. They were present at home all the time I was myself and no such meetings could possibly have occurred without their knowledge. General Leslie Coombs, now in Washington, knows both these gentlemen and can bear testimony to their high character and integrity. I refer to them as well as to all my neighbors in vindication of myself against these foul calumnies. You are too just to permit a citizen to be unjustly oppressed if you can prevent it and I appeal to you again to interfere and either direct my absolute release or grant me a parole that I may have an opportunity of vindicating myself in some satisfactory way against what I again assure you are utterly false and groundless charges.

With the highest respect, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

FORT LAFAYETTE, December 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: General Leslie Coombs, of Kentucky, informed my brother a few days ago that he had heard in Kentucky that the charges made by General William Nelson against me were of having held meetings and consultations at my house in aid and encouragement of the rebellion; also that I had some agency in procuring arms for the intended resistance to the Government in that quarter. My word against that of General Nelson may not be of much weight in my present situation, but I beg nevertheless to say that if such are the charges upon which I am held a prisoner there is not one word of truth in them nor the shadow of foundation in truth for even a suspicion of the kind. There never was a meeting or consultation for such a purpose at my house or any other place that ever I attended. I never invited any living soul there for that purpose nor did even any person come nor would I have permitted it.

It is equally false that I had any agency in procuring arms for the "intended resistance to the Government in that quarter." No arms so far as I know ever were procured for such a purpose or sought to be procured, nor was there to my knowledge any design to resist the Government or take up arms or otherwise engage in the rebellion in that quarter

I am perfectly amazed that such charges have been made by General Nelson, and am utterly at a loss to imagine how even a suspicion of such conduct on my part could have been indulged. Fortunately for me two gentlemen of the highest standing and respectability in Maysville lived at my house at the time—Hiram Bassett, esq., teller in the Bank of Kentucky, and his father—both of whom know these charges against me to be false. They were there at my house all the time when I myself was there and I refer to them and all my neighbors in vindication of myself against these foul calumnies. General Leslie Coombs is now in Washington; has known Mr. Hiram Bassett (who is now grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky) for many years and can assure you of his integrity and high character. He also knows Mr. James Bassett, his father. I beg further to say that I never wrote a line to any living man in the seceded States on the subject of the rebellion nor to any one elsewhere in promotion of the rebellion; nor did I ever write or talk to any man with a view of procuring arms to resist the Government and never entertained the idea for a single moment of encouraging or aiding such resistance.

Having thus recorded my denial of General Nelson's charges against me as far as I have learned them, and referred you to persons by whom they can be actually disproved, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let Richard H. Stanton, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

I, Richard H. Stanton, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

R. H. STANTON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of December, 1861.

HARRY B. NOBLE,

First Lieut., Eighth Infantry, Judge-Advocate of Court-Martial.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *January 10, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I take the liberty of addressing you, presuming upon an acquaintance made some years ago on Lake Superior, when you were traveling with Mr. Hanscom, of Michigan, from Sault Ste. Marie to Superior City. If you should fail to recollect me you may remember a little excursion up the Bay of Superior to some aborigine lodges on the 4th of July, 1855, and a certain passage at arms "a la skiff oar" with one of the party on our return.

It is hardly necessary to say to you that I am prisoner here or to detail to you the particulars of my arrest and imprisonment. I will merely state that on the 2d day of October ultimo I was arrested in the town of Maysville, Ky., by the order of General William Nelson and hurried off to Camp Chase in the State of Ohio where I remained one month and was removed thence to this place. Both at Maysville and Cincinnati I endeavored faithfully to ascertain the cause of my arrest and only learned a short time since that no charges have been preferred against me. At the time of my arrest there was no excitement whatever in the part of the State where I lived, and General Nelson established his military camp near our town among citizens who were quietly pursuing their ordinary avocations.

I should not complain of the treatment I have received at the hands of my enemies if I had done anything to deserve it, and one would think that more than three months' imprisonment utterly without cause would be sufficient to gratify the malice of a fiend. My views in regard to the proper position for Kentucky to take in the rebellion could have been the only possible pretext for my arrest, for otherwise I had taken no part in politics whatever. I favored the neutrality of Kentucky which was advocated as you know at one time or another by every party in the State, and have been always anxious for the restoration of peace, as I have property interests both in the North and South.

I have been informed by authority that no charges have been sent against me to the office of the Secretary of State, and I think surely I ought to be allowed my parole. I do not know how to proceed unless it be to request some friends to call upon the Secretary of State and make my statement. I have property in Kentucky which I am willing to pledge for my parole if it cannot be obtained otherwise. Three persons, Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent, have been thus released, and I see by this morning's papers that Governor Morehead of Kentucky has been released on his parole. I have no claims upon you except the common claim of humanity, but I shall be ever grateful to you if you will make my cause known to the proper authorities and secure my release from this long confinement. Will you be kind enough to reply to my letter?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. T. CASTO.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let W. T. Casto, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

FORT LAFAYETTE, January 17, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Learning that all communications from prisoners in regard to their cases must be directed to you and not to any one in the character of attorney or agent, I take this opportunity of respectfully presenting mine. I was arrested in Maysville in the State of Kentucky on the 2d day of October last, by order of General William Nelson and was immediately sent to the State of Ohio, where at Camp Chase near Columbus I was kept for one month and was thence removed to this place where I have since been detained.

I have endeavored assiduously to learn the cause of my arrest but have not heard up to this time that any charges whatever have been alleged against me either in Kentucky or in Washington, and indeed I am confident that none to my prejudice can be sustained. At the time of my arrest there was no excitement in regard to the rebellion in the part of the State where I lived, but on the contrary all was peaceful and quiet, and so far as I know there was no one aiding the rebellion by speech or act. If my arrest was made to gratify the private malice of enemies at home I think that an imprisonment of nearly four months far away from my business and friends would be sufficient to gratify even them, but if they should desire that I be sent to Kentucky to answer charges of treason or any other charges I would gladly accept the opportunity it would give me to disprove any and all allegations that have been made to injure me in the estimation of the community in which I reside. If, however, you should not think it advisable to send me home for trial I would be glad to receive a parole that will enable me to visit my home at least for a short time that I may settle my business which I left in a deranged condition with nobody in my stead to take charge of it. At the beginning of the year the debts that have accrued in my favor and against me cannot be arranged by an agent without great detriment to my interests; but I desire a parole chiefly that I may visit a near female relative residing at Aberdeen in the State of Ohio who is at the point of death and whom it would be a great gratification to see once more if only for a short time. Inclosed you will find a letter* which I received concerning her a few days ago.

I have no friend in Washington to whom I can refer you except perhaps Col. W. A. Richardson, of Illinois, whom I met some years ago on Lake Superior. I am not certain that he will remember me, but I can refer you to Col. W. H. Lytle, U. S. Army, of Cincinnati, who is my friend and who I feel confident would cheerfully serve me at this time.

* Omitted.

I may further state that I have some property in Kentucky and would be able to give bond and security for the faithful observance of my parole.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. T. CASTO.

P. S.—Will you be kind enough to return the inclosed letter?

W. T. C.

FORT LAFAYETTE, January 20, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Having written to you a few days ago in regard to a parole and receiving yesterday a proffer of a release conditioned on my taking the oath of allegiance, to prevent any misapprehension on your part on account of my failure to take the oath I avail myself of the delay of my former letter which has not yet reached you to address you a few lines that will explain it.

The order states that I was arrested on the 5th of November, whereas I was arrested on the 2d of October and have been in prison now nearly four months. My former letter will explain to you the circumstances of my arrest and other facts not necessary to be repeated here. I am confident as are all my friends at home that my arrest was made to gratify the private malice of secret enemies and not on account of any disloyal acts or intentions, which acts or intentions they have been unable or fear to allege against me. If any charges could have been even plausibly preferred against me it is reasonable to suppose that nearly four months during my imprisonment would have given ample opportunity. I have never during this long time requested my release and have awaited patiently the returning sense of justice of those who were instrumental in bringing me to this trouble.

A few weeks ago I addressed letters to Hons. J. J. Crittenden and L. W. Powell to interest themselves to procure me a parole, but they have not replied thinking I suppose it was not the policy of the Government to grant them. But finding that paroles were subsequently permitted to some who were in this and other places for valid reasons I have since addressed one letter to yourself and another to Colonel Richardson, of Illinois, the only gentleman in Washington with whom I can claim an acquaintance. The oath in my case it seems to me would imply that I have at least given some cause to justify my long imprisonment and thus far gratify the malice of enemies who have traduced my character during my absence and otherwise seriously injured me. As I stated in my former letter my business has suffered and at the beginning of the year must suffer greatly more without my personal attention. A short visit home would enable me to arrange my matters which I left in a very confused condition. I have a near, dying relative concerning whom I sent you a letter inclosed in my former whom a parole would enable me to see likely for the last time. These, sir, are the only reasons I have to offer you for a brief parole. I hope you may deem them sufficient.

Very respectfully,

W. T. CASTO.

P. S.—Inclosed you will find the letter* referred to in my former letter but which was omitted by mistake.

Case of Capt. Michael Berry.

Capt. Michael Berry, of the "high seas," was arrested by order of the Secretary of State in New York October 7, 1861, and conveyed to Fort Lafayette, and was on the 1st of November transferred to Fort Warren. The charges against Captain Berry were his openly expressed sympathy for the rebel cause; talked secession loudly and publicly, and when captain of a steamer running between New York and Charleston and after South Carolina had formally seceded he carried the rebel flag into and out of the port of Charleston, and that as a token of his loyalty to the rebel cause he was presented with and accepted a cane from a committee of citizens of Charleston. The said Michael Berry remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 24, 1861.

Hon. SETH C. HAWLEY, New York.

SIR: Herewith I transmit to you certain statements in reference to the case of Capt. Michael Berry, now confined in Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

Will you please consult John A. Kennedy, esq., superintendent of police, and remit to me with your opinion thereon these papers?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, November 2, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 24th October in relation to the case of Capt. Michael Berry was received in due course of mail. I have delayed replying for a few days, making search for evidence against Mr. Berry. I do not find any one who can prove any specific acts of Captain Berry. The officers and sailors who sailed under him to and from the port of Charleston during the time when he carried the rebel flag are now absent with the great naval expedition. The arrest of Mr. Berry was made upon the newspaper statements of the time.

For the purposes of this communication I assume that the allegations against him are true. He has talked secession loudly and publicly. When captain of a steamer running between this city and Charleston and after South Carolina had formally seceded he carried the rebel flag on his ship into and out of the port of Charleston, and this defiantly in the face of Fort Sumter while yet in possession of U. S. forces. I take him to be guilty enough and that his guilt could be established by competent proof. I come to this conclusion from circumstances and the general report of his conduct by his friends.

I suppose, however, that the Government does not desire to imprison every man who has been guilty of treason, but only those whose liberty is inconsistent with the public safety. Captain Berry is not a man of influence or position nor has he any marked degree of ability. He is intemperate in his habits and indiscreet in his manner. In manner he is what is described in vulgar phrase a "blower." His conduct while running to and from the port of Charleston was induced by commercial greed which leads astray numbers of better men than he. He flattered the self-love of the rebels and thus secured their applause, with which he was weak enough to be flattered, and their money. The carrying of the Palmetto flag was of little account practically. It did the United States no harm and the rebels no good. It was only a badge of treason indicating the animus of the man. Undoubtedly freights were carried in his ship which offered real "aid and comfort to the enemy." But of this there are no proofs nor has that ever been alleged against him as an offense.

I think the public safety does not require the further detention of Captain Berry and that he may safely be discharged on taking the oath of allegiance. Captain Berry in his commercial intercourse with Charleston acted for Spofford & Tileston, the distinguished shipping house. The freights of his ship were theirs, and though there is no doubt that the firm in question forwarded vast quantities of freights which were contraband of war, even arms and ammunition, clothing and military stores, yet no one, not even the Federal officials, ever questioned their transactions. They were the principals in the treasonable business and he the agent. While they are at large and respected and cherished he ought not to be in durance unless the public safety demands it.

Nevertheless if you wish me in these respects to found my conclusions upon the legal guilt or innocence of the parties, then I should be constrained to report adverse to Captain Berry. But if the suggested considerations of public policy may be taken into account, then for the reasons stated I should report in favor of setting Captain Berry at liberty.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY,
Chief Clerk.

I herewith return the letter of Messrs. Beebe, Dean & Donohue.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have to-day made my first visit to Fort Warren. * * * I am engaged in ascertaining who among the political prisoners are clearly not cases to be set at liberty. By to-morrow I expect to complete that list, which will narrow the field of inquiry. From among the balance I shall then try to find out those who clearly ought to be set at liberty. I think in some cases and I fear in many I may be compelled to ask you for such papers as you may have on file, but of that hereafter.

I see that Michael Berry is yet a prisoner. I am glad of it. I fear my conclusion forwarded you in his case was erroneous. Hope he will not be dismissed on the strength of it but held for further consideration. He is more of a man and therefore more dangerous than I thought.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Since writing you a note from Boston in relation to Capt. Michael Berry I have had further interview with the captain and have come to the conclusion that he may as well remain where he is. I inclose* herewith in Captain Berry's handwriting his conditions. His property is wholly real estate. The assurance that the United States will guarantee his title against confiscation with 500,000 bayonets makes no impression upon the captain.

I think from certain things said in our interview that he has it in his mind to go to England and take ventures in running the blockade. His knowledge of the coast navigation and the wants of the people South would make him troublesome perhaps.

I am, very respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

SIR: It is painful to me now getting to be an old man bordering upon sixty years of age and always a peaceable, law-abiding citizen to address one of the high officers of the United States from the walls of a prison, and I assure you, sir, that this pain is in no degree mitigated by the reflection that it is by the order of that high officer that

* Not found.

I have been placed and am now detained within this fortress. Why, sir, am I thus in my old age deprived of my liberty? I know of no act on my part which can justify or even be a pretext for my imprisonment. For forty-five years man and boy I have been sailing between New York and Charleston and during all that time have changed employers but once and then only because the party with whom I first engaged withdrew from the line. This ought to be satisfactory evidence of my good character and good conduct. You, sir, have been a passenger with me between New York and Charleston and ought to know something of me personally.

I know not of any specific charge against me, certainly not of any offense against the law. But it has been rumored that I owe my arrest and imprisonment to my having raised the Palmetto flag upon my vessel, the steam-ship Columbia, in March last. This I do not deny; but let me explain the circumstances. It was a flag that I had used as my private signal and as a racing flag for fifteen years. I had used that same flag when you, sir, were a passenger with me some twelve or fifteen years ago, and Daniel Webster, John A. Dix, and many other distinguished citizens have sailed with me with that flag flying. To General Dix I rendered a great service with it only two years ago in signaling a vessel sailing from Charleston to Florida on which he wished to take passage for Florida to visit his sick wife then lying in a critical state. In March when I used it in a way which it appears has given offense there was peace between the North and the South and business and intercourse between the two sections were prosecuted as usual. My vessel was still making her accustomed trips. In leaving New York on that occasion I made my departure at the same time with the Yorktown, one of the Richmond steam-packets which led to a trial of speed between her and the vessel which I commanded. In this as in all other cases of the like kind which had occurred hundreds of times I raised the flag before referred to simply as a racing flag and not as an act of any political significance whatever. In fact I am not and never have been a politician. I never even voted in my life. At the same time that I raised this flag I had and kept at its appropriate place on the peak of my vessel the U. S. flag. How this can be construed into an offense and tortured into a sufficient cause for my imprisonment I am unable to conceive. And I think, sir, when you give the subject your reflection you will come to the conclusion that great injustice has been done me and that I ought to be immediately discharged.

But I understand from Mr. Hawley, who has visited the prisoners here on your behalf, that I cannot expect a discharge unless I will consent to take the oath of allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States. This I did when I was admitted to citizenship, for I am of Irish birth, but to do it again and under existing circumstances would probably subject me to great loss and leave me destitute in my old age. Already I have lost $30,000 in vessels recently seized and confiscated by the United States Government in consequence of their being in part owned by citizens of the South. I own property to the amount of $25,000 in Charleston which would probably be confiscated by the South should I take the step which you require of me. Surely justice and humanity forbid that you should impose upon me such a hardship. I am ready to give such parole as under the circumstances would be safe for me and it would be reasonable and just for you to ask, and upon such terms I pray you to order my discharge.

I am, with great respect, yours, &c.,

M. BERRY.

COMMISSION RELATING TO POLITICAL PRISONERS,
Boston, May 7, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: The following persons having complied with the conditions required by the Commission you will please discharge them, viz: * * * Michael Berry. * * * You will at the same time return to each of them any property in your possession belonging to them.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. D. WEBSTER.

MAY 7, 1862.

I, Michael Berry, of Charleston, S. C., do hereby give my parole of honor that I will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States, and that I will not go into any of the States in armed insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States; and further that I will not hold any correspondence with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of War.

M. BERRY.

Case of E. B. Grayson.

This man [E. B. Grayson] was arrested in Washington October 7, 1861, by order of Provost-Marshal-General A. Porter and confined in the Old Capitol Prison, and from thence transferred to Fort Lafayette by an order issued from the Department of State dated December 20, 1861. He was charged with sympathizing with the rebellion against the Government of the United States and with being a general in Jeff. Davis' army. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 29, 1861, directing General Porter to release Grayson on his taking the oath of allegiance. General Porter reported to the Secretary of State December 2, 1861, that Grayson declined to take the oath on any condition. The said E. B. Grayson remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the previous day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.*—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Case of the Flanders Brothers.

Joseph R. and Francis D. Flanders, residing at Malone, Franklin County, N. Y., were arrested under an order issued by the State Department on the 11th day of October, 1861, and conveyed to Fort Lafayette, whence they were afterward transferred to Fort Warren. Many complaints were made of disloyal and seditious conduct on the part of these men, of whom Joseph R. Flanders was represented as a lawyer of ability, controlling his brother, Francis D. Flanders, who published a disloyal sheet called The Franklin Gazette.

It was represented in September, 1861, that willful and vindictive in his feelings he (Joseph R.) has made himself particularly officious during the last six or eight months in proving to the people of Franklin County through the columns of the Gazette by letters and in public speeches to meetings called for that purpose, that the Southern States had a right to secede and that the prosecution of the war on the part of the North was aggressive and wrong, and that under the baleful influence of the two Messrs. Flanders and the paper mainly the public sentiment of Franklin County was much distracted, the enlistment of soldiers greatly hindered and retarded and that in several of the towns nearly as many persons could be enlisted for the Southern Confederacy as could be for the United States, and that in one town a large number of citizens raised and maintained a secession flag for several days until a force was collected to demolish it, when Judge (J. R.) Flanders sent a message to them advising them for safety to take down the flags and disperse, which was done.

Affidavits were presented to the Department of which the following are copies.†

On the 3d of May, 1861, Mr. T. S. Mears, of Fort Covington, addressed a letter to J. R. Flanders in which he uses these words :

All honor to those distinguished men, Mr. Douglas among them, who, forgetting the comparatively insignificant interests of party and self, have rallied around the time-honored flag and the constitutional government of our country. It grieves me, my old friend, to hear that your voice, your aim and your efforts are not with them, and infinitely more to be informed that you would palsy the arm raised to parry the blow and defend our country's flag. Have I been misinformed? We have such reports in circulation here.

Mr. Flanders answered this letter on the 6th day of May, 1861, saying.‡

This letter of J. R. Flanders was published by F. D. Flanders in The Franklin Gazette in May, 1861, with some additions made by the writer laudatory of the men and the cause of the insurrection and denouncing the President as committing at every step an act of usurpation and trampling upon the Constitution and the principles of free government. The Franklin Gazette, published by F. D. Flanders, was all the time from the outbreak of the rebellion conducted in the same spirit manifested in the letter of J. R. Flanders. August 17, 1861, it said:

There is but one course to pursue—pronounce against the war, denounce the usurpation and the military despotism at Washington, demand peace and the recognition of the Southern Confederacy as the only method of saving from certain and universal destruction our free institutions, the liberties of the people and the property, business and prosperity of the country.

August 31, 1861, the Gazette published the proceedings of the meeting at Fort Covington on the 24th of August where J. R. Flanders made the disunion and secession speech described in the foregoing affidavits, with a set of resolutions written by J. R. Flanders, one of which is as follows:

Resolved, That every consideration of patriotism and of public interest demands the immediate discontinuance of the present unnatural and destructive civil war, though this should involve the recognition of the independence of the Southern Confederacy; that a continuance of the war will not restore the Union, but will only render its ultimate reconstruction the more distant and hopeless.

The Gazette having been excluded from the mails by order of the Postmaster-General for its disloyalty on the 21st of September it appeals for increased support as follows:

Our friends in every town and every neighborhood should now make an effort to add to our subscription. * * * We are fighting by peaceful discussion and lawful agitation the old battle of the Revolution over again. The liberties then won are now prostrate under the heel of a military despotism.

In the issue of September 28 the Gazette draws a parallel between recent events in our own country and "the acts of the Russian Government against the freedom of the Poles" and "the despotic measures of Austria in Hungary and Italy." It says:

The overthrow of the State government and legislature of Missouri is of but recent occurrence. Last week the legislature of Maryland was broken up by an armed force.

It presents as parallel and of the same character with the acts so described some severe military measures of repression in Hungary. The same paper says:

There is no really intelligent man who does not know that the deplorable contest in which the two great sections of our country are engaged will result in the recognition of two separate confederacies.

October 5, 1861, the Gazette said:

This war will be a disastrous failure on the part of the Lincoln Administration and will result as Mr. Douglas foretold in a treaty of separation.

October 12, 1861, the Gazette has these words:

This war of conquest has but just begun and already it has converted the Government itself into a despotism and the last vestige of freedom is fast disappearing. * * * Were we to stop the war now and make peace even upon terms of separation with the South we might re-establish our liberties. But conquer the South and the same causes which have already converted our Government into a despotism would operate to keep it such. * * * Then it comes plainly to this that war upon the South has transformed our Government into a despotism. A conquest of the South would forever keep our Government a despotism. From the first we can escape if we will but stop the war. * * * Let him who believes conquest possible, which we do not, take warning in time. No man can in his sober senses favor this war unless it be the politician who expects to get office by it or the public plunderer who expects to make money by it or the bloodthirsty abolitionist who hopes for servile insurrections and universal conflagration and massacre to grow out of it.

There is evidence that J. R. Flanders previous to the outbreak of the rebellion was by friendly correspondence encouraging the spirit of treason in Kentucky. A well-known leader of the secessionists in that State, William Preston Johnston, wrote him on the 31st of December, 1860, thanking him for his kind feelings, assuring him that Kentucky, the most conservative Southern State, would certainly secede and inviting him to go there to reside. There is evidence in the correspondence of F. D. Flanders that his efforts to produce disaffection were understood to be intended to discourage and prevent enlistment. Our correspondent in Clinton County says:

We can say for Ellenburg no Democrat has gone to the war from here. Those who have gone were bearers of the lantern last fall. Here we work according to orders from headquarters. Let those who elected the President subdue the rebellion.

That the course of both J. R. and F. D. Flanders was to a considerable extent successful in restraining and preventing enlistment in their locality there is the testimony not only of the boasts of their followers but of the complaints against them as above set forth. These persons appear to be partisan politicians of a peculiar type, adopting and advocating the most extreme views with a zeal and apparent conviction which incapacitate them for discrimination as to the rights and duties of citizens under the widely different circumstances of peace and war. Unlimited freedom of discussion is the habit of the American people and in times of peace no objection has ever been urged against the free promulgation of the wildest notions and the most absurd and foolish sophistries; though it cannot be claimed as a right at any time without restraint or responsibility to advocate the subversion of the Constitution. The acts of these persons are so connected that it is inconvenient to consider them separately. J. R. Flanders is the speaker and writer and F. D. Flanders the editor and publisher. In many of their most offensive acts they have been jointly guilty, F. D. Flanders publishing what the other had written. Their adhesion to the rebels and the aid and comfort they have given them have been shown in approving their doctrines and their course of action, justifying their treason, boasting of their power, exulting in their successes and glorifying their achievements. The said J. R. Flanders and F. D. Flanders remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day they were transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, September 20, 1861.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: In reply to the letter* of the Secretary of State of current date addressed to the Postmaster-General recommending the prohibition of The Franklin Gazette newspaper from the mails for its treasonable character I beg to inform you that the proper order was made and duly given to the postmaster at Malone, N. Y., as well as to other parties through whom the order would be effectually enforced on the 9th of September instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. KASSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

POTSDAM, *September 23, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Your letter of the 7th instant* advising me that you had sent the copies of The Franklin Gazette which I inclosed to you to the Postmaster-General with the suggestion that it would be well to prohibit its circulation in the mails came duly to hand. In that you asked my opinion whether it was necessary to take any further measures in reference to it, to which I replied that it might be well to await the result of that admonition, and that I would keep you advised of its results. The Postmaster-General closed the mails against that paper.

I herewith mail to you a copy of its last week's issue from which you can see the effect of the admonition upon the editor of that paper. I hardly know what advice to give. Perhaps a statement of the facts in reference to that county will enable you to perceive what remedy to apply. F. D. Flanders, the editor of the Gazette, has a brother, Hon. Joseph R. Flanders, practicing law in the village of Malone who has more brains than the editor and probably controls him. He was a member of the constitutional convention from that county in 1846 and subsequently its county judge, and is a man of very considerable ability. During the life of John C. Calhoun he was his disciple and has been an advocate of his doctrines ever since. Willful and vindictive in his feelings he has made himself particularly officious during the last six or eight months in proving to the people of Franklin County through the columns of the Gazette by letter and in public speeches at meetings called for that purpose that the Southern States had a right to secede, and that the prosecution of the war on the part of the North was aggressive and wrong, and that the South was really occupying the position now that the original States did in the war of the Revolution. I inclose you a letter from the Hon. Jabez Parkhurst,† of Fort Covington, and two affidavits‡ procured by him, which will give you some idea of the doctrines and teachings of the man. I will endeavor to procure and send you the published letter referred to in the affidavits. The letter and the affidavits are from respectable sources and entitled to all verity.

Under the baneful influence of the two Messrs. Flanders and the paper mainly the people of that county are much nearer equally divided in opinion as to the justice of the present war than in any other county I know of in the State. That whole county has raised but one company of volunteers for the war, and in several of the towns nearly as many persons could be enlisted for the Southern Confederacy as could be for the United States, and in one town as I mentioned to you before a large number of citizens raised and maintained a secession flag for several days until a force was collected to demolish it, when Judge Flanders sent a messenger to them advising them for safety to take down the flag and disperse, which was done.

Something should evidently be done in aid of the Union-loving people of that county. We naturally shrink from the exercise of sovereign power, yet I am inclined to think its exercise upon both F. D. and J. R. Flanders would be beneficial to our cause and country.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. DART,
U. S. Attorney.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 27, 1861.

WILLIAM A. DART, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney, Potsdam, N. Y.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant with its inclosures has been received. Will you please consult fully with the Hon. Preston King as to what measures ought to be taken in the case of the Messrs. Flanders and report to me the result?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Potsdam, October 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I had a conference yesterday and last evening with Hon. Preston King in reference to the Messrs. Flanders as suggested in yours of September 27. We discussed the matter in every light in which we could view it, and came to the conclusion that the presence of the Messrs. Flanders in Franklin County is productive of mischief and injury to the cause of our country. The insulting and defiant tone of the Gazette has emboldened weak-minded men to imitate its example.

In addition to the facts heretofore communicated to you a presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church advised me that a man in Bombay, in the county of Franklin, has had a secession flag flying from his house for the last two weeks, and it is understood and believed that secret societies are organized in many of the towns of that county having for their object resistance to the collection of taxes, &c. I have found it difficult to procure legal evidence of the state of things in Franklin County from a fear which prevails there among loyal citizens of injury to their persons and property should it be known that they had been instrumental in bringing the secessionists to punishment. Several prominent citizens have declined to allow me to place their letters on file in the State Department or to send them to you from such apprehension.

I have no doubt (and in that opinion Mr. King concurs with me) that public good requires that Francis D. Flanders and Joseph R. Flanders should be arrested and confined at Fort Lafayette. Our loyal citizens there are becoming exasperated and call upon me every day to know if something cannot be done in their behalf. I send by this mail the Gazette for September 28 and October 5,* from which you can see the animus of the gentlemen. Our criminal laws are defective and do not reach a case like this. If I can get legal evidence of the existence of secret societies to resist the laws of the United States I will not trouble you with the matter, but bring them to justice in the courts.

On Saturday I shall leave Potsdam for Albany where I shall be in attendance on a district court for a week. The marshal and his deputies will be there. If any communication is made to me in answer to this I desire it to be made to me at Albany, at Congress Hall. Mr. King told me last evening that he would write to you to-day upon this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. DART,
U. S. Attorney.

OGDENSBURG, October 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Dart, the U. S. district attorney for this district, consulted me yesterday respecting charges against Joseph R. Flanders and F. D. Flanders, of Malone, in Franklin County. Mr. Dart had no copies of the affidavits that have been sent to your Department, but stated the substance of what they contained and other facts. The facts charged against the Flanders' do not constitute treason as that crime is defined by the Constitution. Some of the allegations are that Joseph addresses public meetings advocating the right of secession and denouncing the Government and the war. His brother publishes the paper which has been sent to you. Other persons instigated by them have formed combinations declaring the intention to resist the collection of taxes for the support of the war. The secession flag has been raised in two towns—in one case by an individual, in the other by the people of a neighborhood who declared their intention to defend it. When movements were made to organize a body of loyal men to go out and take it down by force Joseph sent a messenger to the disaffected neighborhood and the flag was taken down by the parties who raised it. Secret societies of the disaffected have been formed. The disaffected are persons whose opinions and action are influenced by the two Flanders. I do not doubt the disaffection and troubles in Franklin County are instigated and fomented by the Flanders' and that they deserve to be arrested and detained until they would consent to take the oath of allegiance or until their conduct could be fully investigated by a grand jury. Mr. Dart will write you fully.

Respectfully,

PRESTON KING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 18, 1861.

EDWARD J. CHASE, Esq., U. S. Marshal, Lockport, N. Y.

SIR: You will arrest Francis D. Flanders and Joseph R. Flanders, of the county of Franklin, State of New York, and send them to Fort Lafayette. Secure all their letters and other papers and forward them to this Department.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, October 23, 1861.

Col. E. D. TOWNSEND,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Washington City, D. C.

SIR: I have this day received as prisoners Francis D. Flanders and Joseph R. Flanders. They have been sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the honorable the Secretary of State of the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., October 30, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: You may recollect me as the late U. S. attorney of the northern district of New York. Allow me to premise the subject-matter of my letter by saying that I believe that I have labored more assiduously and more successfully in behalf of my Government and country since the fall of Sumter than in all my life before. So much for my own position, which I think would be attested to by Hon. Preston King, D. S. Dickinson, Judge J. B. James and Hon. William A. Wheeler, and any and all other prominent Union citizens who are acquainted with me and my labors.

My object in writing to you is this: I wish to learn the charges against Joseph R. Flanders and Francis D. Flanders, late of Malone, Franklin County, and now of Fort Lafayette, and also to ask that an examination may be granted in their case as soon as possible. Since the arrest of these gentlemen I have visited Franklin County, which is my native county, the scene of their labors and their residence, and have obtained all the information that I believe exists tending to connect these men with treasonable action against the Government. I am of the opinion that the Government would not have arrested these gentlemen had the facts been accurately stated to them. I think the Government arrived at the conclusion that they had formed or connected themselves with treasonable organizations or had been in correspondence or other connection with rebels and traitors and were continuing therein and laboring in that cause. I think I know and can satisfactorily demonstrate that no treasonable organization (nor any with that tendency) exists or has existed in Franklin County; that the Flanders neither are nor have been connected with any organization (secret or public) that has any such objects in view. Their whole offense consists in editing and publishing The Franklin Gazette, and what has appeared in its columns is the only evidence in existence that can be brought against them, and I do believe as do the majority of the leading friends of the Government in Northern New York that however obnoxious and objectionable many of the articles of that paper appear to the minds of loyal and patriotic citizens that the Government would not deem this to be of sufficient importance to cause their arrest and confinement. The discontinuance of this paper from the mails some time ago deprived it of any circulation that would cause serious mischief.

It is my own opinion that their confinement, unless justified by more serious cause than appears from the Gazette, will do serious injury to the Union cause in Northern New York. I have conversed freely upon this subject within a few days with Hon. Preston King and Judge James, of this village, and Hon. William A. Wheeler, of Malone, Franklin County, and they agree with me in the opinion that a speedy examination and action by the Government should be made in this case that the Government may know precisely what charges can be sustained against them and thus be able to act advisedly in the premises. Judge James in a conversation since this letter was commenced says that this is his opinion provided the arrest proceeds from charges and causes beyond the publication of the Gazette, because he believes from my examination that none other exists, but as he has not read the articles in the Gazette he gives no opinion upon the policy of the Government in regard to holding them for that cause alone (whether with or without examination). Mr. Wheeler (who resides at Malone, the residence of the Flanders) informed me that he did not believe that either of them was connected in any way with treasonable or quasi treasonable organizations, nor did he believe that any such organizations existed in the county of Franklin; that in their paper (Gazette) was in his opinion all the evidence of treason or treasonable intent and that while he had been anxious for the suppression of the paper he considered that that course was the proper one and also sufficient to attain the desired end.

I have been anxious to arrive at correct conclusions in this matter before writing to you and with that object I visited Franklin County and I feel confident that no evidence exists that can connect these gentlemen with any traitorous organization, or that will show that any such organization exists in Franklin County. I have procured a full file of the Gazette, and while I disapprove and condemn much of the sentiment therein published and expressed and do not pretend to justify the same yet I think that the articles written and published will not of themselves alone form a basis which you or the Government will be willing to occupy as a complete justification for the continuance of their imprisonment without any judicial examination.

I wish, sir, that you will inform me fully in the premises as to what can be done or what is right and proper to be done. I believe that the gentlemen to whom I refer will willingly express the same to you in writing if necessary, and that any amount of influence in the way of petitions can be obtained to support what is right and just in the premises. I have thought it better that I should write and give you such suggestions as I have and await such information as you may be pleased to give me before taking any other course. J. R. Flanders is a brother-in-law of mine and an intimate friend from my boyhood. He is a man of high social character and distinguished as a lawyer of great ability. Socially and professionally I believe he holds the respect and friendship of all who know him. His nearest and best friends are warm and energetic defenders and supporters of the Government and his separation from his family at this time is peculiarly distressing and severe. So likewise with F. D. Flanders. He has a brother-in-law who is a surgeon in one of our New York regiments. I met him in Franklin County on the same mission as myself to sympathize [with] and comfort his sister and to ascertain the facts in the case.

With the desire of making no unnecessary trouble to the Government nor any needless noise the friends of the Government who are likewise the social friends of these gentlemen wish to restore them to their families if that can be properly and safely done. Neither do we wish to trouble you with distressing details for we feel that you will do or cause to be done all that you can and still perform your duty to the country.

I remain, sir, yours, truly,

J. C. SPENCER.

P. S.—Although I hardly think it necessary I inclose some papers* which testify to my political position. I also inclose the letter of the U. S. attorney referring me to your Department.

Letters found among the correspondence of the Messrs. Flanders seized after their arrest.

DEAR JUDGE: Your favor of the 26th instant is received, and first to business. I think it was Hagan & Broadwell, attorneys, who recommended Mitchell and examined into his affairs. They are reputable young lawyers with a good business. Hon. Charles P. James, of James & Jackson, is also perfectly trustworthy and competent. The bar of Cincinnati is very good.

I was for Breckinridge but my partner, Mr. Worthington, and many of my best friends were for Douglas. I arrived at different conclusions from them but have felt no asperity or partisan harshness in consequence. I thought you would be either for Douglas or Breckinridge. There were some nice constitutional points involved, and I maintain that it depends on which end one begins at where he will find himself in this controversy. If you begin at States' rights you wind up for Breckinridge; if you begin at rights of the people to govern themselves you hurrah for Douglas.

I thank you for your kind feelings toward my people as well as myself. I do not wish secession. I preferred retaliatory laws in the Union, but it was but a question of time—a little more long suffering. I was thought too ultra, but popular sentiment is fast leaving me behind. I regard a dissolution of the Union as inevitable. I know the propelling ideas of Republicanism too well to have any hope. The leaders may recede; the excited people will not. I have every feeling of kindness for those at the North who have resisted our subjugation and enslavement, but I assure you I speak the sentiment of 99 in 100 when I tell you unless promptly and fully Republicanism recedes and guarantees are given for our security and equality Kentucky, the most conservative Southern State, will certainly secede. Moreover any attempt to coerce a Southern State will rally an army to its support. Kentucky will not permit any troops to cross her border for that purpose. Still we are striving to hope against hope through our love for the Union.

You don't mean me when you make some allusion to offending somebody last year. I have always said, my dear judge, that you were the only man I thought I would be willing to make my executor in New York; I still hold the same opinion. If all the lawyers here did not starve I would wish you at home here—a citizen. Can't you come anyhow and let me see your honest face once more? My wife and the girls are well. I live a little way in the country and am happy.

Yours, truly,

WM. PRESTON JOHNSTON.

P. CAGGER, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I have this moment received your circular soliciting from me a contribution toward the expense of printing 50,000 copies of the proceedings of the late Democratic State convention. I most respectfully decline to make such contribution. I regard the proceedings as unworthy of the occasion, as not coming up to the spirit and demands of the Democracy of the State and that it would be far more creditable to all concerned that they should be suppressed instead of receiving an extensive circulation. Instead of passing the wishy-washy resolutions which it did, not one of which except the second (which was not hatched at the nocturnal incubation on the committee and must have been forced upon it by some outside pressure in the morning) made any approach to what the occasion called for, the convention should have placed the responsibility for the present condition of public affairs upon the dominant party in the free States where it belongs; have declared that it rests with that party to effect a settlement of existing sectional difficulties and left it to take the initiative in measures of adjustment at the same time expressing our readiness to co-operate in any just and reasonable compromise and pledged the Democracy of New York to resist any measures of coercion whether under cover of the enforcement of the laws or otherwise against the seceding States.

Really the only good that the convention could have done was to take a firm and decided attitude against coercion, embodying in a resolution upon that subject the sentiments embraced in the paper submitted by the sensible Mr. Johnson and in the eloquent and manly speeches of Tremain and Thayer. And that was the spirit of the convention; but I saw from the beginning that the whole thing was gotten up by a few individuals for some purpose of their own. This was plainly manifested by Governor Seymour's speech on Thursday. It was also indicated by Mr. Ludlow's haste to move the appointment of a committee on resolutions and the resistance which was made to the enlargement of that committee so as to embody more fully the sense of the convention. Then the resolutions printed on slips showed that the committee was averse to giving expression to the predominant feeling of the convention—opposition to coercion—and Mr. Johnson, Chancellor Walworth or some other good and true man not on the committee must have forced the committee in the morning under fear of the consequences of presenting to the convention such a lame and impotent abortion as the report as originally prepared would have been to accept the second resolution, the only redeeming feature in the whole series. And the resistance which was made by the committee in convention to any amendments showed how the whole thing was being managed.

And the proceedings as published in The Atlas and Argus are unfair and suppress material circumstances. I myself made a motion to strike out of the fifth resolution all relating to the Crittenden proposition and gave my reasons therefor. The same pressure as in other cases of proposed amendments was brought to bear to get rid of this and to induce me to withdraw it, but I stood firm and insisted upon a vote. But in the proceedings published in The Atlas and Argus this is entirely suppressed and my constituents and I stand impliedly committed to this mode of settling matters when we are opposed to this plan of taking the sense of the people upon the subject of adjustment, deeming a national convention the only means of bringing about a satisfactory and permanent adjustment.

You now have my reason for declining to comply with your application for a contribution.

Yours, truly,

J. R. FLANDERS.

MALONE, May 6, 1861.

[Mr. T. S. MEARS.]

MY DEAR FRIEND: I received by due course of mail your frank and friendly letter of the 3d instant. I thank you for its expression of friendship and personal kindness and most cordially and sincerely reciprocate them. I like your method of dealing with the subject to which your letter relates by appealing directly to me for information concerning my position in the present crisis in our public affairs and saying to me what you have to say of me in case you are not misinformed in regard to my views.

And now, my dear friend, I owe it to the spirit of candor and frankness exhibited by you to answer with equal candor and frankness.

This compels me to say that you are not misinformed in regard to my position. I am firmly and unalterably opposed to the whole war policy of the Administration. For thirty years I have held the opinion that the States are sovereign; that the Constitution of the United States is a compact between the States composing the Federal Union; that they are the only parties to that compact; that each is to judge for itself of its infraction and of the mode and measure of redress and that as in all cases of compacts, treaties or leagues between sovereigns by which a confederacy is formed, each may lawfully withdraw from it, or in other words secede from the confederacy whenever it shall deem that it has sufficient cause and that this is a reserved right of the States under the Constitution and entirely consistent with it. Of course this would still leave it incumbent upon the seceding State to discharge or assume its share of the public debt and entitle it to a proportionate share of the public property, all of which should be arranged and adjusted by amicable negotiation, as the seceding States have proposed in the present controversy. This view of the character of our system of Government and of the rights of the States is taken almost verbatim from the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions of 1798 and 1799, which have ever been the text-book of the Jeffersonian Democracy and were expressly accepted as such by the Democratic party of the Union in its platform adopted in national convention at Cincinnati in 1856, and since reaffirmed. They constitute and always have constituted my party creed, but of course not yours.

Entertaining these opinions I deny the right of the Federal Government to attempt to subjugate by military power a State which secedes. I regard a contest brought on by such attempt—and that is really the character of the present contest—as a struggle on the part of the seceding States to maintain the principles of constitutional liberty against despotic pretensions and aims, and my sympathies are wholly with those who are thus defending the right of self-government. Mind I do not argue with you; I am merely stating my views and if you held the principles which I do you would feel and act as I do. They are my principles adopted in my very boyhood as you well know and clung to since with increasing devotion and fidelity up to the present hour as the only safeguard of free government in this land. I appeal to Heaven to bear witness to the sincerity of my political faith. It is a part of my very being, as dear to me as life itself and I cannot give it up. I cannot deny it; I cannot be false to it be the consequences what they may.

But suppose I am wrong in these opinions. I still say that the Federal Government ought not to attempt to coerce the seceding States by military power. I recognize the right of every distinct community to choose for itself the institutions under which it will live; that governments exist only by the consent of the governed, and whenever any government becomes grievous and oppressive to such community it has a right to cast it off and institute such new government as may be deemed most conducive to its happiness. These are deductions from or rather repetitions of the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence—principles which were consecrated by the blood and vindicated by the glories and triumphs of the Revolution. They are as dear now as they were then; they are as vital to liberty now as they were then and the seceded States have the same right to proclaim them in resistance to Northern aggression and coercion now as the thirteen colonies had to hurl them in the teeth of King George in answer to his demand of passive submission then.

The spirit of the age and above all the spirit of American liberty as thus inherited from the Revolution by every section of our country require that the independence of the Confederate States should be recognized by the Government of the United States. As a consequence the U. S. troops should have been withdrawn from the Southern forts, and Lincoln having refused to do this and avowed a determination to re-enforce and hold them, and that too for the purpose of reducing the Southern people to submission to his Government, they had no alternative but to take them or voluntarily submit to subjugation. I therefore think that the South Carolinians were justified in taking Fort Sumter and I rejoice in their success; but it is charged that they fired the first gun and thus commenced the war. Very well; call it that if you please. They were compelled to do so or surrender their independence without a struggle. I admire their heroism and devotion to their rights manifested in that glorious achievement. Did I not do so I should be false to every principle which I hold dear and every impulse of my heart.

Standing where I do you can see that I must necessarily be opposed to all measures for encouraging and sustaining the war which Lincoln threatens to wage against the South. My sympathies upon general principles of government and political freedom (and this throws entirely out of view the question of domestic slavery and all the issues and strifes to which it has given rise) are with the South in this contest. She stands strictly on the defensive; she makes no war upon the North; she will not invade the North unless she be first invaded. All she asks is to be let alone; to be permitted to depart in peace. Give her assurance that she may and the sword at once drops from her grasp and not a drop of blood will be shed in fraternal strife. And she offers and has repeatedly and from the outset offered to pay her share of the public debt, to account for all Federal property within her limits upon a fair and equitable apportionment and division of the public property between the two sections and to adjust all questions of difference by friendly negotiation. But all her overtures have been rejected and answered by threats of coercion—coercion. She has prepared to meet this as best she could and has taken only defensive measures.

A war of aggression upon the South under such circumstances—and such a war Lincoln declared in his proclamation of the 15th of April and in his two subsequent ones blockading the Southern ports—would be one of the most wanton and wicked wars in all history. And to call it a war in favor of the Union is in my judgment the most false of all pretenses.

The Union cannot be saved or restored by civil war, and this every man of the smallest measure of intelligence and judgment knows. Were the South to be conquered in such a contest it would not restore the Union of free and sovereign States recognized and guaranteed by the Constitution. Our flag—revered and glorious as it is—cannot sanctify tyranny and injustice or justify a war upon the principles of that grand, heroic old contest in which it was borne, and from the blood and fire of which it emerged torn and battle-stained, it is true, but still bravely flying the token of victory, freedom and peace, and if it should now be established in triumph over the South by the might of armed hosts it would wave only over a land blasted and destroyed and above the graves of a free and gallant race who preferred to die rather than live degraded and disgraced.

But you cannot conquer the people of the South. Eight millions of men like them bred to freedom and determined to be free cannot be subjugated. And if you are dreaming and others are dreaming such a dream you and they will soon awake to realities which will startle and disappoint you all.

But enough of prophecy. I have frankly stated my position. There I stand (I can stand nowhere else), and be assured there I shall stand "till the crack of doom."

With the kindest regards to your family and assurances of the most sincere personal friendship to you, I remain, yours, truly,

J. R. FLANDERS.

CHATEAUGAY, September 16, 1861.

MR. F. D. FLANDERS, Malone, N. Y.

SIR: Having for a few months past taken your interesting paper (and yet none of the time having the same views as that sheet contains), I feel now that I can no longer read a paper which upholds the rebellious part of the Union and condemns all that is done under the present Administration. I therefore consider it my duty (as well as the duty of all who take it) to order it to stop coming to me, and by sending no more to me you will oblige,

M. J. WARREN.

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Potsdam, November 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Under your warrant of arrest of the 11th of October the Messrs. Flanders, of Malone, Franklin County, N. Y., were arrested and taken to Fort Lafayette. That contained no warrant to search for and seize papers. Yours of the 18th came to Albany after the marshal and myself had both left and did not come to my hands until last week when Deputies Dow and Tucker made a search for papers and correspondence and seized a large amount of papers* as to F. D. Flanders, I fear of no value, and of little if any against Joseph R. The deputies were satisfied from the conduct of the ladies of the above-named gentlemen that their papers had been overlooked and everything of a treasonable nature disposed of. Certain resolutions, however, in the handwriting of J. R. Flanders and an address understood to have been delivered at an organization of a secret society in Bombay, the articles of association of which society are blindly set forth in a paper found in that town recently with the names of many of the prominent citizens of that place appended to it (a copy of which is here inclosed) may be of service. That society is now in actual operation, holding weekly meetings, and their objects and purposes are understood to be treasonable.

James C. Spencer, esq., ex-district attorney of this district and a brother-in-law of J. R. Flanders, has I understand in company with others gone to Washington to procure the release of the Messrs. Flanders. I inclose his letter to Mrs. J. R. Flanders and ask that its contents be noted. Mrs. F. D. Flanders is now editing The Franklin Gazette and I inclose to you the two issues† of it since her husband's arrest. Mr. Spencer's note, "Tell Louisa to draw it mild in the Gazette or she will make all my labor in vain," was intended for the editress of that pestilential sheet. If she does "draw it mild" it will be for the purpose of getting her husband released when it will be put forth with new vigor. The paper is now perhaps doing more mischief than before. The fact that it may be able to reveal the inside of a Government prison coupled with the novelty of its being conducted by a woman lends to it an interest which increases its circulation. Having begun the task I think it would be incomplete without suppressing the paper altogether. Upon the arrest of Messrs. Flanders they both made assurances to their friends publicly that they would never take the oath of allegiance. I think they should be required to do so before being released.

* See p. 945 et seq. for portions of correspondence seized.

† Not found.

As to the Bombay association I will if there is anything of it prosecute it before the ordinary tribunal.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. DART,
U. S. District Attorney.

BOMBAY, May 7, 1861.

We the undersigned citizens of the United States of America, believing that we are possessed of certain inalienable rights set forth in the Declaration of Independence, viz, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, also liberty of speech and liberty of the press, and having reason to fear that these rights are about to be wrested from us by the Black Republicans, and believing further that if permitted to carry out their designs they will take our lives and destroy our property:

Now therefore we are determined and firmly resolved that we will resist all unlawful encroachments upon our just rights and that although we pledge ourselves to support the Constitution of the United States and all just and equitable laws of our country, we will not submit to be ruled by violence and mob law from whatever source they may come.

Now therefore in view of the dangers to which we are exposed we this day organize into a society to be named in accordance with the principles set forth in this declaration:

The Sons of Liberty, for the purpose of protecting each other's person and property, to which we hold ourselves firmly bound and pledge our sacred honors. The officers of this society shall consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. Five members shall be sufficient to organize this society.

COMMODORE P. MOORE,
DUNBAR MOORE,
ISAAC L. W. REYNOLDS
[AND 22 OTHERS.]

[Inclosure No. 2.]

Resolved, That the present unhappy and deplorable condition of our country is plainly the consequence of the triumph of a sectional party in the late Presidential election, an event which it was foreseen and foretold would prove the destruction of our sisterhood of free and sovereign States.

Resolved, That a portion of the States of the confederacy having deemed this event a sufficient cause for a separation from that portion of their co-States by whose agency it was brought about and having declared such separation it was an act of both folly and wickedness to attempt to bring them back into the Union by force of arms, for "war is disunion, certain, inevitable, final and irrepressible."

Resolved, That this war upon the seceding States was commenced by the President in palpable violation of the Constitution, and has been attended at every step of its progress by a bold and reckless disregard of the provisions of that sacred instrument. In the suspension of the habeas corpus, the establishment of martial law, the seizure and imprisonment of citizens without warrant or legal authority, the raising of standing armies and quartering them upon whole States in subversion of State authority, the shooting down of unoffending citizens and even women and children by his armed soldiery in the streets of our cities, the searching of houses and the seizure of private papers by the military alone, the President has committed acts which at a much earlier and less enlightened period than the present would have brought the head of an English sovereign to the block, and when committed by the Chief Magistrate of a constitutional Republic he should at least be held rigidly responsible in the mode prescribed by the Constitution and the laws for these high-handed attacks upon public liberty.

Resolved, That this war can result in nothing but evil. It has already prostrated the business of the country and destroyed the prosperity of the people. It is loading us with a burden of debt and taxation which will continue and depress the energies and prosperity of the people for ages. It is spreading mourning and woe throughout the land and when it shall end, be it sooner or later, all its sacrifices and evils will only have resulted in leaving us a dissevered country and making of us two distinct peoples, divided and alienated from each other, because as history will surely attest and the civilized world will declare, the degenerate and ungrateful sons of a portion of the founders of our liberties and free government would not respect and fulfill in good faith and in a fraternal spirit the compact entered into by their fathers with their Southern brethren.

Resolved, That every consideration of patriotism and of public interest demands the immediate discontinuance of the present unnatural and destructive civil war, though this should involve the recognition of the independence of the Southern Confederacy; that a continuance of the war will not restore the Union but will only render its ultimate reconstruction the more distant and hopeless.

OGDENSBURG, October 31, 1861.

DEAR AUGUSTA: Your letters with Joseph's arrived to-day when I was hard at work for the boys and I assure you they gave me new courage to work on. You may get up hope as high as you can carry (seventy-five pounds to the square inch will not burst the boiler) for I feel very sanguine that we shall get them out, and soon too I hope. Tell Louisa to draw it mild in the Gazette or she will make all my labor in vain. I am satisfied that Wheeler's account to you is correct. I think I understand the whole matter, and if I do not I certainly shall, and shall be able to work understandingly.

Yours, truly,

JAMES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 12, 1861.

WILLIAM A. DART, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney, Potsdam, N. Y.

SIR: Please consult the Hon. Preston King in reference to the case of Mrs. Flanders, and should he concur in deeming it advisable arrest her and convey her to this city to be delivered into the custody of the provost-marshal.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

MALONE, FRANKLIN COUNTY, N. Y., November 15, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Knowing you are a noble man and have been much harassed with the cares of state I venture and fear to address a letter for your own perusal. Our enemies in this and we believe in an adjoining county have used their utmost exertions to stop a little Democratic sheet published in this town. It is respectful and has always been toward the Government, though acting according to its convictions it could not fully coincide with it. Its crime, if crime it be, and only crime has been in holding to the peace policy. We do not deny that it still holds to the same opinion. But we cannot believe that the Secretary of State does or ever has feared The Franklin Gazette will overthrow the Government or that it is guilty of giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

Why not then, dear sir, allow it egress through the mails? I will not deceive you. Its editor, F. D. Flanders, was more than three weeks ago taken without knowing the charges against him and without an examination in any shape to Fort Lafayette, and from thence soon removed to Fort Warren. All his friends hereabout believe you were wrought upon to give the order of arrest by our Congressman, William A. Wheeler, Mr. Dart, of Potsdam, and perhaps Preston King, of Ogdensburg, and we can only think the act on their part was one of personal spite, not from patriotism or out of a disinterested love to the Government. It can be proved, however, that William A. Wheeler has said to a number of respectable gentlemen that he had no part in the matter.

My husband is an innocent but not a fawning man. He is true to his country. I do not write at this time to plead my husband's cause. I call on you to confer with the Postmaster-General about revoking the order which forbade the Gazette privileges of mail transportation. I have since my husband's arrest become its editress, and having a family of small children dependent now on me for support and feeling myself guilty of no disloyalty to my native land I dare appeal to your sense of justice, and entertain a strong hope that you will speedily look into the case and inform me of your decision.

Yours, most respectfully,

LOUISA B. FLANDERS.

MALONE, N. Y., December 6, 1861.

Mr. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

HONORED SIR: I apply to you the second time for a withdrawal of the order forbidding mail facilities for The Franklin Gazette. Have not my husband's enemies by this time become satisfied with the evils they have inflicted upon an innocent, free born and free bred man? Have any charges of disobedience to any law been proved against him and must his innocent babes suffer also? We are a loyal family but we love peace and will abide the decision of a just jury if you will give us the opportunity of a lawful trial. If we are proved law-abiding, loyal citizens shall we—that is, our whole innocent family—suffer like condemned criminals? My husband is a poor man and his printing establishment is his only means of procuring bread for his dependents. But if he is poor he is conscientious and believes in peace as the preserver of the Union. Has he not the God-given right to say so? Has not his wife the same right? I believe in “Peace on earth, good will toward men.” I believe in the Prince of Peace, and shall we like the Apostle Paul and Silas be imprisoned for publishing our convictions? Will Mr. Seward’s secretary put this letter into the Secretary of State’s own hands that he may know our guilt if there be any? My husband and I will take the oath of allegiance to the Constitution of the United States at any time it may be offered. Should an American citizen be required to do more? Please, sir, do let me hear kindly from you as soon as possible after the receipt of this.

Most respectfully and hopefully, yours,

MRS. F. D. FLANDERS.

MALONE, N. Y., December 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: I wrote you just one week ago and this will be the third letter penned by myself for your inspection, and if I receive no answer to this I shall probably write you till I do for I must be heard. I was born a free citizen of a free country, and until I have transgressed the laws of my country, or until my country is no more except in name, while I tread its sacred soil I have as good a right to my “inalienable rights” and to my pursuit of happiness as yourself, even though your position is far exalted above me.

Sir, I am a weak woman—weak in body, but your God is my God and knoweth my wrongs received from the hands of enemies. You cannot be an enemy to those of whom you of yourself know nothing, and should you however harassed you must be by your mountain of cares punish an American citizen without first a trial by court? No martial law has been proclaimed in this State and I do not believe that you hold to a despotic government. Why then, sir, cannot the paper now under my charge have the privileges of mail transportation? It advocates charity and love as being the generators of peace and prosperity among brethren. Is there crime in such advocacy? If so please direct me where to find it in the statutes. If The Franklin Gazette is of but little consequence and influence why fear its weakness? If it be of any influence we want to use it against England in case she threatens us too loudly. My husband writes me: “If there is to be war with England I want to be out of my prison so as to give her one blow myself, for you know how I hate everything English.” Sir, I choose England above all other kingly governments, but I love my country and my whole country next to my God. At least I think I do though she has so deeply wronged me. True it is no way to make reasoning beings love aught by its scourges inflicted on you and yours, but my country “with all thy faults I love thee still,” and if necessary will fight with all the power given me by Heaven for you.

Will Mr. William H. Seward’s secretary put this into Mr. Seward’s hands?

Yours, respectfully,

MRS. F. D. FLANDERS.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Albany, January 10, 1862.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN, &c., Washington, D. C.

SIR: Mr. Roswell Bates and Mr. Benjamin Raymond, of Franklin County, are about to visit Washington and desire an interview with you on a subject of no little importance. They are gentlemen of excellent character and I bespeak for them your kind attention. They are accompanied by Mrs. Francis D. Flanders and Mrs. Joseph R. Flanders whose husbands are in Fort Warren in the State of Massachusetts. The Messrs. Flanders are citizens of Franklin County in this State and their wives will represent to you the cases of their respective husbands, and they will ask either for their release or for a trial to determine whether they ought to be confined. I respectfully ask you to give a patient hearing to the facts which they will present.

I have the honor to be, with high regard, your obedient servant,
E. D. MORGAN.

ALBANY, January 24, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

Will you please forward to me a permit for Mrs. F. D. Flanders to visit her husband at Fort Warren? She is waiting here for that purpose.

E. D. MORGAN,
Governor of New York.

ALBANY, January 25, 1862.

Governor SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Do not throw this earnest letter aside until you shall have read its contents. It would speak to you of a deed which from present appearances may yet be the cause of death; and would you have false accusers to be the direct means of your being a murderer? I cannot believe that God has permitted a man with your noble powers of mind to be wholly destitute of generous sympathies, though a person in very deep trouble may have to dive deep down into the recesses of your heart to reach them. Nor can I believe that you have no sense of the honor it would restore to our country by showing to other nations that justice is not fled from it, though it may have been a while abased and quiescent in amaze at this horrid war among the brethren of these former proud United States. Nor can I believe that you would (appreciating the principles of liberty as you assuredly do) require honest men to swear before the Great Eternal to support a policy of the present Administration which went against their conscientious convictions of right. It must be that Secretary Seward has soul enough in him of the humane kind to allow a dying man the rightful American privilege of a just trial; that if he be guiltless the stigma of traitor shall not follow him to his grave and rest an everlasting stain upon his children's honor.

One and the only accusation coming from any reliable authority, and that I have learned since I saw you at Washington, is the Flanders brothers instigated or upheld the raising of a secession flag in Franklin County. The Republicans of said county would disprove the truth of such accusation. If other accusations against the brothers are as groundless you have been most woefully deceived by their personal enemies. Can you be willing to have wicked, unscrupulous pulous men glory in the having of your honorable self to be their instrument by which they avenge themselves of their enmity? Governor Seward, you hold a position in the eyes of the world superior to the President's. Will you permit injustice to follow ever in your footsteps and have the story written indelibly in history? Your mind, however great and powerful it be, is necessarily at a time like this taxed with cares of state weighty and almost innumerable, and in the midst of your burden I do not entreat you to in wrath remember mercy, but I do ask you, elevated so high in position as you are, to rise above personal feelings and remember justice is expected at your hands. Should you be kind enough to answer this letter, if by only one line, please direct to me at Fort Warren immediately upon the receipt of it or if delayed direct to me at Albany, Delavan House.

Respectfully, yours,

MRS. F. D. FLANDERS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 1, 1862.

Mrs. F. D. FLANDERS, Delavan House, Albany.

MADAM: Your letter of January 29 has been received. In reply I am directed by the Secretary of State to say that Mr. F. D. Flanders will be released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. A copy of the oath is herewith inclosed.

I am, madam, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

COLONEL: You may release on the 22d day of February instant the following prisoners confined in Fort Warren upon their engaging upon honor that they will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States * * * F. D. Flanders, J. R. Flanders. * * *

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

Cases of James McKay and the Crew of the Steamer Salvor.

James McKay was captured on the 14th of October, 1861, by the steamer Keystone State, Captain Scott, U. S. Navy, commanding, on board his steamer Salvor about twenty miles south of Tortugas. Captain McKay with his vessel had supplied the U. S. officers at Tortugas with beef-cattle until prohibited by the commanding officer at that post. The Salvor was taken and used by the Government afterward for three months for which service McKay received something more than $1,000. She was then turned over to McKay to be taken to Havana for repairs on condition that he would not take her into any port in the hands of the insurgents or perform any service for them. A short time after the Salvor arrived at Havana McKay disposed of her, as he claims, taking in payment notes and also power of attorney to sell and as master sail for Nassau, New Providence, with a cargo of contraband and other goods. As stated above the vessel was captured while attempting to run the blockade under English colors and taken to Philadelphia as a prize while McKay was sent to Key West and committed to Fort Taylor. The grand jury of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida—regular November term—returned an indictment for treason against James McKay “not a true bill.” By a letter of January 23, 1862, to the Secretary of State, from Maj. B. H. Hill, the Department of State was advised that McKay had been released from military custody and would proceed to Washington and report himself to the Secretary of State. McKay arrived in Washington about February 1, 1862, where he remained February 15, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

This man [Charles Butler] was mate of the steamer Salvor and was captured with that vessel while endeavoring to run the blockade near Tortugas October 14, 1861, by the U. S. steamer Keystone State. The Salvor was taken to Philadelphia by a prize crew and Butler was committed to Fort Lafayette. Butler claimed to be a subject of Denmark, and for the purpose of ascertaining the facts of his nationality he was by order of the Secretary of State released from Fort Lafayette January 8, 1862, and was placed in the custody of U. S. Marshal Murray, of New York.

William J. Browning, first engineer on board the steamer Salvor, was captured with that vessel while endeavoring to run the blockade about twenty miles south of Tortugas October 14, 1861, by the U. S. steamer Keystone State, Captain Scott commanding. The Salvor was taken to Philadelphia by a prize crew and Browning was transferred to Fort Lafayette. December 14, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State to Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Browning on his taking the oath of allegiance, &c. He was accordingly released December 17, 1861.

George McNabb was assistant engineer of the steamer Salvor and was captured with that vessel while attempting to run the blockade about twenty miles south of Tortugas, October 14, 1861, by the U. S. steamer Keystone State. The Salvor was taken to Philadelphia by a prize crew and McNabb was committed to Fort Lafayette. He was released December 17, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State on taking the oath of allegiance.

Donald McKay was captured from on board the steamer Salvor while attempting to run the blockade some twenty miles south of Tortugas by Captain Scott, commanding U. S. steamer Keystone State, on the 14th of October, 1861. McKay, a boy fifteen years of age, was the son of the owner and master of the Salvor, which vessel contained a cargo of contraband and other goods. He was brought to Philadelphia by a prize crew on board the Salvor and sent to Fort Lafayette where he remained February 15, 1862, when in accordance with an order from the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Francisco Menendez, captain of the bark M. S. Perry or Salvor, was captured by the Keystone State, Captain Scott commanding, on the 14th of October, 1861, about twenty miles south of Tortugas. The Perry was attempting to run the blockade with the British flag flying and with a cargo of contraband and other goods. Menendez was brought in with the prize to the port of Philadelphia and forwarded to Fort Lafayette. He was released February 3, 1862, by order of the Secretary of State, having given in his evidence before the prize court at Philadelphia.

This person [Hunter Semple] was one of the crew of the bark M. S. Perry which was captured by the U. S. steamer Keystone State October 14, 1861, south of Tortugas while attempting to run the blockade with contraband goods. He was brought in with the prize vessel to the port of Philadelphia and sent to Fort Lafayette. The said Hunter Semple was released by order of the Secretary of State February 3, 1862, having given his evidence before the prize commissioners.

The only information the Department of State has concerning these men [Messrs. Barrett and Ball] is contained in two letters, one dated Key West, Fla., November 15, 1861, addressed to T. J. Boynton, esq., U. S. district attorney, Key West, Fla., from B. H. Hill, major Second Artillery, commanding, asking whether in the examination before the grand jury any evidence was elicited to criminate Messrs. Barrett and Ball, passengers on the steamer Salvor when she was captured and then in confinement at Fort Taylor, further stating that if there is no charge against them he proposes to release them on their taking the oath of allegiance; to which U. S. Attorney Boynton replies that he is possessed of no evidence criminating Messrs. Barrett and Ball and has no reasons to urge why they should not be released on their taking the oath of allegiance.

Frederick Louis, one of the crew of the bark M. S. Perry, was captured by the U. S. steamer Keystone State October 14, 1861, about twenty miles south of the Tortugas attempting to run the blockade. Louis was brought with the prize to the port of Philadelphia and forwarded to Fort Lafayette. An order was issued from the Department of State dated January 29, 1862, directing Marshal Murray, of New York, to release Louis from Fort Lafayette, he being a foreign subject and his testimony being no longer required in the prize courts. He was released February 1, 1862.

William Reed was one of the crew of the steamer Salvor or M. S. Perry and was captured with that vessel while attempting to run the blockade about twenty miles south of Tortugas October 14, 1861, by U. S. steamer Keystone State, Captain Scott commanding. The Salvor was taken into the port of Philadelphia by a prize crew and Reed was sent to Fort Lafayette. An order was issued from the Department of State dated January 10, 1862, directing Marshal Robert Murray to release Reed unless his testimony was indispensable. He was accordingly released January 15, 1862.

Peter Fernandez was one of the crew of the M. S. Perry or Salvor, which vessel was captured by the U. S. steamer Keystone State, Captain Scott commanding, on the 14th of October, 1861, while attempting to run the blockade about twenty miles south of Tortugas. Fernandez was brought with prize to Philadelphia and forwarded to Fort Lafayette. He was released February 3, 1862, by order of the Secretary of State, having given his evidence before the prize court at Philadelphia.

Charles Tift, of Key West, Fla., was arrested at that place on the 17th of October, 1861, on the charge of having furnished funds to McKay, the master of the steamer Salvor, for the purchase of arms in Havana to be run into a rebel port on board the said steamer. The case of Tift was brought before the grand jury at the November term of the U. S. district court at Key West but he was not indicted. He was retained in custody, however, till the 6th day of December, 1861, when he was released on giving a bond with two sureties in the sum of $5,000 not to leave the island without the written permission of the commanding officer of the port. The Department of State had no information of this arrest till December 26, 1861, when a report from Maj. B. H. Hill, commanding post at Fort Taylor, dated December 6, 1861, stating the above facts, was received from the War Department.

Don Santos, one of the crew of the bark M. S. Perry or Salvor, was captured by the Keystone State, Captain Scott commanding, on the 14th of October, 1861, about twenty miles south of Tortugas. The Perry was attempting to run the blockade with the British flag flying and with a cargo of contraband goods. Santos was brought with the prize into the port of Philadelphia and forwarded to Fort Lafayette. He was released February 3, 1862, by order of the Secretary of State, having given his evidence before the prize court at Philadelphia.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Key West, October 16, 1861.

[Maj. WILLIAM H. FRENCH.]

SIR: A note addressed to yourself by Commander G. H. Scott requesting you to return three men taken from the prize brought into this port by Commander Scott and now in Fort Taylor, by you sent to Hon. William Marvin, has been by him referred to me.* There is no doubt that the men mentioned are guilty of treason against the Government of the United States, the offense having been committed on the [high] seas. They can only be tried in this district after having once been brought here. It is consequently defeating the ends of justice to take or send them to New York. In addition to this fact the vessel has been libeled and an attachment regularly issued and the vessel, the Salvor or M. S. Perry, is now properly in the custody of the U. S. marshal. If the marshal should call on you for assistance in keeping or regaining possession of the prize it is my opinion you would be justified in giving it, but violence disproportioned to the nature of the outrage would not of course be justifiable, such for instance as sinking the vessel in the channel to prevent her leaving port.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THOS. J. BOYNTON,
U. S. District Attorney.

[Indorsement.]

The steamer is leaving without my being able to send any letters of advice or explanation.

HEADQUARTERS, Key West, October 17, 1861.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,

Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, Washington City, D. C.

GENERAL: On yesterday I had the honor to report in an indorsement upon a communication from the U. S. district attorney here that the steamer Keystone State had got under weigh, not permitting me to write in extenso. I now inclose a copy of the letter* from the American consul at Havana which I showed to Captain Scott, U. S. Navy, immediately after its receipt at about sundown. The Keystone State sailed and captured the Salvor at about 11 p. m. the same night (13th). The Salvor was brought in at sunrise the next morning. I boarded her and found the evidences so strong against her and against all on board that I sent the officer of the day to arrest Mr. McKay, the owner, also two persons named Ball and Doctor Barrett. These men are now confined in the fort.

The U. S. court here then asserted jurisdiction over this case which has been resisted by the naval commander, who refused to obey the arrest served on him and sailed away after two hours' notice to me of his intent, requesting at the same time that the three prisoners should be sent on board. I was not prepared to lend myself to such hasty action in the presence of a regularly organized U. S. court and declined doing so. It is very probable others on this Key and elsewhere are implicated in this treasonable attempt to aid the rebels.

This morning I arrested and have confined Mr. Charles Tift, in charge of a large mercantile firm here. I have sufficient evidence to know that he has furnished McKay with means very recently on a late visit to the Havana. The unexpected sailing of the Keystone State to avoid the U. S. civil authorities carries off evidence which might trace out others and enables them to screen themselves from immediate suspicion. These prisoners will be sent to New York the first opportunity which presents, which may be when the steamer McClellan returns from Fort Pickens. I will now give a succinct history of the Salvor.

This propeller was built for a wrecker on the Upper Lakes but was purchased for McKay for the same purpose on the Florida Reefs. No business of that kind doing McKay employed her to carry cattle from Pease Creek to Havana and for the troops here and at Tortugas. The blockade stopped that and learning that Hartstene, late commander, U. S. Navy, was negotiating for her, I seized her on her next arrival here. The steamer was then employed by the quartermaster's department and made one trip to Pickens and to Tortugas. Running constantly in salt water her boilers burned out and I had a survey made on her by the assistant quartermaster and Assistant Engineer Grier, U. S. steamer Crusader, who reported her unsafe and unfit to go to sea. She was then anchored under charge inside the harbor. About the last of August having occasion to procure horses from the Havana the acting assistant quartermaster informed me that Captain McKay thought his steamer would be able to go and return with them. The quartermaster returned in about a week and reported that the steamer had broken down and could not be repaired for some time. Since then she has remained in the Havana. The horses, however, were purchased and arrived here in a schooner about a week since. The money was advanced by Mr. Tift through Mr. McKay. The quartermaster has not paid for them. The amount is about $1,800. The consul's letter exhibits the rest of the transaction.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HEADQUARTERS, Key West, October 18, 1861.

General L. THOMAS,

Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, Washington City, D. C.

GENERAL: The inclosed dispatches* just received from the consulate-general at the Havana are self-explanatory. I cordially and earnestly request the attention of the Government to the vigilance of Mr. Savage, our consul at the Havana. To his unremitting energy it is due that the rebels were frustrated in the case of the Salvor. That there is no naval steamer or available war vessel on this station to intercept the others is referable to another department. The McClellan cannot take the prisoners.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. FRENCH,
Brevet Major, U. S. Army, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 31, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: I have read with much interest the report and accompanying papers received with your letter* of the 10th instant of Commander G. H. Scott, commanding the U. S. steamer Keystone State, dated 25th instant relative to the capture of the steamship Salvor or M. S. Perry, and return them herein with my thanks. The course pursued by Commander Scott in bringing the said steamship to Philadelphia appears to have been very judicious. The slaves to whom he refers should I think be retained at the navy-yard there for such service as they can be usefully employed upon and it would perhaps be advisable to place on file in this Department such of the letters referred to in his report as are not required for the condemnation of the vessel.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 9, 1861.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army,

Commandant, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: The commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia has been directed to send the following-named persons to Fort Lafayette. They were on board the Salvor at the time of her capture by the Keystone State, viz: Ponche [Francisco] Menendez, captain; J. [Charles] Butler, first officer; W. J. Browning, first engineer; George McNabb, second engineer; Donald McKay, supercargo; Hunter Semple, cook; William Reed, Frederick Louis, Peter Fernandez, David Evans, seamen.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *November 12, 1861.*JAMES McNABB, Esq., No. 16 John Street, New York.

DEAR BROTHER: Having arrived at our destination in the fort here and having drawn up a petition to send to the English consul I beg that you will do us the favor to take it to him, as none of us know the directions, and oblige. We arrived last night and are much more comfortable here than on board the Princeton.

From your affectionate brother,

GEORGE McNABB.

[Inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, *November 12, 1861.*HER BRITISH MAJESTY'S CONSUL, New York.

SIR: Being confined in Fort Lafayette without just cause, and not having any opportunity to appear before you personally I hope, sir, you will excuse the writer of these lines for the inconvenience they might create you. I, the master of the British steamer M. S. Perry, in behalf of the officers and crew of said vessel, now confined in Fort Lafayette, petition you to look into our case the particulars of which are as follows:

The British steamer M. S. Perry (formerly called Salvor), owned by Mr. John McLenan, British subject in Havana, left Havana on the 13th of October last with a cargo of assorted merchandise consisting principally of coffee and cigars and eight passengers (owners of the cargo) on board, bound for Nassau, New Providence, via Key West. Two of said passengers were destined for Key West, the other six for Nassau; the cargo likewise was shipped and cleared for Nassau, New Providence. The said steamer was properly cleared in Havana as an English vessel through the custom-house and English consul. We passed the Moro Castle at 7.30 a. m. on the 13th of October last shaping our course for Key West to land the two passengers specified. The engine being in bad condition were obliged to stop engine every two hours or so for ten or fifteen minutes at a time to repair the engine. For that reason we kept a well westerly course (as the current sets strong to the eastward in the Gulf Stream) so as not to come to leeward (eastward) of Key West. The steamer didn't average more than three miles and a half per hour.

About 10 p. m. same day fell in with the U. S. steamer Keystone State, steering to the westward. We were then according to my reckoning about thirty-five miles to the southward and westward from Sand Key Light, which is in the vicinity of Key West, steering northeast. I was ordered by the commander of said war steamer to heave to which I immediately did. We were boarded and taken as a prize to Key West, where the ship's papers were taken ashore by the U. S. marshal and three passengers transferred to Fort Taylor, Key West. After remaining in Key West for two days the steamer Keystone State took the M. S. Perry in tow and started for Philadelphia where we arrived the 25th of October. We were examined before the prize commissioners and sent on board the Princeton, U. S. receiving ship in Philadelphia.

All communication with the shore being prohibited I had no opportunity to employ a legal adviser. I sent one letter to the British consul in Philadelphia but if said letter arrived at the point of destination I do not know as I did not receive any answer. Yesterday afternoon we left for Fort Lafayette where we arrived last night. Four of the passengers, owners of the cargo, remained in Philadelphia I believe.

Hoping, sir, that you will listen to our petition and do something to[ward] our liberation or a hearing before proper authority, we sign ourselves, respectfully, your obedient servants,

FRANCISCO MENENDEZ,
Master of M. S. Perry.

FORT LAFAYETTE, November 20, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: I was born in the city of Hoboken, State of New Jersey, and resided in the city of New York until the last six years when on account of bad health I removed to Havana, Island of Cuba, where I have resided since. On the 3d of October I engaged as engineer on board of the steamer Salvor, and on the 12th of the same month I signed articles granted by the English consul at Havana for a voyage to Nassau and return. I had no knowledge of the intention of the captain or owners until my capture by the U. S. steamer Keystone State, when I was informed by the prize officer in charge that we were taken for running the blockade. I gave the prize engineer all assistance in my power by standing watch and working the engine until it broke down.

I have not been in any of the Southern States for the last seven years, and the only time then was when I was second engineer of the steamer Empire City, in the employ of M. O. Roberts, of New York City, carrying the U. S. mail from New York, Havana and New Orleans. My assistant, Mr. George McNabb, is similarly situated, having resided in Havana the last three years. He also was born in the State of New Jersey and resided in Paterson until his removal to Havana.

And now, sir, having stated our situation, we respectfully petition our release from this place so as to enable us to return to Havana to work at our trade as engineers for the support of our families as they are depending on our labor for their daily bread, having no other means of living. That we are both Northern men and of good Union principles Consul Savage, of Havana, would vouch for us.

Honored sir, I would respectfully ask permission for my little daughter (Camilla Browning, eleven years old, accompanied by her grandmother, Ann Clark), residing No. 62 Bedford street, New York City, to visit me while I remain here. I have not seen her but once in the last three years.

Hoping that you will think favorably of our case and grant our petition, we respectfully subscribe ourselves, your obedient servants,

W. J. BROWNING.
GEORGE McNABB.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 28, 1861.
WILLIAM A. LIGHTHALL, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 13th instant relative to Donald McKay, captured on board the steamer Salvor. In reply I have to inform you that it is not deemed expedient to release him at present, but you are at liberty to furnish him with any articles which may be necessary for his comfort.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

FORT LAFAYETTE, December 2, 1861.
[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

HONORABLE SIR: I saw a letter from the State Department which was signed by Lieutenant Hawley saying not to employ any one to try to get me out. This is the way I understand it. I was taken in the prize Salvor which the Keystone State took. They left my father at Key West in the fort and I was brought here, for what I do not know. I am only fifteen years old. I asked Captain Scott to let me see my father before we come off and he would not do it. I think it is very hard. I had no interest in vessel nor cargo. I was merely a passenger with my father, and if it is in your power to let me know whether I am to stay here or not please let me know, for I want to go where my father is if it is possible. I have one or two friends in New York. I was instructed to write to you. If you can do anything for me will you please do so and give me an answer as I am anxious to get where my father is.

Your obedient servant,

DONALD McKAY.

HEADQUARTERS,
Fort Taylor, Key West, Fla., December 6, 1861.
The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, U. S. ARMY, Washington, D. C.

SIR: When I assumed command of this post on the 7th ultimo I found four citizens confined as prisoners, viz, James McKay, Charles Tift, R. H. Barrett and W. G. Ball, all of whom were arrested in connection with the capture of the steamer Salvor by the U. S. steamer Keystone State on the 14th of October and whose cases were reported to you by Brig. Gen. William H. French then in command.

Three of these cases I have disposed of as follows: Messrs. Ball and Barrett were passengers on board the Salvor and were arrested and detained principally as witnesses, but in the investigation before the grand jury in its November term did not appear to know anything of the cargo of the Salvor, and on the 15th of November I addressed a letter to the U. S. district attorney, a copy of which and his reply I inclose, upon which I released them upon the 21st ultimo. Both have taken the oath of allegiance. Mr. Charles Tift is a merchant of Key West and was arrested here on the 17th of October on the charge of having furnished funds to McKay for the purchase of arms, &c., in Havana, to be run into a rebel port on board the steamer Salvor. There was no evidence, however, to support this charge before the grand jury and the indictment for treason was returned the 7th of November as not a true bill, but Mr. Tift had previously made himself very obnoxious to the loyal citizens of this community by his secession opinions and although he had taken the oath of allegiance it was believed that it was with the view of only saving himself from being sent off the island. I therefore did not think it proper to release him on the action of the grand jury. I am now satisfied that a period has arrived when the correctional punishment and confinement should terminate and on the application of Judge William Marvin, U. S. district judge of this district, and Charles Howe, U. S. collector of this port, whose joint letter I inclose,* and in consideration that he has now been confined since 17th of October I have released him. I have, however, taken the precaution to cause him to execute a bond with two sureties for $5,000 that he does not leave the island without the written permission of the commanding officer of this post.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. HILL,
Major, Second Artillery, Commanding.

P. S.—I also inclose a communication† just received from Mr. Charles Tift.

T. J. BOYNTON, Esq., U. S. District Attorney, Key West, Fla.

SIR: I request that you will inform me whether in the examination before the grand jury on its recent term any evidence was elicited to criminate in any degree Messrs. Barrett and Ball, who are now in confinement in Fort Taylor. They seem to have been passengers on board the steamer Salvor when she was captured, and if there is no charge against them and no reason for longer holding them as prisoners I propose to release them on their taking the oath of allegiance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. HILL,
Major, Second Artillery, Commanding.

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Key West, Fla., November 15, 1861.

Maj. B. H. HILL, Commanding Fort Taylor.

SIR: Your note of this morning concerning Barrett and Ball, now confined in Fort Taylor, is received. I have in my possession no evidence in any [way] criminating them and have no reason to urge why you should not carry out the intention you express of releasing them on their taking the oath of allegiance.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THOS. J. BOYNTON,
U. S. Attorney.

FORT TAYLOR, Key West, Fla., December 7, 1861.

L. THOMAS, Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to request instructions in regard to Capt. James McKay who I found a prisoner at this post when I assumed command. The case has been already reported to you by Major French. The grand jury in its November term had the case of Captain McKay before it, but the steamer Salvor, of which he was the reputed master and owner, was taken North for trial by Captain Scott, U. S. Navy, her captor, contrary to the wishes of the judicial authorities here, and on examination of the case before the grand jury there was really no evidence before it to criminate McKay and the bill of indictment was returned "not a true bill." I inclose the certificate of the U. S. clerk. I have, however, still detained Captain McKay and he is still a prisoner in this fort and I request instructions in relation to him. I presume that on examination of the cargo of the Salvor which was taken to Philadelphia, as I see by the newspapers, the measure of Captain McKay's guilt or innocence can be determined. He informs me that he has written to General Thomas, Adjutant-General. He has been confined in this fort since 14th of October and expresses his willingness to take the oath of allegiance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. HILL,
Major, Second Artillery, Commanding.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Southern District of Fla.:

I, George D. Allen, clerk of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida, do hereby certify that the regular November term of said court has this 7th day of November, 1861, adjourned sine die and that the grand jury returned an indictment for treason against James McKay "not a true bill," and an indictment for treason against Charles Tift "not a true bill."

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of said court at Key West, this 7th day of November, in the year 1861.

GEORGE D. ALLEN,
Clerk.

FORT TAYLOR, Key West, December 7, 1861.

General L. THOMAS, Washington City.

DEAR SIR: Since my confinement here now two very long months I have taken the liberty of addressing you twice* in which I tried to give you a brief sketch of how I got here. Up to this time I have heard nothing of my case other than a number of misstatements in relation to me from here which I observed in the public prints. By this time, however, I hope the steamer is discharged of her cargo and contents known, the owners of which are with the steamer and cargo, or the representatives of it, with the exception of 3 bags of coffee, 5,000 cigars and 4 cases of gin which belonged to myself. I was exceedingly glad to find that my negroes arrived out here some ten days since on a Government schooner with instructions to the captain to report with them to Commodore [Mc]Kean. This is charitable in their behalf to send them to this climate. I wish that my young son had been sent with them as he is not known in Philadelphia and has neither clothes nor means and must therefore suffer in that climate. His mother urged me to take him with me from home for fear he would be led away during my absence and this is the result. I little doubt have you to thank for the negroes being returned out South. Whether ever returned to me or not it is a kindness to them as they desired it. I feel grateful.

* Previous letters omitted because their substance is restated in this.

As the Hon. Judge Marvin of this place is [going] North I cannot help troubling you once more [with] a statement of how I have been so unfortunately placed betwixt two fires and been so since commencement of our country's troubles. Ever since November, 1860, up till June, 1861, I was not at Tampa or with my family ten days all put together, being attending to my cattle exportations from Charlotte Harbor to Havana which for me was extensive and required my individual attention. Still I am named publicly in the prints of being a prominent individual in the secession cause and a commissioner for obtaining loans for the Confederate States. To this report I can only reply that I have never been requested by the State to occupy such a position nor have I ever asked any person or persons to aid in such, having more interest in making good my own engagements, which as matters have turned I have operated too extensively I regret to say, but would have done well both for the portion of country in which I lived as also for myself if our country had remained as formerly. As you are aware in too many instances is the country ruined by politicians and in Tampa there are three or four of those who have done nothing but live from the public crib while anything was there, of which I have had no hesitancy in telling them, and ever since the State seceded they have had their powers turned toward my downfall if possible as they were envious of my exertions and success in my undertakings.

When Major French arrived here with his officers and men, &c., from Texas I happened that day to arrive here from Havana with my steamer. The major and some of my old acquaintances came on board, all of whom I was pleased to see. During the afternoon Major Porter—now I believe Brigadier-General Porter—came on board and asked me if I would be kind enough to go and try to catch Lieutenant Platt and men who were slowly drifting out to sea on a flat with some Government property on board. I immediately looked and observed the fact, ordered steam on my boat and went and brought them back, for which Lieutenant Platt was very grateful and Major Porter offered to pay me which I refused, stating I was glad of having the pleasure of assisting old acquaintances. Major Porter thanked me and stated that he had asked the captain of steamer Galveston, belonging to Harris & Morgan, who refused. This act of mine was carried to my enemies in Tampa and noted against me.

In a week or two after Lieutenant Benson, post quartermaster at Tortugas, asked me if I could not supply him with beef or cattle at Tortugas. I replied that I had the cattle but that my engagements in Havana would not permit me to leave cattle on my way with them but on my next trip I would call to oblige him with what he then required, which I did to Tortugas and left him three head, being all he wanted. This was another heinous act of me and capital for my Tampa enemies. These acts of mine came to their ears in Tampa. They enlarged upon it, as I was never there, and spread around the country that I was carrying my cattle from Charlotte Harbor to Havana and then putting the Spanish flag on my boat, carried the same cattle back and sold them to the United States Government at Tortugas and Key West, and that I was a general agent for the Government and a traitor and should be hung. These reports were spread extensively without my knowledge. The excitement occasioned by these few was the means of preventing Captain Aulder, of this place, who supplied citizens and troops here with beef for years, of being furnished with beef-cattle from neighborhood of Tampa as formerly, although Captain Aulder informed me that the governor and Mr. Mallory had written them of their approval of his doing so; and as I controlled all the beef-cattle and put up wharves, &c., at Charlotte Harbor I told Captain Aulder that he could be supplied at Charlotte Harbor by me, and then he could supply Key West and Tortugas, for which accommodation Captain Craven and Major French would allow me to pass and continue my business to Havana as formerly.

About the 20th of May I was asked by Major French if I could not take Judge Douglas and family as also several others, some of whose vessels had been seized here, and carry them to Tampa or rather to Cedar Keys. I told him if he desired it I would by being allowed to call at Tampa and obtain some wood, as some time previous to this I was informed that I could not go to Tampa with my steamer. I carried the persons to Cedar Keys as requested, for which I received or collected from them $180, my trip costing me $300; but many of them had no money. On my return from Cedar Keys to Tampa for wood Captain Hartstene, of the C. S. Navy, called on board my steamer and looked around her, but did not say anything in relation to purchasing. This I informed, I believe, Judge Marvin, of here, as also Major French. On my return from Havana about the 6th of June Commodore [Commander] Mervine seized or rather detained my vessel and crew, stating that she must not go to the mainland, neither must I myself. This was a serious loss to me as I had twenty men and horses gathering my cattle and they would be in readiness, which they were, for me and after keeping them for two weeks' herding let loose again. A few days after the vessel was seized by the commodore [commander] the quartermaster, Lieutenant Gillem, asked me how much my boat cost me a day for men's wages. I told him about $38 per day. He said he wished some stores from Tortugas and would send her down there. At his request I went and performed his desire. If I desired to do wrong I had then the power of taking my boat home, but if I had done so there was no security for her as I could not then nor since place her in safety in Tampa or Charlotte Harbor and all other places blockaded as where she could go the most of the Government vessels could go and take her away, hence the folly of my at any time being desirous of taking her there as is now represented. The vessel was therefore kept and crew by the quartermaster and used, and I was permitted myself to go and see my family at Tampa in a fishing smack in company with the Catholic priest who was returning to Tampa. On our arrival at Tampa or soon after some twelve men armed, at the suggestion I understand of these enemies of mine, seized the smack, stating that she belonged to Union citizens of Key West. I considered myself morally bound for the vessel as they had kindly placed myself and the priest home and as such I immediately informed the governor of the case who immediately sent down a person to release the smack. Upon this information being received these enemies made up their mind that she should not be delivered and that night they burnt the smack and threatened violence to the men who came with her. I immediately in connection with the agent of the governor procured a boat which I sent my son in down the bay and got the men safe off. By this time the reports concerning myself had been spreading around the country to an alarming extent I found, for the safety of myself and family, I therefore demanded an investigation of the matter which was had, and after an investigation of over two weeks nothing could be substantiated more than that I obeyed the order of an officer of the United States Government. Whether that was my saving Lieutenant Platt and men or coming to anchor in the harbor of Key West when so requested by Captain Craven I know not. For this I had to find bonds for $10,000 to appear at circuit court in October last which under all the circumstances has been impossible for me to do. What may be the result of this to me I cannot now say.

After this being all over at Tampa I was informed that if I was at Key West I would receive my steamer and negroes back again as her boiler was not in good order, the Government having used her one month, for which I received only $1,026, I think, and up to this time is all I received, all the time since June 6 having officers and men on board for which I have paid out over $4,800 in cash and still due some. The steamer was detained here near three months. I was then allowed to take her and crew away on condition that she would not be carried to the Confederate States. I therefore left for Havana with the intention of having her boiler overhauled and obtain soft coal and send her on to New York and through my merchants in Havana to have her sold in their name, as I being a citizen of the South dare not sell her at the risk of my life North. Upon inquiry of the American consul, Savage, I found that my merchants could not hold her, as they were citizens of Havana, and by the proclamation of President Lincoln she would be subject to confiscation if I owned her and [was] found on the sea, as also my negroes by the proclamation then of Frémont, of manumission. I was therefore placed in a very unpleasant position and how to act I did not know. Could not sell my steamer for cash in Havana and otherwise it would be folly; durst not leave my negroes there I being under bonds to carry them off the island. I wrote Major French here that I did not see how I could return by way of Key West, as I promised him to bring fourteen ponies from Cuba for his battery, after observing these proclamations. He did not answer me. This therefore convinced me more of my risk. This was really hard, after going to the expense of having my boiler repaired, which took two weeks.

At last I was informed by a gentleman from Nassau, New Providence, that if I had my vessel in Nassau I could sell her he thought to a company there who was supplying that place with fresh beef from New York, but there was a risk in even getting her there. He told me—and which I had seen—several American schooners from Rhode Island and other parts [were] arriving with English colors, and that he himself was American and was in the same way. I therefore made inquiry of the English consul of the requisite to hold an English vessel. He very kindly told me, and after stating my condition to American Consul Savage he said he did not know any other way I could be secure under the circumstances. Therefore Mr. Savage accordingly drew up the bill in name of a British subject who gave me his notes and power of attorney to sell the vessel. Being under such heavy expense and short of money I put her for Nassau, New Providence, and in a few days received some freight, enough I presumed to pay expenses going there, and left with part of a cargo and owners of same on board on 13th of October for Nassau. My negroes being on board and my young son I was desirous of making the mainland of Florida and requested the captain to steer the vessel for Tortugas, so that when I made the land in sight I intended sending my young son and negroes in a boat and send them home and for him to inform the court there the impossibility of my getting home. No person on board knowing my intention of this I did not see any use in telling them until I saw the land. It is well known I could not take my negroes to Nassau, and after I had got clear of my son and negroes I myself, steamer, &c., to proceed to Nassau, as first intended. In trying to place my property as above stated in safety, as certainly could have been done by me at a proper time if Commodore Mervine had not taken the advantage of the privilege granted me at first by Major French and Captain Craven, which is an advantage taken of their own acts, and in which the Government troops and this island were benefited in being supplied with fresh beef; in short my property was taken and retained until these proclamations were proclaimed, and my other property and family being in the South and I dare not sell my steamer North with my own consent, if known at home, and in trying to thus save my property Captain Scott came on me about twenty miles south of Tortugas and took charge.

The wicked and malicious reports in relation to myself and steamer in the public prints sent from here I cannot stop, but all I can say is that ere this it is known what cargo she had on board and, so far as I know and remember will here state from memory, bound for Nassau, viz, 176 bags of coffee, 8 trunks of shoes, said to be women's; 110,000 cigars, probably some more; 2 bottles quicksilver, shipped and belonging to Solar, Carbonell & Co., Havana, and passenger on board in whose charge the same is; 100 sacks coffee shipped and belonging to Cesó & Co., Havana, and I think in charge of above passenger; 16 cases hats, said to be; 240,000, I think, of cigars, or thereabouts, belonging to and shipped by Hayman & Co., Havana, his clerk or agent on board in charge of same; 1 small old box of linen lint and bandages marked Mordecai & Co., belonging to Doctor Barrett, passenger on board, who was left here; 3 sacks coffee; 4 cases gin; 5,000 cigars and a small quantity of pineapples and bananas belonging to myself; 1 small gun belonging to steamer and 1 small pistol of my son's. Above is a complete statement to my recollection or knowledge of what was on board. If I desired carrying arms, &c., I could have gone to Matamoras and be well paid but would not.

General, I would not have taken the liberty of troubling you with such a long statement of [my] acts and present condition were it not the fact and knowing within myself that all I desired was to protect my property which I have worked hard for and that I was deprived by the Government or its officials here from doing so when no law or proclamation prevented me from doing so more than the law of might, while that I was really doing all I possibly could do in justice to aid those here of the Government. I am now from home over four months and only about 200 miles from it confined and have not heard from my poor family since I left. Little doubt they are suffering and the little property I had there likely destroyed by the rabble. As to money, I may say I have none. I owe some little money in New York and my steamer was the only thing available I had to dispose of to pay my debts and if any left to remain quiet until I saw how these troubles were to terminate. On the account of my family I am exceedingly anxious to get home and also to have my son who is on the boat North to be sent out here. As regards my boat and negroes my case is before you and I sincerely trust that the Secretary of War will, through your influence and Judge Marvin's, take a liberal view of the case as also order my release from here on such conditions as in his judgment he may deem proper. General, I certainly have no claims on you for thus troubling you, but my condition at present after so many years of hard work and now to be left penniless at my age and a young family, while no desire or evil intent of mine has occasioned it, I cannot but think it hard.

Trusting sincerely that whatever is done will be for the best and that you will forgive me for the liberty I take in asking your assistance in my behalf, I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES MCKAY.

I will merely add that if I was allowed to take my vessel to Havana when detained here first by Commodore [Commander] Mervine or soon after, I could have sold her for $40,000 in Havana to the same parties I furnished with cattle there. They since have supplied themselves with the steamer Honduras from New York City carrying cattle from Truxillo to Battabano, Cuba.

J. McK.

The freight was to be paid me by the shippers by drafts on Charleston or New Orleans which were said to be easily sold in Nassau, or on my return to Havana myself as I chose after getting to Nassau. I had no letters for any person whatever, the owners of the property being with it themselves or in their charge. If any letters they must have had them and if I had any would have no hesitancy in saying so.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: In obedience to the instructions contained in your letter of the 10th instant I proceeded to Fort Lafayette and made an examination into the case of William [J.] Browning. I find from his statements that he is an engineer by profession and was engaged on a sugar plantation near Havana when business becoming dull he shipped as engineer on board the British steamer Salvor bound as he supposed to Nassau. He disclaims all knowledge of her intention to run the blockade or to carry any goods contraband of war, and he expresses his willingness to take the oath of allegiance. He is a native of this city and has referred me to a number of highly respectable citizens residing here (some of whom are personally known to me) who give him an excellent character, express their entire confidence in his loyalty to the Government and are willing to enter into bonds that he will not do any act hostile to the United States. I therefore recommend that he be discharged.

There is another person named George McNabb, a Scotchman by birth, who was assistant engineer on board the same vessel and is in my opinion in precisely the same position as Browning. He also expresses his readiness to take the oath of allegiance and engage that he will commit no act hostile to the United States. If you have no testimony in the Department against him I would suggest that he likewise be released.

I inclose the letter which you requested me to return, and remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

ROBT. MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 14, 1861.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette.

SIR: Let William J. Browning, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

(Same order in case of George McNabb.)

I, William J. Browning, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law; and further that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. So help me God.

WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 17th day of December, 1861.

ROBT. MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

[NOTE.—On the same day George McNabb subscribed to the same oath.]

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you a letter from William Reed, a British seaman, who states that he was taken on the 13th of October last on board the British schooner M. S. Perry on a voyage from Havana to Nassau, New Providence, via Key West, and that he is now imprisoned in Fort Lafayette.

I shall be much obliged if you will supply me with information respecting the cause of the imprisonment of Reed and respecting his case generally.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant.

The Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I am imprisoned here by the United States Government for what cause I have not been informed. I was taken on the 13th of October last on board of the British steamer M. S. Perry on a voyage from Havana to Nassau, New Providence, via Key West. I am a British subject, shipped on board of said vessel as a seaman. I have not violated any laws of this country which would be sufficient cause for my arrest and detention. I was born in North Shields, in England.

I ask you as a representative of my Government to procure my release.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM REED.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, January 10, 1862.*ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal, New York.

SIR: You will please release William Reed, a prisoner in Fort Lafayette who is understood to have been taken from on board the captured steamer Salvor or M. S. Perry unless his testimony should be deemed indispensable to the administration of justice.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 10, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 31st ultimo asking for information respecting the case of William Reed an alleged British subject now imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, N. Y., and to state in reply that orders have been given for his release unless his testimony should be deemed indispensable to the administration of justice.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT HAMILTON, *New York Harbor, January 13, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions to Marshal Murray of January 10 I have this day released William Reed, one of the crew of the Salvor and a prisoner at Fort Lafayette.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

*Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.*HEADQUARTERS, *Key West, Fla., January 23, 1862.*Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I have released from military custody Capt. James McKay, of Florida. Captain McKay will proceed to New York and thence to Washington City where he will call and report himself to you. He is the bearer of a letter from Judge William Marvin giving a full statement of his case.

Captain McKay was the reputed owner of the steamer Salvor, captured by the U. S. steamer Keystone State on the 14th of October last while attempting to run the blockade. The Salvor was under English colors and was taken to the port of Philadelphia for trial. Captain McKay was detained here for trial, but as all the evidence in his case was taken North on the Salvor there was no evidence to criminate him and the grand jury returned the indictment of treason as "not a true bill." I found Captain McKay a prisoner when I assumed the command here in November and have been expecting instructions about him, but not receiving them I have after consultation with Judge Marvin concluded to release him on his pledge to repair to Washington and report himself to you.

Inclosed is a copy of a letter* I addressed to Adjutant-General, U. S. Army, on the 7th of December last, and a copy of the certificate of the U. S. district court of the action of the grand jury.

SIR: I beg to call your attention to my case and that of the remaining portion of my crew as well as passenger McKay (a youth of sixteen years). I am or rather was the master of the British steamer M. S. Perry, owned by John McClelland [McLenan], esq., resident of Havana, though a British subject. The M. S. Perry was on a legitimate voyage from Havana to Nassau and was captured thirty-five miles from Key West, without any intention of entering any Southern port. A portion of the crew have been released and I know of no reason for my capture in the first place nor for my present detention. I have been now confined in this fort since the early part of November and as you must have the full facts before you by this time I desire most respectfully to solicit your immediate attention to my case and that of my crew.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: On the 31st of last month I had the honor to bring to your notice the case of William Reed, a British seaman taken on board the British schooner M. S. Perry and imprisoned in Fort Lafayette. You were so good as to inform me by a note dated the 10th instant that orders had been given for the release of this man unless his testimony should be deemed indispensable to the administration of justice.

I received the day before yesterday an application from a man of the name of Hunter Semple who appears to have been captured at the same time and on board the same vessel. He states that he is a British subject and that he has been in close confinement in Fort Lafayette since the 12th of October last.

I beg to recommend the case to your attention and have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant.

I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, New York, February 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: In obedience to the instructions contained in your order of the 29th ultimo I proceeded on Saturday, the 1st instant, to Forts Hamilton, Columbus and Lafayette where I discharged the following persons, viz: Capt. Francisco Menendez, Spanish subject; Seaman Peter Fernandez, Spanish subject; Seaman Frederick Louis, French subject; Cook Hunter Semple, British subject, all of the British steamer M. S. Perry, who were the only remaining witnesses in prize cases not citizens of the United States. These men have already given their evidence in the prize court at Philadelphia and their retention would have been an unnecessary expense to the Government.

I beg to return as requested the letter of Menendez, who states that the same was written by a fellow-prisoner (being himself imperfectly acquainted with our language) and the assertion made therein that he is a British subject is erroneous and was made without his authority. The youth (McKay) alluded to in the same writing is a citizen of the United States and a native of North Carolina. I have also the honor to inclose you a note received from one of these men so released who demands compensation for his imprisonment and a free passage to Havana or the British West Indies and I would respectfully ask your decision in the premises.

NEW YORK, February 3, 1862.

MR. ROBERT MURRAY, U. S. Marshal.

DEAR SIR: Having been released on the 17th of this month at your office I write to you this statement of my case. Sir, I signed articles in Havana on the M. S. Perry, a screw propeller, bound for Nassau, New Providence, via Key West. On the 10th of October I signed articles; on the 12th we sailed from Havana and we were captured the same night by the U. S. gun-boat Keystone State. We were thirty-five miles from Sand Key Light-House when we were captured. Since that time I have been in close confinement on board the Keystone State; then in Philadelphia on the guard-ship Princeton and at Fort Lafayette, having been three months and seventeen days in close confinement. Now, sir, I am left adrift here without wages and very little winter clothing, never having been here before. I have been living in the British West Indies and South America the last fifteen years and I feel this weather very severe. Now, sir, I wish to get to a warm climate as soon as possible, to work my passage or any other manner whatever. I believe that a schooner is going to Havana soon. If you would help me to get a passage or inform me if I am not entitled to some remuneration for the ill health and loss of time I have received at the hands of the U. S. authorities.

I remain, your honor's servant,

HUNTER SEMPLE.

P. S.—I hope you will overlook this miserable scrawl as I am not in practice and I feel very nervous.

WASHINGTON, *February 11, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I herewith submit for your consideration the following statement in relation to Capt. James McKay and his son Donald McKay, of Tampa, Fla., the former now in Washington the latter detained in Fort Lafayette:

When I first made the acquaintance of Captain McKay in May last he was shipping cattle from Florida to Havana, Cuba. He was generally regarded as the most enterprising man in that State as well as one of its wealthiest citizens. A few weeks later I met him in Key West. He was there with his propeller the Salvor when Flag-Officer William Mervine arrived to enforce the blockade of the Gulf ports of the Confederate States. By order of Flag-Officer Mervine the Salvor was seized, but subsequently she passed into the charge of the quartermaster's department of the Key West military division and made one or two trips to Tortugas and Fort Pickens. Her boilers being defective the quartermaster declined to make any further use of the Salvor and she was moored in Key West Harbor.

About the 1st of August Captain McKay came from Tampa to Key West with a flag of truce. In a conversation I had with him at that time he expressed disgust at the Confederate rule in Florida and added that he desired to remove his family to some place within the jurisdiction of the United States, dispose of his property at Tampa and vicinity and turn over the Salvor to the Government of the United States. Shortly after this conversation with Captain McKay the Salvor sailed for Havana in charge of Quartermaster Webber for the purpose of bringing back a lot of horses. Mr. Webber returned four or five days afterward in a fishing smack without the horses.

The Salvor remained and subsequently I learned from Mr. Thomas Savage, vice-consul-general at Havana, that Captain McKay sold her to British owners and her name was changed to the M. S. Perry. While sailing under British colors the Perry was captured by the U. S. steamer Keystone State, Capt. G. H. Scott. Captain McKay and his son Donald, a mere boy, were on board. The Salvor was carried to Philadelphia, condemned and sold by the admiralty court as a prize. Captain McKay was detained in Fort Taylor and his son sent to Fort Lafayette. By permission of Maj. B. H. Hill, commandant of Fort Taylor, Captain McKay appears in Washington to ask the liberation of himself and son and that they have permission to return to their home.

Having been driven from my own property by the rebels for furnishing some cargoes of timber to complete the defense of Fort Taylor and residing in Key West from July to December last, where I had an opportunity of observing what was transpiring, I have no hesitation in saying that whatever Captain McKay's offenses may be greater blame attaches to the U. S. officials who governed that post than to him. They were, with the exception of Mr. Charles Howe, collector; T. J. Boynton, U. S. attorney; E. B. Hunt, captain of U. S. Engineers, and Captain Brannan, greater favorites with the rebels than loyal citizens. If instead of Major French such officers as General Banks or Butler or the present commander, Major Hill, had had the direction of military affairs at Key West, nearly all would have returned to their allegiance, whereas three-fourths by the example and conduct of those highest in authority were in open, active hostility to the United States Government.

Captain McKay, stripped of his large property, crushed in spirit, but as he assures me loyal in heart to the Union, certainly deserves to have his case speedily disposed of, and I am sure it will be your pleasure to deal as leniently with him as with others who have experienced your clemency. He is illy able to bear the expense of delay in Washington and I earnestly hope you will give him a prompt hearing. I am known to Hon. C. B. Smith, William McKee Dunn, E. P. Walton and George D. Prentice, esq., who will vouch for my loyalty.

With high regard, your admirer and friend,

L. D. STICKNEY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 14, 1862.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia.

SIR: Will you have the kindness to transmit to this Department the papers in the case of the prize vessel the M. S. Perry, or Salvor, which was captured near Key West and sent to Philadelphia for condemnation?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, February 18, 1862.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant requesting me to transmit to your Department the papers in the case of the steamer Salvor, otherwise called the M. S. Perry, which is under adjudication in this district. It is beyond my power to send the original documents found on board of the vessel at the time of her capture for they are in judicial custody and cannot of course leave the possession of the court. The case is still pending in the prize court. The vessel has been sold under an interlocutory decree as perishable by reason of chargeableness and deterioration resulting from her detention. A final decree of condemnation has not yet been entered.

In view of the difficulty of removing the documents I have directed to be prepared a careful summary of the papers and letters which were found in the vessel when she was captured. This in connection with a copy of the special report of the prize commissioner upon these documents may serve you in lieu of the original papers. The papers of a captured ship become part of the record of the case in the court of prize as soon as they pass into judicial custody. They constitute as you are aware the most important and delicate part of the testimony in the case upon which the vessel is either to be condemned or acquitted, and even after final decree it is doubtful whether the court would permit such papers to pass beyond its control. If such a summary as I speak of together with a copy of the report of the commissioner, which is very full and clear, will be of service I will send them to the Department with pleasure. Perhaps also I may aid you in the examination of any particular point in regard to this vessel which you desire to investigate, and if so I will be happy to look over the papers with reference to it and report to you the result.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. A. COFFEY,
U. S. Attorney.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq.,
U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant informing the Department of the impracticability of transmitting the original papers in the case of the prize vessel Salvor. In reply I have to state that copies will answer the purpose as well.

As you have kindly offered to do so I will thank you to examine the papers and report to the Department whether any proof appears among them to show that James McKay, of Tampa Bay, Fla., was the owner of the vessel or cargo, and also what the evidences are which go to show that the vessel itself was destined for one of the insurrectionary States.

I am, &c.,

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 12, 1862.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq.,
U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia.

SIR: Herewith I transmit for your information a copy of a parole which James McKay, the owner of the prize vessel M. S. Perry, or Salvor, has this day given. It is presumed that his testimony in the cause will be necessary to the proper administration of justice. If you should think so you may detain him on parole of honor for that purpose. It would be advisable it seems to me to take his testimony as soon as convenient. When you shall no longer need him you will please discharge him on his entering into an agreement in writing that he will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States.

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

I, James McKay, of Tampa Bay, Fla., hereby give my parole of honor that I will report myself within three days from the date hereof to George A. Coffey, esq., U. S. district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, and remain in that city until discharged by him.

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, March 14, 1862.

General L. THOMAS, Adjutant-General.

SIR: I have to acknowledge on behalf of the district attorney the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant covering a copy of a parole given by James McKay, the owner of the prize vessel Salvor. Mr. McKay has not yet reported to this office.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
Assistant U. S. Attorney.

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1862.

Hon. A. LINCOLN, President.

DEAR SIR: At the interview I had with you last week about affairs in Florida I spoke of Capt. James McKay, a state prisoner now in Washington on his parole. His case is one of extreme hardship and in point of severe penalty beyond the usual range of such cases. I knew him intimately in Florida. He was universally regarded as one of the wealthiest and most enterprising citizens of that State. The difficulty in which he became involved by attempting as alleged to run the blockade had its origin in the dubious loyalty and reprehensible policy of high civil and military officers of the United States Government, which is set forth in Captain McKay's written statement to the Secretary of State.

I am willing to pledge myself for Captain McKay's future good conduct and loyalty to your Administration if he be permitted to return to Florida. He has lost within a few months upward of $70,000 by the rebellion, and is heartily sick of Jeff. Davis' rule. If permitted to return to Florida via Key West he will co-operate with the Union forces, and from his extensive acquaintance I feel sure his services would be extremely valuable to the Government. Captain McKay owns many thousand head of beef-cattle in Florida which he will furnish to the Gulf Squadron and troops stationed in that region. I respectfully ask then that upon his taking the oath of allegiance, which he will cheerfully do, he be discharged from custody.

With high regard, your friend,

L. D. STICKNEY.

MARCH 20, 1862.

SECRETARY OF STATE:

Please read this and speak with me about [it] at our next interview.

A. LINCOLN.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington:

I, James McKay, of Tampa, Fla., do solemnly swear on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God without any mental reservation that I will at any and at all times hereafter and under all circumstances yield a hearty and willing support to the Constitution of the United States and to the Government thereof; that I will not either directly or indirectly take up arms against said Government nor aid those now in arms against it; that I will neither enter any of the States now in insurrection against the authority of the Federal Government nor hold any correspondence whatsoever with them or any persons in them during the present rebellion without permission from the Secretary of State; also that I will do no act hostile or injurious to the Union of the States; that I will give no aid, comfort or assistance to the enemies of the Government (either domestic or foreign); that I will defend the flag of the United States and the armies fighting under it from insult and injury if in my power so to do; and that I will in all things deport myself as a good and loyal citizen of the United States.

JAMES McKAY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of March, 1862.

THOMAS C. DONN,
Justice of the Peace.

KEY WEST, FLA., April 24, 1862.

General L. THOMAS.

DEAR SIR: I arrived here on the 21st instant per steamer Rhode Island and have reported myself to General Brannan. I regret exceedingly to have to state that General Brannan informs me that Captain Woodhull, of the U. S. steamer Connecticut, which left here for New York the day before my arrival here, informed him that on Captain Woodhull's way here he was informed by the blockading vessel at Tampa that I wrote Mrs. McKay from Washington that General Brannan was to be at Tampa with a large force about the 1st of April and for notice to be given to the authorities there to prepare themselves, which has occasioned a force of some 600 or 700 men there, it is said. It is well known that I could not write to Tampa from Washington but by Fortress Monroe to be examined by the commanding officer there. This base slander on me is really hard but I trust to live to see justice done me. Whenever I had an opportunity from here my earnest desire was to request my people to desist from their wicked acts and to cease taking the property of the citizens of this place and more particularly not to destroy it for as sure as the sun rose they would suffer for their acts. This statement is due to you, and from your kindness and confidence in me I regret that such reports should exist, but I cannot help it.

I hope should such report arrive at your Department or elsewhere that the same will be not credited. All I desire is to get home as I am satisfied that I would be of some service in advising the people, but General Brannan thinks that it is more than my life is worth to go and that he with a force is soon going over and that I can go with him, although I am satisfied that it would be better for me to go before he did. You may rest assured of everything in my power being done for the restoration of the Union.

With kind regards, remembering me to Captain Vincent, very respectfully, &c.,

JAMES MCKAY.

Case of John G. Shaver.

John G. Shaver was arrested by W. H. Barse, Government agent in Detroit, October 19, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State and thence transferred to Fort Warren. He was charged with carrying contraband letters and small-arms to the States in insurrection under cover of his position as traveling agent of the Grand Trunk Railroad. An order was issued from the Department of State dated December 30, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Shaver on his engaging upon oath neither to enter nor correspond with the insurrectionary States nor do any act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection, saving his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain, he claiming to be a British subject. He was accordingly released January 6, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DETROIT, October 19, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

I arrested John G. Shaver; treason; carrying letters and small-arms from Quebec to Montreal, South, and found sufficient evidence on his person to sustain the charge, and by advice of Alfred Russell, U. S. attorney, have sent him forward to Fort Lafayette, N. Y. Dare not keep him here for fear of trouble (interested friends), and would ask you to send order for his commitment to George R. Barse, New York, care John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police.

W. H. BARSE.

SIR: Let John G. Shaver, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released, on engaging on his honor that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIR: Your telegram of the 28th instant relative to the case of J. G. Shaffer (or Shaver) has been received. In reply I have to request that as Shaver claims to be a British subject you will forward to me all the proofs in the case as soon as you conveniently can.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 29, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

DEAR SIR: I was arrested at Detroit, Mich., by a deputy U. S. marshal two weeks since. I am a Canadian and a loyal British subject, the grandson of a W. E. loyalist; have never lived out of Canada; am an agent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company; was arrested while in the discharge of my duties. As an officer of the company I have written full particulars to the British consul, New York City, but fear my letters have not been permitted to reach him. I was offered my discharge on condition that I would take the oath of allegiance to the United States Government. I of course refused to do so and am still a prisoner without the hope of release unless through the intercession of the Government to which I belong. I have a family in Canada entirely depending upon me and must suffer if I am much longer detained from my duties at home. I beg your lordship will give my case your earliest attention. I am well known to most of the members of our Canadian Parliament and ministry. Among my intimate friends and acquaintances I may mention the Hon. John Ross, Toronto, Canada West; George Benjamin, member Provisional Parliament; Lewis Walbridge, member Provisional Parliament, both of Belleville, Canada West, where my family now resides and have for the last fifteen years.

I have, &c.,

J. G. SHAVER.

FORT WARREN, Boston, November 8, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

I am still a prisoner in Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. Why is this, being a British subject and guilty of no crime against this Government?

J. G. SHAVER.

WASHINGTON, November 9, 1861.

Mr. SHAVER.

SIR: I received the day before yesterday through the State Department a letter from you dated the 29th of October last, and yesterday in the evening I received a telegram from you dated yesterday. I have lost no time in taking such steps as I have thought most likely to be of use to you, and I will inform you as soon as possible of the result.

Memorandum of Lord Lyons concerning John G. Shaver.

States that he was arrested at Detroit, Mich.; is a British subject; has never lived out of Canada; is an agent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company; was offered his release if he would take an oath of allegiance to the United States which being a British subject he was of course unable to do; has a family in Canada entirely dependent on him; is well known to members of Parliament in Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 11, 1861.

Memorandum in reply to that of Lord Lyons of the 9th instant in regard to political prisoners alleged to be British subjects.

John G. Shaver, imprisoned at Fort Warren, Boston.—Arrested at Detroit, Mich. Is agent of the Grand Trunk Railway. The U. S. consul-general, Joshua R. Giddings, says he has been engaged in conveying revolvers and other articles contraband to the insurrectionary States and selling them. Mr. Barse, our agent at Detroit, says that the agents of the American Express Company say Shaver has boasted to them that he has carried dispatches, letters and contraband goods to the insurgents. Mr. Albert G. Davis, our agent, says Shaver confessed to him that he was engaged in this business. John C. Miller, of Chicago, has important information. The case is now under consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 11, 1861.

JOSHUA R. GIDDINGS, U. S. Consul-General, Montreal.

It is insisted that J. G. Shaver is innocent of any offense against the Government, and unless you furnish me with the proofs I shall be obliged to release him. Reply by telegraph.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, November 12, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have already brought to your notice the case of Mr. John G. Shaver, a British subject who was arrested at Detroit, Michigan, and who is now imprisoned in Fort Warren in Boston Harbor. The extract which I now have the honor to inclose from a dispatch from Mr. Archibald, Her Majesty's consul at New York, will make you acquainted with further details. Concerning this case I beg to direct your attention particularly to the detention of the letters addressed by Mr. Shaver to Mr. Archibald:

I have, &c.,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, November 9, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acquaint your lordship that on the 21st of October when I last visited Fort Lafayette I received there from Mr. J. G. Shaver, a British subject imprisoned that day, the inclosed note* begging permission to see me before I left the fort, to which the lieutenant of the fort not being able to accede I wrote a note there to Mr. Shaver desiring him to write to me informing me fully of the cause of his imprisonment. I received no communication from him down to the time of the transfer of the prisoners to Fort Warren, Boston, when noticing that his name was not included in the list of prisoners I supposed he had been liberated.

This morning to my surprise I received the inclosed envelope* from the State Department containing therein the letter addressed to me by Mr. Shaver on the 21st of October and also a letter* from him dated the 28th of October, referring to his former letter and informing me that he had been offered his liberty on condition of taking the oath of allegiance to the United States which he naturally declined to do, and urging me to act at once in the matter of obtaining his release. Since the receipt of the last-mentioned letters a gentleman called upon me and informed me that Mr. Shaver is still confined at Fort Warren, although it is probable an order for his release has been missent to some quarter. I beg your lordship will have the goodness to make inquiry as to the hindrance to Mr. Shaver's discharge and take such steps in the matter as your lordship may think fit.

* Not found.

It appears to me proper that some explanation should be given of the cause of the detention at the State Department of the letters addressed by Mr. Shaver to me. If the prisoner was entitled to claim my protection such hindrance should not have been opposed to his freely communicating with me. I submit, however, to your lordship's judgment the expediency of asking for any such explanation. * * *

ARCHIBALD,
British Consul.

MONTREAL, November 12, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD:

Respectable men here regard Shaver as a spy dealing with secessionists and desire to have him retained. I have no doubt whatever of his guilt, but to obtain the proof would require judicial power and much labor.

J. R. GIDDINGS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 13, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have instituted an inquiry into the case of John G. Shaver, or Shaffer, as the same person is sometimes called, and I learn upon satisfactory and even conclusive evidence that he has been engaged in carrying revolvers and other articles contraband of war to the insurgents and at the same time acting as a spy in their behalf. At present therefore he cannot be released. * * *

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 13, 1861.

JOHN C. MILLER, Esq., Chicago, Ill.

SIR: * * * Will you please transmit to this Department as soon as you conveniently can any evidence you may have in the case of John G. Shaver?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 14, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have your lordship's note of November 12 concerning the case of John G. Shaver. Under the belief that Mr. Shaver was a citizen of the United States I at one time directed that he should be released on taking an oath of allegiance to the United States for the reason that the police authorities who had induced his arrest had not then shown any sufficient cause for it. Mr. Shaver declined to take the oath, but before this fact became known to me information had been received of the grounds of his arrest, upon considering which I decided that his release at present would not be compatible with the public safety.

Insomuch as Mr. Archibald thinks that the delay of Mr. Shaver's letter to him in this Department requires explanation I regret that I am unable to give any other than the simple one that the delay resulted so far as I know from a pressure of business in this Department. I regret that the delay was unavoidable.

Having made Mr. Shaver's case the subject in part of a communication to your lordship yesterday I am not aware that I have anything to say upon it now beyond this reply to your note which is before me.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, November 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of a letter addressed to the provincial secretary of Canada by Mr. G. Benjamin, member of the Canadian Parliament. It has been sent to me by Viscount Monck, the administrator of the government of the Province. I trust that the testimony it gives in favor of Mr. John G. Shaver will receive due consideration.

QUEBEC, November 9, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c., Washington, D. C.

MY LORD: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from Mr. J. G. Shaver, a British subject at present confined at Boston as a prisoner of war, together with the copy of a letter from Mr. George Benjamin, member Provisional Parliament for the county of Hastings, Canada West, containing information respecting Mr. Shaver. I have to request your lordship to take steps for obtaining the immediate release of Mr. Shaver, who appears to be unjustly imprisoned.

I have, &c.,

MONCK.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

BELLEVILLE, November 5, 1861.

Mr. ALLEYN.

SIR: I beg to inclose herewith a letter received by me from Mr. John G. Shaver, now confined in Fort Warren, Boston, Mass. Mr. Shaver is a resident of Belleville, known to every inhabitant as a loyal man. He has for some years past been engaged as agent for several lines of railway as well in the United States as Canada, which will account for his traveling in the United States in the present troubled times. Mr. Shaver has always maintained an excellent character, and being a man of sound judgment and experience I should not think he would be likely to engage in any matter that would get him into trouble. I observe by his letter that his liberty is offered to him upon condition that he swears allegiance to the United States which as a British subject he refuses to do. It is but just to presume that if there were grounds for his arrest and detaining him he would not be offered his liberty upon any conditions.

Will you please submit this together with the inclosed letter from Mr. Shaver to his excellency, the administrator, who I have no doubt will take the earliest opportunity of bringing the matter under the notice of Lord Lyons at Washington, in order that Mr. Shaver may be released with as little delay as possible?

I have, &c.,

G. BENJAMIN,
Member of Parliament for North Hastings.

[Sub-inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., October 29, 1861.

MR. BENJAMIN.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been arrested and am held prisoner of war. Have been offered my release by taking the oath of allegiance to this Government which as a British subject you know I could not do. Will you make the proper application to Lord Lyons for my release? I am unjustly accused of having carried letters to the Southern Confederacy. I have never done so. We are removed to-day to Fort Warren, Boston. You will oblige me by moving in this matter at once.

I have, &c.,

J. G. SHAVER.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

WASHINGTON, November 14, 1861.

Viscount MONCK.

MY LORD: I have this morning had the honor to receive your excellency's dispatch of the 9th instant respecting the imprisonment of Mr. John G. Shaver. I had previously received information of Mr. Shaver's arrest and used my best endeavors to obtain his release. The inclosed extract* from a note which I received last evening from Mr. Seward, Secretary of State of the United States, will show your excellency that my efforts have not been attended with success. I will now forward to Mr. Seward a copy of the letter from Mr. Benjamin which accompanies your dispatch, and express my hope that the testimony which it contains in Mr. Shaver's favor may receive due consideration.

Your excellency's attention has perhaps been drawn to a correspondence between Mr. Seward and me on the subject of the arrests of British subjects which was published by him in the New York papers about a month ago. I do myself the honor to transmit to you herewith a copy of it. You will perceive that the British and American Governments are at issue on the subject, and that the American Government maintains that it is in the present state of the country justified in arresting and imprisoning both citizens and foreigners without legal process.

While this question remains in its present state I can do no more than use to the best of my ability for the purpose of procuring the release of individual British subjects the influence with the Government of the United States which I derive from my position here. In doing this I am subject to not a little embarrassment. On the one hand it is necessary for the benefit of the individuals that the reasons which I adduce for their being released should be such as the Government of the United States will listen to. I am on the other hand bound to make it apparent that my adducing reasons of such a character in individual cases does not imply an abandonment of the position taken by Her Majesty's Government on the general question or any acquiescence in the system of arresting Her Majesty's subjects without legal process.

I have, &c.,

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: With reference to the notes which you did me the honor to write to me on the 14th and 15th of last month I beg to submit to your consideration a copy of a dispatch which I have received from Her Majesty's consul at Boston relative to an interview which he has had with Mr. John G. Shaver in Fort Warren. I trust that it may lead you to believe that the release of Mr. Shaver may now be granted without any danger to the public safety.

I have, &c.,

[Inclosure.]

BOSTON, December 9, 1861.

Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to report that I yesterday went to Fort Warren for the purpose of seeing Mr. J. G. Shaver whose case is already known to your lordship. I was courteously received by the commander of the fort, Colonel Dimick, who gave me entire facility for the interview with his prisoner, thus enabling me to carry out the object of my visit, viz, to afford Mr. Shaver an opportunity of more confidentially stating his case than might be practicable by letter.

Mr. Shaver denies entirely having been guilty of affording aid or assistance to the rebellion and pleads entire ignorance of the nature of the charges against him. He admits that his sympathies were not with the North but that in his position as traveling agent for the Grand Trunk Railroad he was very careful in his conversation and acts. He states that his detention has ruined his business and caused great distress to his wife and family as they are entirely dependent on his exertions for their support and maintenance.

He is willing to take the oath of neutrality (if any such exists) and to engage to quit and not to return to the United States during the continuance of this war, and if such an arrangement be accepted by the authorities at Washington it would seem to be the simplest solution of the case.

I have, &c.,

FRANCIS LOUSADA.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 12, 1861.

Colonel DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: I will thank you to inform Mr. John G. Shaver that the Government of the United States cannot accept his assurances to Lord Lyons that in his position of traveling agent of the Grand Trunk Railway he was very careful in his conversation and acts. On the contrary it has satisfactory evidence that he was engaged in affording aid and comfort to insurrectionists both by his conversation and by his acts; that he willingly suffered himself to be made a medium of communication between them and their agents in Canada and Europe, and that he conveyed to them revolvers and other articles contraband of war and in violation of the law of the United States.

Under these circumstances it cannot accept his parole of honor nor his oath unsupported by other guarantees. But if, in addition to engaging upon oath that he will not enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence with its enemies in or out of the States, and that he will do nothing hostile or injurious to the Government during the present hostilities, he will also procure the assurance of any good and responsible person that he will keep and not violate these obligations he will be discharged.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 11th instant together with the copy of the dispatch from Her Britannic Majesty's consul at Boston relative to John G. In reply I have the honor to inform you that Colonel Dimick has been authorized to discharge Shaver from custody upon his complying with conditions deemed indispensable under the circumstances.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul, Boston, Mass.

SIR: I communicated to the Secretary of State of the United States a copy of your dispatch of the 9th instant reporting the result of your interview with Mr. John G. Shaver in Fort Warren. I have received in reply a note from the Secretary of State informing me that "Colonel Dimick has been authorized to discharge Shaver from custody upon his complying with conditions deemed indispensable under the circumstances." I have to request you to inform me whether Mr. Shaver has in fact been discharged and what conditions have been proposed to him or complied with by him.

MY LORD: * * * I have the honor to transmit to your lordship a copy of a letter which I have received from Mr. J. G. Shaver and from which it appears that he has felt it to be his duty to refuse compliance with the conditions upon which his release from Fort Warren is offered to him. I inclose also a copy of a note in which I have asked Mr. Seward to let me know exactly what those conditions are.

I have, &c.,

[Inclosure No. 1.]

MY LORD: I received your lordship's of the 5th instant and on the following Sunday had an interview with the British consul at Boston, with whom I had a conversation; since when I have received no communication on the subject of my business. Yesterday I was called to the office of Colonel Dimick, the commander of this place, when I was shown a paper, a copy of which I was refused and the general contents of which therefore I can only recount.

This paper recapitulated a number of charges against me most of them indefinite and all of which I solemnly declare to be untrue. By this paper I was offered my release upon taking an oath which imposed restrictions upon my acts inconsistent with my rights as a freeman and incompatible with my duty as a British subject, and adding insult to injuries already sustained requiring me to get the guarantee of some responsible person that I would keep the oath thus attempted to be imposed, and as must be evident to your lordship this requisition is not only insulting in itself but impracticable in the condition of duress under which I am placed. It was also doubtful to me whether taking this oath might not be construed as a bar to the claim against the United States for damages for the illegal imprisonment and loss which I have sustained.

I have therefore been compelled to decline taking this oath although my health is impaired by imprisonment and anxiety, knowing my family to be now suffering at home for the want of my exertions upon which it depends for support. I submit the matter to your lordship and respectfully request positive assurances as to the course I had better pursue. If your lordship direct me to take this oath to be released from an imprisonment which has become so distressing I may do so. If, however (as I believe your lordship will do), [you] advise me to refuse to take it, I must again urge your lordship to take such steps that my case may speedily be brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government upon which I can rely for that protection which British princes have extended to British subjects in every age and in every clime. Will your lordship do me the favor to reply?

I am, &c.,

J. G. SHAVER.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

WASHINGTON, December 20, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: In your note of the 12th instant you were so good as to inform me that orders had been given for the release of Mr. J. G. Shaver from Fort Warren upon his complying with conditions deemed indispensable under the circumstances. I have to-day received under a cover from the State Department a letter from Mr. Shaver, in which he states that as a condition on which his liberation was to be granted he was tendered an oath which (in his opinion) imposed restrictions upon his acts inconsistent with his rights as a freeman and incompatible with his duty as a British subject. He adds that he was required to obtain the guarantee of some responsible person for his keeping the oath thus tendered to him. Under these circumstances he has felt it to be his duty to decline to take the oath although his health is impaired by his imprisonment and his family which depends upon his exertions for support is suffering at home.

He has requested me to give him my advice. He states, however, that he is unable to acquaint me with the precise terms of the oath as he has been refused a copy of it. It is of course impossible for me to recommend Mr. Shaver to comply with conditions unless I know exactly what those conditions are. I trust therefore that taking all the circumstances into consideration you will deem it right to give me such information as may enable me to determine what advice I ought to give to this British subject.

I have, &c.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 23, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.:

MY LORD: I have received your note of the 20th instant relative to the case of John G. Shaver. My impression is that that person has not made entirely correct representations to you in regard to the conditions required for his release. Those conditions are fully set forth in the letter of this Department* to Colonel Dimick of the 12th instant, a copy of which is inclosed and which seems to be as moderate as a fair consideration of the circumstances would warrant.

I am, your very obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: I inclose copy of a letter* addressed on the 12th ultimo by Mr. Seward, the Secretary of State, to Colonel Dimick, commandant of Fort Warren. You will find stated in it the terms of the oath tendered to Mr. Shaver. Mr. Seward has to-day given directions that a clause be added to the oath, "saving all allegiance due by Mr. Shaver to the Crown of Great Britain." This clause will remove the scruples which Mr. Shaver felt on the ground of the oath's being inconsistent with his allegiance to the Queen.

Mr. Shaver must determine for himself whether or no he chooses to contract the engagements prescribed by the oath as modified by the clause. I do not express any opinion either on the lawfulness of Mr. Shaver's imprisonment or on the justifiableness of the exaction by the United States Government of such an oath as a condition of his release. But as the modified oath does not bind Mr. Shaver to any engagement wrong in itself I cannot assume the responsibility of advising him to refuse to take it. I do not feel so confident of being able to procure his release on any other terms as to be willing to interfere to prevent his accepting those offered to him.

* Omitted here, but see p. 989.

I have to request you to speak to Mr. Shaver in the sense of this dispatch and to inform me of the decision he comes to. With regard to the assurance of a responsible person that Mr. Shaver will abide by the engagement Mr. Seward informs me that no more will be required than a statement by some known person of respectability that to the best of his belief Mr. Shaver will do so. Of course your own assurance to this effect if you felt satisfied in giving it would be all that could be desired.

I am, &c.,

LYONS.

BOSTON, January 7, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c., Washington, D. C.

MY LORD: I have the honor to report that Mr. Shaver was released from Fort Warren yesterday afternoon and left at 5 p. m. for Canada. Inclosed is a copy of the engagement he signed with the U. S. authorities. He called to thank me for my exertions in his behalf and expressed a grateful sense of your lordship's protection.

I have, &c.,

FRANCIS LOUSADA.

[Inclosure.]

I, J. G. Shaver, prisoner in confinement at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, do solemnly swear that I will neither enter into any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatsoever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection, saving my allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain, with which nothing in the above obligations is to be understood to conflict.

J. G. SHAVER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 6th day of January, 1862.

J. DIMICK,

Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

WASHINGTON, January 9, 1862. (Received 23d.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * I have the honor to transmit* to your lordship copies of further correspondence relative to the oath required of Mr. Shaver as a condition of his release from Fort Warren. Mr. Shaver has taken the oath with the addition of a clause saving his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain and has in consequence been set free. How far it may be right for a Government to exact such an oath from a foreigner whom it has imprisoned without legal process I do not pretend to determine; but as the oath with the addition of the saving clause did not appear to me to impose any obligations wrong per se I felt it to be my duty to leave it to Mr. Shaver to decide for himself whether he would contract those obligations or not. I should not have thought myself justified in interfering to prevent his doing so unless I had had reason to hope that I could procure his discharge on other terms.

I have, &c.,

WASHINGTON, April 26, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: With reference to the correspondence which passed between yourself and me in the months of November and December last respecting the imprisonment of Mr. John G. Shaver I have the honor to inform you that Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration an application from that gentleman for their assistance to obtain from the Government of the United States compensation on account of his arrest and imprisonment and of the losses in business to which he was thereby subjected.

According to Mr. Shaver's statement although he was in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada his headquarters were at Louisville in Kentucky. It would appear, however, from the letter of Mr. Benjamin, a member of the Canadian house of assembly, of which I had the honor to send you a copy on the 14th of last November, that Mr. Shaver's proper residence is at Belleville in Canada. Her Majesty's Government assume therefore that although his employment frequently required his presence in the United States he was not when arrested in the month of October last domiciled in the United States but in Canada.

Her Majesty's Government must further assume although this does not expressly appear from the papers before them that no ordinary legal remedy is practically open to Mr. Shaver. It seems that Mr. Shaver was arrested on arriving from Canada at Detroit in the State of Michigan, on the northern frontier of the United States, a place far removed from the seat either of war or of any internal disturbance and at which the ordinary course of law and criminal jurisdiction was not interrupted or suspended. Mr. Shaver was perfectly well known and he was arrested as he affirms by orders from you apparently conveyed by telegraph. No charge, however, was made against him nor was any reason assigned for his arrest, but he was searched and thereupon confined as he states first "in a dungeon among negroes and malefactors of the vilest kind" and afterward in a dark and unventilated room with forty-eight other prisoners in Fort Lafayette. Mr. Shaver affirms that on arriving at New York he was taken before Mr. Kennedy of the police department who on going into his case said that "his arrest was an error" and that there was "no charge against him." He was then transferred to Fort Warren where he was confined until the 6th of January last and he was then released only on taking an oath that he would not enter any of the so-called Confederate States or hold any correspondence with persons residing therein without permission of the United States Secretary of State and that he would not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection, saving his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain.

Her Majesty's Government observe that in the letter which you did me the honor to address to me on the 14th of November last you stated that at the time of the arrest you believed that Mr. Shaver was a citizen of the United States. In the same note you stated also that you had at first directed Mr. Shaver's release upon his taking the oath of allegiance to the United States "for the reason that the police authorities who had induced his arrest had not then shown any sufficient cause for it;" that Mr. Shaver declined to take this oath but that before that fact became known to you information had been received of the grounds of his arrest, upon considering which you decided that his release at present would not be compatible with the public safety.

Her Majesty's Government perceive that those grounds are stated in the letter to Colonel Dimick, of which a copy was inclosed in the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 23d of December last. In that letter it is said that the Government of the United States has satisfactory evidence that he (Mr. Shaver) was engaged in affording aid and comfort to the insurrectionists both by his conversation and by his acts; that he willingly suffered himself to be made a medium of communication between them and their agents in Canada and Europe and that he conveyed to them revolvers and other articles contraband of war and in violation of the law of the United States.

This is the only statement which Her Majesty's Government find in the papers before them of the cause of the treatment to which Mr. Shaver was subjected, while the first and only occasion upon which Mr. Shaver appears to have been himself informed of the precise nature of the charges against him would seem to have been at Fort Warren in December last when Colonel Dimick showed him a paper, a copy of which was refused him, but which he says recapitulated a number of charges against him most of them indefinite and all of which he solemnly declares to be untrue. Indeed Mr. Shaver has from the first denied that there was any truth in the charges made against him or the slightest foundation for them.

Considering that Mr. Shaver has lost his employment and that he has suffered severely from the treatment he received Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that a prima facie case has been made out for compensation, and they have accordingly directed me to inquire what proof exists of the asserted complicity of Mr. Shaver with the so-called Confederates. If no sufficient proof exists and if the charges be admitted to be unfounded Her Majesty's Government will feel bound to ask for a reasonable compensation in behalf of Mr. Shaver.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have received your note of the 26th instant relative to the case of John G. Shaver and have laid it before the President who has directed me to make such an inquiry into the representations which it contains as may lead to an ascertainment of the truth. It will then be my duty to address you more at large upon the subject.

I avail myself of the occasion to offer to you a renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 28, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: In your note of the 26th instant relative to the case of John G. Shaver there is the following passage: "He was finally searched and thereupon confined," as he states, "first in a dungeon among negroes and malefactors of the vilest kind," and afterward in a dark and unventilated room with forty-eight other prisoners in Fort Lafayette.

As there is nothing in this Department confirmatory of these statements I will thank you for a copy of or an extract from and a description of the document in which they are contained.

I am, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 28, 1862.

WILLIAM H. BARSE, Esq., Detroit, Mich.

SIR: It has been represented to this Department that Mr. John G. Shaver who was arrested by you in the month of October last was not domiciled in the United States but was a Canadian subject and habitually a resident of Canada. I will thank you to transmit to this Department as soon as may be practicable any information in the form of affidavits which you may have or can command tending to contradict the representations adverted to.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your unofficial note of yesterday's date relative to the case of Mr. John G. Shaver. I hasten to transmit to you a copy of a letter from Mr. Shaver to Earl Russell from which the passage to which you refer in my note of the 26th instant was taken. You will not fail to observe that the passage was given in my note as a statement made by Mr. Shaver.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

BELLEVILLE, [CANADA], February 3, 1862.

Earl RUSSELL, &c.

MY LORD: The subject of my arrest and imprisonment by the Government of the United States has already been brought under the notice of Her Majesty's Government. I now beg leave to bring the whole facts under your notice with the view of claiming redress and indemnity for the wrongs done to me.

I am a native of Canada, consequently a born subject of Her Majesty, and as such I seek redress at the hands of the Imperial Government for wrongs and injuries done me by a foreign power.

On a late occasion after the difficulties between the two sections of the United States had broken out I was compelled to enter the United States to attend to my business. In doing so I felt perfectly safe as I traveled as a British subject and as one who had not done anything to induce him to hesitate before he entered a country with which his own was at peace. That my occupation was that of a railroad agent, having for years had the agencies of several railway and steam-boat companies of the United States and Canada, but at the period of the insult offered me and wrong inflicted I was agent for the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. For years past I have been in the habit of traveling in the United States attending to my business and am almost as well acquainted there as in Canada. I was not a stranger but it was known and especially to those who were the instruments of inflicting the injuries whereof I complain that I am a British subject.

On the 15th of October, 1861, I started from Montreal for the purpose of closing up the business of the season and for making arrangements for the spring business of the company whose agent I then was, viz, southwestern passenger agent for the Grand Trunk Railway, my headquarters being at Louisville, Ky. I was arrested in Detroit while on the railway cars, on an order from Mr. Secretary Seward, but I was not then informed of the charge against me and it was not until after I had been a prisoner for some time that I was made acquainted with its nature, viz, conveying arms and carrying dispatches to the Confederate States and authorities. All I was told at the time was that the authorities had been telegraphed to effect my arrest. Let me here state to your lordship that there is not and was not the slightest foundation for the charge, and as soon as I was acquainted with the alleged grounds of my apprehension I demanded through Lord Lyons the British ambassador at Washington my trial.

On my arrest in Detroit I was very roughly handled. I was stripped and even my boots cut open in search of dispatches and my baggage was searched after the same fashion. No arms, no dispatches—nothing that could lead to the supposition that I was engaged as alleged was found either on my person or with my baggage. Notwithstanding I was thrust into a dungeon among a number of negroes and malefactors of the vilest kind until Secretary Seward's orders could be obtained, but as no evidence was found against me I was—instead of ordering my discharge—ordered to close confinement in Fort Lafayette.

After I had been in this fort for a few days an order was received from Mr. Secretary Seward that I was to be discharged upon taking the oath of allegiance to the United States which I refused to do. I answered I was a British subject, born in Canada of parents who were British subjects and who had defended the soil of Canada from the invasion of the Republic of the United States; that I was the descendant of a W. E. loyalist, and that intolerable and offensive as was my confinement I would submit to it forever before I would bear allegiance to the United States.

In the course of correspondence afterward it was found out or at least Mr. Seward assigned it as a reason to Lord Lyons that he was under the impression that I was an American or the order would not have been made; but still I was not discharged, and now it was that Mr. Seward announced that the American Government had strong proof against me for conveying fire arms and dispatches for the people of the seceded States and therefore I could not be then discharged. Upon this being communicated to me by my friends in Canada I at once repudiated the charge and demanded to be brought to trial without delay. I wanted no time for preparation; I was innocent; I was ready for my trial. But still no trial was given me.

On arriving at the city of New York I was taken before Mr. Kennedy, of the police department, who on going into my case said my arrest was an error and as there was no charge against me I should receive my discharge in a few days.

In the meantime, however, I was conveyed to Fort Lafayette and imprisoned in a dark, unventilated room with forty-eight other prisoners. I will not detail the condition of this chamber. The foulness and filthiness cannot be described, and although escape from the island in which the fort is situated is impossible, the prisoners were not permitted to breathe the fresh air but for a short time daily. I beg to remark that my examination before Mr. Kennedy preceded the order from Mr. Secretary Seward for my discharge upon taking the oath of allegiance to the United States.

When typhoid fever broke out in Lafayette and the prisoners were dying so rapidly as to arouse public attention and produce an outcry of indignation I was removed to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, and it was now that an active correspondence was carried on with the Canadian Government and my friends to obtain my discharge. They insisted that either I should be discharged or at once brought to trial. I was now allowed to correspond with Lord Lyons and to have interviews with the British consul, but all my communications to Lord Lyons were opened after they left me and all his replies to me, although bearing his signature on the envelope and the seal of the legation, were opened before delivery.

At last on the 6th of January, 1862, after a [illegible] confinement of nearly three months I was permitted to leave my prison upon certain conditions which your lordship will find attached* to this my humble representation, as well as copies* of the correspondence which passed between the Governor-General of British America and Lord Lyons and my friends who interceded for my release.

My Lord, the consequence of this most unjustifiable arrest has been to me a great source of trouble, loss, grief and injury. In consequence of it I have lost the lucrative position I held, and in consequence of my arrest I shall not be able to resume the business in which I was formerly engaged, as it points me out to my employers as a man intermeddling with the dangerous affairs of the revolutionary States when in fact the charge is entirely without foundation. I have also suffered in a very serious manner from the fact that my arrest broke up an engagement which would have proved a most lucrative undertaking for the winter season, a period during which my time as railway agent is but little occupied. To which the injury inflicted by the arrest, the wound to a man's feelings, the grief, trouble and sorrow of one's family and my long and protracted detention as a prisoner when it was well known by the U. S. authorities there were no charges against me and that I was only held in durance to cover the blunders of the officials of the United States Government and the false reports of their spies prowling about the Province of Canada, induced me to seek for reparation and redress and to seek the interposition of the Imperial Government to enable me to recover such damages as the wrongs committed against me and the sufferings inflicted and insults offered to me will entitle me to recover [illegible].

I therefore most respectfully solicit the interference and support of Her Majesty's Government in urging my demand for reparation and redress and ask your lordship to give such early instructions to Her Majesty's ambassador at Washington as will insure a speedy and satisfactory settlement of the demand. As a British subject I feel that there can be no necessity for offering any apology for bringing the matter under the notice of your lordship; that the rights and liberties of Her Majesty's subjects are too dear in the estimation of both our gracious Queen and her imperial advisers to allow them to be trifled with.

* Omitted here; see ante.

I beg permission further to add that the prompt and unceasing attention of their excellencies the Governor-General of Canada and the British ambassador at Washington on my behalf entitles them to my heartfelt and warmest thanks. I feel they did all for me they could have done had my position been equally exalted with their own.

I have, &c.,

JOHN G. SHAVER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 30, 1862.

WILLIAM H. BARSE, Esq., Detroit, Mich.

SIR: I inclose an extract* from a memorial of John G. Shaver to Earl Russell in which he makes representations in regard to his treatment when arrested at Detroit, the truth of which or the reverse you will please to report upon at your earliest convenience.

I am, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 30, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I had the honor on the 28th ultimo to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 26th ultimo relating to the case of Mr. John G. Shaver, and I have now the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the said Shaver's letter to Lord Russell, dated February 3, 1862, which was communicated in your note of April 29.

Having made such inquiries as seemed necessary to an ascertainment of the truth so far as opportunity has been afforded I now submit the following observations touching the case as presented in Shaver's letter to Lord Russell and in your note founded thereon for your consideration:

Mr. Shaver's allegation that he is a British subject has hitherto been suffered to pass without inquiry, but information of a contrary tenor has been received which although not conclusive, as it only rests on his own word, is yet entitled to higher credibility than his present assertion inasmuch as no motive then existed for misrepresentation. It is reported to me that he has heretofore professed at Belleville where he pretends to reside that he was a native and citizen of the United States.

Although under the other proof existing in the case it may be wholly unimportant where he was born or to what nationality his allegiance is due, yet it is proper to say that the weight of his own declarations preponderating in favor of his being a citizen of the United States, he cannot be permitted to avail himself of a supposititious title to British protection in the prosecution of a claim against the United States without satisfactory affirmative proof that he is entitled to such protection.

In regard to his actual domicile at the time of his arrest there seems to be an equal want of certainty that it was established within British territory or in any way entitled him to British protection. It is true that Mr. Benjamin states without qualification that he is a resident of Belleville. Mr. R. W. Patterson, a resident of Belleville, on the other hand states that he has known him about five years and that he made Toronto his home four years of the time; that during that period he was not aware that he had a family, but finds that he has a wife in that place, but that he has been informed by some of the best citizens that he has not spent over one month in each year with his wife. It is shown by a statement of the treasurer of the Saint Louis, Alton and Chicago Railroad Company, of the State of Illinois, that he was employed by that company in September, October and November, 1860, and that his place of abode was nominally either at Buffalo or Toronto, his letters being always addressed to the former point. It moreover appears by his own statement as given in your note as well as by all other testimony that in 1861 and at the time of his arrest "his headquarters were at Louisville in Kentucky."

These being the facts it would seem that in assuming that Mr. Shaver when arrested was not domiciled in the United States but in Canada, as stated in your note, Her Majesty's Government have committed the error of reversing the rule believed to be universal in its application that the domicile of the wife depends upon and follows that of the husband, and making the domicile of this Shaver depend upon and follow that of his wife, whom he indeed occasionally visits but with whom he has not for years resided.

It is not, however, thought necessary to reduce the question of his domicile to any greater certainty. It is manifest that traveling and being within the limits of the United States in the pursuit of a business occupation he was bound even if a subject of a foreign government "not to content himself with barely respecting the laws of the country; he ought to assist it upon occasion and contribute to its defense as far as is consistent with his duty as a citizen of another State." But regardless of this obligation, with manifest ingratitude toward the Government under whose favor and protection he was enjoying a "lucrative position," he yielded himself to the purposes and service of the enemies of that Government by becoming the vehicle of their calumnies, to sow disaffection and engaging in their active aid by the conveyance of intelligence, correspondence and supplies.

It is in proof by the affidavit of Sears P. Thompson that he (Thompson) had several conversations with Shaver in reference to our national difficulties and on each and every occasion he expressed himself very strongly in favor of the rebels, insomuch that Thompson cautioned him not to do so, admonishing him that if he persisted he would sooner or later get into trouble. It is also in proof that when traveling between Canada and Louisville in his capacity of ticket agent during the summer of 1861 it was customary for him to have with him one or two large trunks and that these trunks came northward light and went southward heavy. It is also in proof that he stated that while on the way to Fort Lafayette after his arrest that he had parcels in some express office which he expected to receive to carry South and that the empty trunk was to be used for the purpose of packing the same. It is also in proof that previous to his arrest he stated to an acquaintance his intention of going contrary to the President's proclamation to New Orleans, Richmond and other points in the insurrectionary States and offered to aid his said acquaintance in traveling the same route and that letters were committed to his charge to be delivered in Richmond. It is also in proof that in the month of October, 1861, and before his arrest he told a traveling companion between Detroit and Toronto that he was in the business of conveying correspondence between parties in the insurrectionary States and their friends in Canada or on the European steamers and afterward, having in the meantime been on board a steamer just arrived at Quebec from Liverpool, he told the same person at Montreal that he could get $5,000 for delivering what he had in the South and that he intended to make it.

Nations cannot afford to have the intercourse which the interests of their citizens require to be kept open subjected to the annoyances and risks which would result from the admission of fraud or duplicity into such intercourse. It has therefore become a usage having the authority of a principle in the correspondence between enlightened governments in relation to the claims of citizens or subjects that any deception practiced by a claimant upon his own government in regard to a controversy with a foreign government for the purpose of enhancing his claim or influencing the proceedings of his government forfeits all title of the party attempting such deception to the protection and aid of his government in the controversy in question, because an honorable government cannot consent to complicate itself in a matter in which it has itself been made or attempted to be made the victim of a fraud for the benefit of the dishonest party.

Mr. Shaver in presenting his application to Lord Russell has been unmindful of the obligations of truth and good faith in several particulars if I am correctly informed. He alleges that on his arrest he was roughly handled, stripped and even his boots cut open in search of dispatches, and that he was thrust into a dungeon among a number of negroes and malefactors of the vilest kind, while it is in proof by the sworn statement of the person having him in charge during his detention in Detroit, about five hours, that there is not a particle of truth contained in this statement and that he is not believed to have seen any prisoner while confined there. And it is also in proof by the affidavit of George R. Barse, an officer who assisted in his arrest and who conveyed him to the custody of the officer commanding Fort Lafayette, that he was searched in as quiet a manner as possible; nothing was done toward injuring his apparel, no boots ripped—everything was done in as gentle, quiet a manner as was consistent with the duty required, and that in his statement in reference to his arrest and rough handling, cutting of boots, &c., so far as the knowledge of said officer extends there is not one particle of truth contained.

In his said letter to Lord Russell Mr. Shaver repeatedly alleges that as soon as he learned the grounds of his arrest he demanded his trial and to be brought to trial without delay, while in all the correspondence touching his case between your legation and this Department and in all the correspondence previous to said letter to Lord Russell, copies whereof have been communicated by you to me, there is no allusion to a trial; but Shaver's release is claimed by him and sought for by his friends on the ground of his assumed innocence and the allegation that no charges of criminality were made against him.

In his said letter to Lord Russell Mr. Shaver states that when typhoid fever broke out in Fort Lafayette and the prisoners were dying so rapidly as to arouse public attention and produce an outcry of indignation he was removed to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, when in truth there was not during the time of his confinement there nor at any time while said fort was used as a place of detention for state criminals any breaking out or prevalence of typhoid fever at Fort Lafayette nor were there any deaths of prisoners of state there at that or any other time from typhoid fever or any other cause. From all which it seems manifestly to result:

First. That Mr. Shaver stands convicted of inexcusable fraud and misrepresentation in his appeal to the British Government the consequences whereof so far as he is concerned are in the hands of that Government.

Second. That the conduct of the said Shaver while in the United States—in his seditious conversation and in his active aid to the insurgents in facilitating communications and conveying correspondence and supplies—was highly criminal and subjected him to imprisonment in the discretion of the President, to whose clemency solely he is now indebted for his liberty.

Third. That it does not appear that Shaver at the time of his arrest or at any other specified period had his proper domicile in British territory or elsewhere than in the United States.

Fourth. That it does not appear that Shaver is or ever was a British subject.

If these conclusions are sustained or any material portion of them it is apparent that the case of Mr. Shaver has already had more attention in this form than it is entitled to.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, January 3, 1863.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: On receiving from me a copy of the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 30th of May last respecting the imprisonment of Mr. John G. Shaver, Her Majesty's Government considered it advisable to write to Canada for further information on the subject. Her Majesty's Government having in this way obtained additional evidence have again taken the case into their consideration and have directed me to make to you a further representation with regard to it.

To begin with—Mr. Shaver's claim to be a British subject: It is proved by the affidavits of Nancy Moore, Peter Shaver, John Hedley and others which I have the honor to transmit to you herewith* that Mr. Shaver is of British descent and that he and his family have always had their residence on British territory. It appears indeed from the affidavit of Mr. Benjamin and others (which also are inclosed) that Mr. Shaver has had for many years past (and had at the time of his arrest) a residence at Belleville, in Upper Canada, at which his wife lives and to which it has been his habit to return whenever the claims of his business have allowed him to do so. It does not appear that he ever had a fixed residence within the territory of the United States, and his occupation while in those States was of a nature to cause constant traveling from one part of the country to the other and almost to exclude the idea of any fixed residence whatever, and moreover it continued only for a limited portion of each year.

Her Majesty's Government are then clearly of opinion that Mr. Shaver has established by good proof that he is a born subject of Her Majesty, and what is of less importance that he has retained his British domicile; and as regards this latter point Her Majesty's Government confess that they have failed to perceive the force of the remarks made in your note or the justice of the rebuke which you found upon them.

The domicile of the wife was not stated to be the domicile of the husband; but the fact of the residence of the wife and family at a particular place was in the case of a traveling agent alleged as part of the evidence that his home or domicile was in that place. This position is in accordance with the best authorities, English and American, upon the particular point of domicile, and Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that in spite of traveling agencies limited to three or four months Mr. Shaver was domiciled at Belleville. The question, however, is one of natural allegiance and not of domicile, and when the U. S. authorities forebore to press the oath of allegiance which they had at first tendered to Mr. Shaver it was, Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt, because they were satisfied of his British origin and allegiance.

Next, as to the charge against Mr. Shaver of using seditious language while he was in the United States. Her Majesty's Government observe that the only witness mentioned in connection with this charge is Sears P. Thompson. Mr. Shaver states that this Thompson was in his employment and that [he] fraudently withheld from him money received on his account. He declares moreover that his conversation with Thompson never proceeded beyond the private expression of opinions on passing events and were not calculated to excite any feelings, and indeed it may be gathered from the manner in which Thompson's statement is mentioned in your note that this assertion is not likely to be disputed. Mr. Shaver moreover explicitly denies that he ever in any public manner gave expression to sentiments hostile to the Government of the United States. It seems therefore to Her Majesty's Government that the character of Thompson and his particular relations with Shaver go far to discredit his evidence such as it is; and Her Majesty's Government observe further that even if Thompson's evidence were not discredited the conduct of Mr. Shaver could hardly be regarded as an offense except under a rigid despotism; that it could be only under such a form of government that a free comment upon passing events to an acquaintance could be considered as a crime justifying imprisonment.

Other charges against Mr. Shaver connected with the carriage of correspondence and similar matters are prefaced in your note with the words, "It is in proof," but no witness who has testified to them is named. Mr. Shaver distinctly and categorically denies that he was ever either directly or indirectly engaged in the carriage of any correspondence to persons who were in arms or in revolt against the United States. With regard to the assertion concerning the trunks in his possession which are stated to have come northward light and to have gone southward heavy Mr. Shaver's answer is that these trunks contained the bills, papers and tickets which in the course of his business as a ticket agent he sold; that the trunks came up light because the greater portion of the passenger traffic was from South to North and the tickets were then in the hands of the passengers; that they returned heavy because the tickets had then been collected from the holders and were on their way back to the companies in the South for whose account they had been sold. He states moreover that on every occasion of their going South these trunks were searched.

It is further affirmed in your note that Mr. Shaver stated on the way to Fort Lafayette after his arrest that he had parcels in some express office which he expected to receive to carry South. The latter part of this statement Mr. Shaver denies having made. He admits the former part but adds that the U. S. authorities obtained the parcels and examined them and found them to contain cigars.

The assertion that Mr. Shaver stated his intention to go South contrary to the proclamation of the President and also to carry correspondence to the Southern army Mr. Shaver meets with a positive denial, and as the names of the witnesses on whose evidence this charge is made are not given it is not easy to say what other answer, supposing the charge to be untrue, Mr. Shaver could give to it.

On the whole case Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the grave facts as to Mr. Shaver's detention, ill usage and imprisonment remain wholly without excuse or modification, and even if your reliance on the statements of the U. S. officials as to the treatment of Mr. Shaver after his arrest be justified this would, it seems to Her Majesty's Government, merely tend to show some possible exaggeration not unnatural or inexcusable under the circumstances on Mr. Shaver's part as to some points of detail which are not really of much importance to the substance of the case and as to which the feelings and observations of prisoners are apt to be more acute than those of the officers who hold them in custody.

Her Majesty's Government have indeed been strengthened by the information which they have now obtained in the opinion which I expressed to you by their order in my note of the 26th of April last, and they have accordingly directed me to state to you that they consider the claim of Mr. Shaver for redress and compensation to be fully established.

I beg you to be so good as to send me back the ten original documents inclosed in this note.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 7, 1863.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 3d instant relative to the case of Mr. John G. Shaver. In reply I have the honor to acquaint you that a reconsideration of the subject shall cheerfully be entered into.

I have the honor to be, my lord, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 7, 1863.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, has the honor to reply to the note of Lord Lyons of the 3d of January last in which are set forth the views now taken of the case of John G. Shaver by Her Britannic Majesty's Government.

The depositions which accompany that note seem to establish with sufficient certainty the fact that the said John G. Shaver was born a British subject and that he has not renounced his native allegiance.

The same depositions show also with sufficient certainty that in a technical sense Shaver has retained a domicile in Canada; but they do not at all disprove the fact of continuous residence, occupation and activity in the United States as a citizen or resident thereof which has been set forth by the undersigned in his previous communications on the subject. He was so residing and engaged at Louisville in Kentucky at the time of his arrest. Upon this point we have the corroboration of a public advertisement for the year 1861 which was extensively distributed and posted by Shaver himself throughout the Southwestern and Western States with a view to attract travelers in those quarters to the Grand Trunk Railway. This notice was specially addressed to the inhabitants of New Orleans, Memphis, Cairo, Saint Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati and Chicago. Shaver signed this advertisement as passenger agent for the Southwestern States.

The undersigned upon reviewing the whole case is of opinion that John G. Shaver at the time of his arrest had for present advantage waived and lost his domicile in Canada and had assumed and given out to whomsoever was concerned that he was a resident dwelling within the United States.

Wherever born and wherever living Shaver owed obedience to the laws of the United States while enjoying their protection, and he had no right to engage in any seditious proceedings or practices which could endanger the public peace or safety, and he was necessarily amenable to the surveillance of the police when it became necessary to exercise it.

The undersigned cannot regard the depositions which have been submitted to him on behalf of Shaver as sufficient in any way to discredit the testimony of Sears P. Thompson.* That evidence shows that Shaver at a critical period of the present political disturbances of the country held forth seditious conversations at different times and that he persisted in that course of conduct after frequent warnings. The Government had found it necessary to prevent treasonable conversations and correspondence between the insurgents in insurrectionary regions and sympathizers, aiders and abettors in the States which yet remain undisturbed. Shaver claims that in his conversation he only went to the extent of making free comment on passing events. But he cannot complain if the language he held was so indiscreet and injurious as to draw upon him the watchful suspicion of the authorities engaged in finding out and arresting agents and emissaries of the insurrection. His occupation was just such a one as enabled him to act in such a capacity with effect and therefore such as to draw upon him the attention of a vigilant police. He was found frequently traveling over a known line used for secret communication by the agents of the insurrection in violation of the Executive proclamation. He had luggage which was adapted to the forbidden purpose and his conversations brought his loyalty or his neutrality into distrust.

Lord Lyons takes notice of the fact that in the statement of the case which has been heretofore made by the undersigned the effect of testimony is sometimes given without specifying the sources from which it is derived. Some of the depositions in the case contain matter foreign to Shaver's case, and the general form of statement which Lord Lyons has noticed was adopted.

I may now specify that J. H. Noyes testifies that he made the acquaintance of Shaver about the 1st of May, 1861, while Noyes was engaged as clerk of the Russell House, at Detroit; that he knew nothing of Shaver's history before that time; that he represented himself to be general agent for the Grand Trunk Railroad; that Louisville, Ky., was his headquarters; that Noyes thinks he saw Shaver the last time in August, 1861. He told Noyes that his next trip South would be to New Orleans, and offered to procure passes for Noyes if he would accompany Shaver. Noyes asked Shaver if there would not be difficulties in getting through to New Orleans on account of our national troubles. Shaver assured him that there would be none; that he (Shaver) was a Canadian and a neutral and that he could easily get passes on any of the railroads of the Southern (insurrectionary) States. He wrote to Shaver to send him some letters to Richmond, Va., addressed to Lieutenant Parker, a prisoner there, and thinks Shaver told him he intended to visit Richmond, which is a principal seat of insurrectionary operations. Thus it appears that he was preparing without the consent of the authorities of the United States to visit the insurrectionary region and even towns and posts held by the insurgents, and claiming to enjoy facilities for free and unrestricted intercourse and with facilities for travel which were strictly prohibited; and to these suspicious outgivings he recklessly added invitations to others to join him and the offer to carry forbidden correspondence.

Albert Davis makes a deposition to the effect that he met Shaver in Detroit about October 16, 1861, and that they traveled thence together to Quebec. Davis says: Between Detroit and Toronto he asked me, "What is your business?" I replied, "I have got papers to deliver to one of our Southern Confederacy on board the steamer Norwegian." He replied, "God, I am in the same business." "The devil you are," I replied; "I thought you was the agent of the Grand Trunk Railroad." He then said, "So I am, and that helps me; on that account no one would suspect me." Davis proceeds: When the U. S. vessel (I think the Anglo-Saxon by name) arrived from England, at Quebec, we met on board of her, and then fell in company with John Mure, of New Orleans; H. A. Nesbit, of Georgia, Member of the rebel Congress, and General Magruder, of the rebel army. We also met at Montreal. Then he (Shaver) told me that he could get $5,000 for delivering what he had and that he intended to make it. I told him that he might be caught. He replied, "They can't catch me; I am smarter than any Americans." Davis further says: I saw him for the last time in Toronto; when he left there he had three trunks; two of them were loaded, with what I cannot say. I asked him if he had all his fixings. He replied, "Yes, I have."

The undersigned regards these proofs as establishing all the statements in regard to John G. Shaver contained in the note of the undersigned of the 30th of May last except the statement relating to Shaver's trunk and his avowal that he had parcels in some express office which he expected to receive to carry South, and that the empty trunk was to be used for the purpose of packing same. The affidavits upon which those statements were made have been mislaid and they are not available at this moment. But Shaver admits the fact that the trunks which he carried when coming North were light and when going South were heavy.

His explanation of the matter that he carried trunks filled with railroad tickets on each trip to Louisville which were disposed of before his return seems unreasonable and does not gain credit with the undersigned. His further statement that on every occasion of his going South these trunks were searched, if it could be believed without proof, would raise a presumption that being searched at the military border and found free from contraband they were really intended to be filled up at express offices on the way with articles of illicit commerce.

In conclusion the undersigned is obliged to regard the precautionary arrest of John G. Shaver as one which was properly made, in view of the circumstances of the case; and his complaints of undergoing rigor and hardship as being without just foundation.

The undersigned avails himself of the opportunity to renew to Lord Lyons the assurances of his high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

P. S.—Pursuant to his request the deposition which accompanied Lord Lyons' note is now returned.

WASHINGTON, April 23, 1863.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have not failed to consider with attention the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 7th of February last with regard to the case of Mr. John G. Shaver; but they have not found it possible to modify their opinion as to the injustice of the incarceration of Mr. Shaver and as to his claim for compensation.

It is admitted in your note that Mr. Shaver is a British subject and Her Majesty's Government must still maintain that at the time of his arrest his legal domicile was in Canada. It is alleged, however, that Mr. Shaver was resident in the United States and being reasonably suspected of treasonable practices was properly imprisoned; but Her Majesty's Government think that it may be assumed from the facts and circumstances of his release that the suspicions entertained against him were ill founded.

I had the honor in my note of the 3d of January to state to you the reasons which had led Her Majesty's Government to regard the evidence of Mr. Thompson upon which those suspicions were based as unworthy of credit.

But it is urged in your note that the occupation of Mr. Shaver though in itself lawful was such as if he had been so minded would have enabled him to be guilty of treason. It seems, however, to Her Majesty's Government that the conclusion that he was guilty of treason is very distinct from this premise.

In your note it seems to be inferred from the deposition of Noyes that Mr. Shaver was preparing to visit some part of the Southern States without a proper pass from the U. S. authorities and without the consent of those authorities; but Her Majesty's Government observe that this does not appear from the parts of the deposition cited in the note.

The other deposition, that of Albert Davis, is in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government open to the gravest suspicion. They remark that he himself was or on his own showing professed to be an active agent of the so-called Confederates and that the language which he puts into Mr. Shaver's mouth is incredible and bears upon it the stamp of a fabrication to suit the wishes of those who examined him, and they consider that at all events his uncorroborated evidence is not to be relied on.

Her Majesty's Government observe further that Mr. Shaver has had no opportunity of confronting either Noyes or Davis; that it does not appear that their statements constituted the original ground of his arrest and that full copies of their depositions are not even now given.

As regards the trunks apart from what Mr. Shaver himself says as to their containing railway tickets there appears to Her Majesty's Government to be no evidence whatever. It seems indeed that from the averment that the trunks were heavy when going South and light when coming North the conclusion is drawn that they must have contained treasonable correspondence, but Her Majesty's Government observe that the affidavits upon which this statement is made appear to be lost.

It is in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government clear that no conviction could have been obtained in any court of justice on such evidence as this, and it is in their opinion equally clear that it was altogether insufficient to justify Mr. Shaver's arrest and imprisonment.

On the whole, therefore, Her Majesty's Government still consider that Mr. Shaver is entitled to compensation at the hands of the Government of the United States and they have accordingly directed me to inform you that such is their opinion.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 27, 1863.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d instant in which a representation is made of the views of Her Majesty's Government touching the case of Mr. John G. Shaver and to inform you that it will be taken into consideration.*

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM HUNTER,
Acting Secretary.

List of papers sent to Judge Hale October 16, 1872.†

No. 1. Letter from A. G. Davis to William H. Barse dated Quebec, October 12. Charges Shaver with being engaged in carrying arms, &c., to rebels in New Orleans.

No. 2. Telegram from W. H. Barse to W. H. Seward informing him of the arrest of Shaver. Says he found sufficient evidence on his person to sustain the charge.

No. 3. Letter of Superintendent Kennedy to Mr. Seward. Mr. K. thinks Shaver innocent and ought to be released. Incloses a letter found on Shaver when arrested.

No. 4. Letter from J. W. Howes (vice-consul, Toronto) dated October 23, 1861, to W. H. Barse informing him that Shaver had said that he was to carry parcels South, &c.

No. 5. Letter from Robert Murray, U. S. marshal, to Mr. Seward, New York, October 25, 1861. Suggests that Shaver be released upon taking an oath of neutrality.

No. 6. J. R. Giddings, U. S. consul-general, Montreal, November 2, 1861, to Mr. Seward. States that Shaver is a British subject; that Shaver had carried arms to rebels in Mississippi.

No. 7. Telegram from Consul-General Giddings to Mr. Seward, Montreal, November 12, 1861. Says that Shaver is regarded as a spy and that he should be held a prisoner.

No. 8. Affidavit of Albert Davis (detective), Washington, November 19, 1861. Swears as to conversations with Shaver who stated that he was engaged in carrying arms, &c., to rebels South.

No. 9. Oath of neutrality signed at Fort Warren, Boston, by Shaver, dated January 6, 1862.

No. 10. Detroit, May 15, 1862. Report of W. H. Barse as to cause of arrest of Shaver and transmits numerous papers showing guilt of Shaver.

* No further action appears to have been taken in this case.

† This memorandum on the files in the State Department describes many documents that are not now found among the papers relating to Shaver's case, and it is believed they were never returned to the Department.—COMPILER.

Case of Gwin, Benham and Brent.

William M. Gwin sailed from San Francisco for New York by way of Panama on the 21st of October, 1861, on the steamer Orizaba, of which the Department of State had notice by the Overland Mail with the assurance that he (Gwin) was a rank traitor and that his destination was South. On the same steamer was General Sumner, of the U. S. Army, with a small detachment of troops; and before the arrival of the ship at Panama General Sumner placed Gwin under arrest but subsequently accepted his parole to remain at the New York Hotel after arrival at that port subject to the orders of the Secretary of State.

After his arrival at New York on or about the 15th of November, 1861, he was arrested by the superintendent of police by direction of the Department of State, and on the 18th of the same month by like direction he was placed in confinement at Fort Lafayette. Gwin was known to be a sympathizer with the rebels and was believed to entertain the purpose of joining them in the insurrectionary States. His arrest therefore was deemed a necessary measure of precaution. A letter written by him and addressed to Mr. Calhoun Benham, dated February 8, 1861, was found in possession of the latter containing this passage:

The cotton States are out forever. The border States will follow; it is only a question of time. If no collision takes place reconstruction is barely possible. The chances are there will be two republics, North and South, with amicable relations. Time will probably turn it into three.

On the 2d day of December, 1861, Gwin was released from confinement on his parole not to do any act hostile or injurious to the Union.

Calhoun Benham was attorney of the United States for the district of California and left San Francisco on the 21st of October, 1861, for New York by way of Panama, of which the Department had notice. Doctor Gwin, late Senator from California, and Mr. J. L. Brent were in company with Mr. Benham, and all of them were arrested by General Sumner before arriving at New York. On arriving at New York these parties were allowed their freedom in the city by General Sumner on giving their parole not to leave the city. On or about the 15th of November, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State, Benham was taken in custody by the superintendent of police of New York and detained until the 18th of said month when by the further order of the Secretary of State he was taken to Fort Lafayette and there placed in confinement. The action in restraint of this person's liberty was taken on information that he was disloyal and was on his way to the insurrectionary States with the purpose of entering into their service or otherwise rendering them aid and comfort. There is evidence by the affidavits of three persons that on the 4th day of November in the Bay of Panama on board the steamer Orizaba, Benham threw overboard a quantity of papers and some books. The nature or contents thereof are not known. On the 2d day of December, 1861, Benham was released from confinement (on his parole with satisfactory stipulations against further misconduct) by order of the Secretary of State.

J. L. Brent sailed from San Francisco for New York via Panama October 21, 1861, on the steamer Orizaba, of which the Department of State had notice by Overland Mail, with the assurance that he was a traitor and that his destination was South. On the same steamer was General Sumner, of the U. S. Army, with a small detachment of troops, and before the arrival of the ship at Panama General Sumner placed Brent under arrest, but subsequently accepted his parole to remain at the New York Hotel after his arrival at that port subject to the orders of the Secretary of State. After his arrival at New York and on or about the 15th of November, 1861, he was arrested by the superintendent of police by direction of the Department of State, and on the 18th of the same month by like direction he was placed in confinement at Fort Lafayette. Brent was known to be a sympathizer with the rebels and was believed to entertain the purpose of joining them in the insurrectionary States. His arrest was deemed a necessary measure of precaution. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 30, 1861, directing Colonel Burke to release Brent on his parole not to do any act hostile or injurious to the Union nor enter nor correspond with persons residing in any of the insurrectionary States and to report himself to the State Department in Washington for explanation and to remain thereafter on parole subject to the decision of the Secretary of State. He was accordingly released December 2, 1861, and this parole was in force on the 15th of February, 1862,* when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department, &c.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

Would it be desirable to hold ex-Senator Gwin should he arrive from California?

— JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent of Police.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 4, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: Your telegram relative to the arrest of Senator Gwin has been received. In reply I have to inform you that the subject has not yet been decided upon. If it should be determined to make the arrest you will be duly apprised.

I am, your obedient servant,

— WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

U. S. FLAG-SHIP LANCASTER,
Bay of Panama, October 5, 1861.

Brigadier-General SUMNER,
Steamer Orizaba, Panama Bay, New Granada.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I am happy to say there will be no military opposition offered to your progress across the Isthmus. It is possible the civil authorities may make a demand for the liberation of your prisoners with a view to affording grounds for a protest to our Government, which I have no doubt will be duly forwarded. I would advise you, however, to be upon your guard against any attempt to rescue your prisoners by the black population in the neighborhood of the depot. I regret that the lateness of the hour will deprive me of the pleasure of seeing you again prior to your early departure in the morning.

Wishing you, my dear sir, a safe and pleasant passage to the United States, I remain, very truly, your obedient servant,

J. B. MONTGOMERY.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I have to inform you that William M. Gwin, formerly U. S. Senator, and Calhoun Benham, formerly U. S. district attorney for this district, both rank traitors, left this city for New York by way of Panama yesterday. They will arrive in New York on or about the 10th or 12th of November. Their destination is South.

Yours,

S. H. PARKER,

Postmaster.

AT SEA, November 4, 1861.

Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent, all leading, active and influential men of the party in rebellion against the Government, are placed in arrest, and they will be taken to New York by Colonel Merchant as prisoners of state and placed on Governor's Island to await the orders of the Government.

E. V. SUMNER,

Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

I, A. C. Hormenz, head steward of the Pacific Steamship Company's steamer Orizaba, do swear that on the morning of the 4th of November, 1861, between 11 a. m. and 12 m., I saw Calhoun Benham come out of his own state-room, No. 20, into the dining saloon with a roll of papers in his hands having the appearance of being maps, plans or something of that character. He passed along the saloon to state-room No. 13 occupied by Mr. J. S. Stockwell and Mr. Joseph L. Brent. As he passed along I requested George Jansen, one of the stewards, to proceed immediately on deck and watch if they were thrown overboard. A few minutes afterward he came down and told me that the roll of papers referred to above together with the package and some books were thrown overboard from the port window of the room No. 13 occupied by the said J. S. Stockwell and Joseph L. Brent.

CHAS. S. MERCHANT,

Lieutenant-Colonel Third Artillery.

I, Frederick Seiden, ship's barber of the steamer Orizaba, do swear that on the morning of the 4th of November, 1861, somewhere between the hours of 9 a. m. and 12 m., I saw several articles thrown from one of the after ports of the ship on the port side. At the distance I was from the port I could not recognize them distinctly but they appeared to be papers of some kind. The only article I recognized distinctly was a large book with a black cover. I could not see the port from which they were thrown as the quarter-boat was in the way.

CHAS. S. MERCHANT,

Lieutenant-Colonel Third Artillery.

I, George Jansen, one of the steward's men of steamer Orizaba, do swear that on the morning of the 4th of November, 1861, somewhere between the hours of 11 a. m. and 12 m., I was in the dining saloon and saw Mr. Calhoun Benham coming out of his state-room, No. 20, having a roll of documents or papers of some kind in his hand and also a package. The roll of paper was about two feet long and between two and three inches in diameter. He passed along the saloon to state room No. 13, occupied by Mr. J. S. Stockwell and Mr. Joseph L. Brent. The head steward, A. C. Hormenz, told me to go on deck and see if the said documents were thrown overboard, stating at the same time that the port window of the state-room occupied by said Benham was over the guard and that he could not throw them overboard from it, and this from my own observation I know to be correct as I afterward examined the port window of said state-room and found it to be over the guard which was several feet in width. I then went on deck in compliance with the steward's instructions, and for the purpose of obtaining a good view of the port of state-room No. 13 went upon that part of the deck immediately over it, leaned over the railing and saw immediately afterward the same roll that I had seen Mr. Calhoun Benham enter said state-room with thrown overboard from the said port. I went and informed General Sumner of this fact and then went immediately back to my former position at the railing and saw a large black book thrown out of the said port by Mr. Joseph Brent, from the fact of his putting his head out of the window and looking around at the time he threw the book overboard. A few minutes after I saw several smaller ones thrown out from the said port. At a short interval I saw a package thrown out and shortly afterward another package appearing to contain small books or papers and tied up in a cloth handkerchief, and in a few minutes afterward saw a larger package appearing to contain letters or papers of some kind and tied up in a towel. Lieut. J. J. Upham was standing at the railing at the time this last package was thrown overboard and I pointed it out to him.

GEORGE JANSEN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 4th day of November, 1861 there being no civil officer present competent to administer oaths.

CHAS. S. MERCHANT,
Lieutenant-Colonel Third Artillery.

STEAMSHIP ORIZABA,
Bay of Panama, November 5, 1861.

Col. CHARLES MERCHANT,
Commanding Troops, Steamship Orizaba.

SIR: In obedience to the command of Brigadier-General Sumner communicated by you to me I proceeded yesterday with the junior officer of the day, Lieutenant Dandy, to take possession of the papers of Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent, passengers on board this steamer. Upon informing these gentlemen of my object they each in turn protested against it and demanded my authority in writing. I then presented the following order:

STEAMSHIP ORIZABA, November 4, 1861.

The officer of the day, Captain Judd, will immediately seize all the papers belonging to Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent, prisoners of state.

E. V. SUMNER,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

They then demanded the protection of the captain of the ship, which he informed them of his inability to furnish. No further obstacle being placed in the way of the order I delivered all the papers into your custody as commander of the troops. One of the trunks, belonging I think to Mr. Benham, had been checked through to New York some hours before and some delay was occasioned by its being covered up in the hold by a mass of baggage. I do not believe that the trunks and valises, numbering six in all, were opened or any papers removed after I received the order. It is unnecessary for me to add that the examination was as thorough as my lack of experience enabled me to make it and that it was conducted with the courtesy and delicacy due to the service which we represent and to the presence of so large a number of respectable citizens and ladies who are our fellow-passengers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY B. JUDD,
Captain, Third Artillery.

STEAMSHIP CHAMPION, At Sea, November 14, 1861.

We severally give our word of honor that on our arrival at New York we will establish ourselves at the New York Hotel (Broadway), where we will continue to reside subject to the order of the Secretary of State until we shall have received notice of the Government's intention in regard to us; during which time we will make no effort to avoid our arrest.

OFFICE OF U. S. COAST SURVEY,
Washington, November 16, 1861.

Mr. R. J. Walker presents his compliments to Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, and desires to see him now for a few moments before anything further is done in the cases of Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent, arrested by order of General Sumner and now on parole in the city of New York. As a devoted friend (now and at all times) of the Union and of the war now waged for its defense by the Government he declares it to be his profound conviction on the facts now before him that serious prejudice to this great cause would ensue from hasty action in the premises. If Mr. Seward cannot see Mr. Walker this morning will he be pleased to name a time when Mr. W. can confer with him on this subject?

P. S.—Mr. W. has called and learned for the first time the very proper rule setting apart Saturday for foreign ministers. Mr. W. will await Mr. Seward's earliest convenience, and as no possible injury can accrue from permitting the parole to stand for the present Mr. W. hopes no further order will be made until he can confer with Mr. Seward.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, November 17, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Yesterday afternoon Marshal Murray called on me and showed me the dispatch he had received from you for the arrest of Messrs. Gwin, Benham and Brent. At his request I effected the arrest of the three persons and placed them for safe-keeping in the upper story of one of my station-houses, not only apart from all others under arrest but in a place unusual and where meddling friends would not be likely to interfere with their peaceable possession. After receiving the men I took possession of their baggage but found nothing that would implicate them in any treasonable transaction. They, however, had had abundant opportunity to dispose of everything that could involve them as well while on board ship as since their arrival here. At least two of their fellow-passengers sympathized with them and were disposed to render them any aid they might require. Had the order for the taking of Messrs. Gwin and company been received in time I would have detained Captain Healey and ex-Senator Nesmith, whose names were not published in the San Francisco list of passengers on the Orizaba, but they left the city early yesterday morning for Albany and the north, which I suppose means Canada.

The only paper found which I think of sufficient importance to send you is inclosed. It is a letter from Doctor Gwin to C. Benham and expresses the feelings he entertained in February last. I have stopped writing to receive your two dispatches of to-day, and have to say I have not yet received the reply you sent, "Keep them in custody, &c." I remained in my office until after 12 o'clock last night waiting for it. I have only to repeat that so far as Benham and Brent are concerned if not Doctor Gwin it is much the safest to keep them in confinement until their cases are disposed of.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

C. BENHAM, Esq.

FRIEND BENHAM: You must have been born under an unlucky star, for just when I for the first time have no influence in the War Department and do not speak to the head of War Department you need my utmost influence, which would be given so freely and with such good will. I am doing my best through Ringgold, but I have such a horror of Holt I cannot hope for his doing what he ought. In the last resort I intended to appeal to Black and Horton to see that you are properly paid for your services, past and prospective.

The cotton States are out forever. The border States will follow; it is only a question of time. If no collision takes place reconstruction is barely possible. The chances are there will be two republics, North and South, with amicable relations. Time will probably turn it into three.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. GWIN.

NEW YORK, November 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I have had to-day a long interview with my brother-in-law, Calhoun Benham, at Fort Lafayette. From the assurances he has given me and from the knowledge I have always had of his lofty integrity and chivalric honor I can say that there is not the taint of disloyalty in his conduct or in his heart. I educated him and have known him as one of my own children from his early childhood. Mr. Benham states to me that he has never in act or word or thought favored the cause of disunion. He tells me that he has at all times viewed the idea of either annexing his State, California, to the Southern Confederacy or making it an independent government as utterly absurd. A movement for an independent government was at one time made in a public assemblage and he himself denounced it in a speech and crushed it. He was district attorney of California till last spring, and he was engaged in the service of the United States three days before he sailed from Panama, saving to our Government $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. He left his home with no other intention than to attend to business very important to himself and to others, and of considerable importance to me, in the Supreme Court at Washington, and to visit my family.

I cannot tell you how anxious I am that Mr. Benham should be discharged. If he remain where he is the inflammatory rheumatism to which he is very subject will kill him, and the heart of his poor sister, my wife, will be broken. Even if he were to survive he would be utterly ruined in fortune for the crisis of his fortune is at hand. All this, however, would not make me ask for his release if I believed him guilty of disloyalty, but I know that he is not.

But on what condition shall he be set free? You asked me to make a report to you in regard to him. I am well convinced that he should be released at once and unconditionally but I fear that you will not agree with me. He himself regarding his arrest as a great wrong would rather die than take an oath to procure his liberty. He thinks, erroneously in my view, that however loyal he may be in heart and intention the taking of an oath under such circumstances would dishonor and degrade him, and he is as resolute a man as I ever knew. Whether he would while in confinement give his word of honor as to his future conduct as a condition of his freedom I know not. He would certainly examine minutely every word of any promise required. Please inform me what he must promise if anything. Give me the language—and here let me make one suggestion. Please let him make the promise if any be demanded not before his release but immediately after it. If you will send me an order for his discharge and also the form of any necessary promise I pledge you my word of honor that the order shall not be used unless I can return to you the promise signed on the day he leaves prison.

Mr. Seward, I ask as a personal favor, I ask in consideration of all the services I have tried to render to our country, and I ask in the name of justice, that you have my brother restored to liberty. I should fear no difficulties in the case except from the peculiarities of his character, peculiarities resulting perhaps from too great sensitiveness and possibly false notions of honor, but never found in a dishonorable nature.

Messrs. Gwin and Brent were arrested with my brother. I merely suggest their case to your consideration. Pray let me hear from you without delay, for my immediate return to Louisville and to my public post is important.

Very respectfully, your friend,

GEO. D. PRENTICE.

P. S.—A disease of the hand compels me to use a pencil in writing.

ASTOR HOUSE, New York, November 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: In writing to you this afternoon fresh from a conversation with my brother-in-law perhaps I said more than I should have said in regard to the character of a parole to be given by him if any should be required. Of course I understand that if a parole is deemed necessary it must be a full promise to do nothing in any way toward promoting or encouraging opposition to the Government.

Doctor Gwin and Mr. Benham before they left California, hearing that surmises against their loyalty had been expressed, sent to General Sumner to ask whether they would incur any danger of arrest in embarking on the steamer. He replied directly that they would not and surely he had or might have had a better opportunity of informing himself there as to their loyalty or disloyalty than he could have in the voyage. Deeply and even painfully anxious as I am for the immediate discharge of my brother I do not expect that you can favor him above the two gentlemen arrested with him. If the circumstances in regard to the three are the same I recognize the propriety of your treating them all alike. I believe that they all would make a proper promise to do nothing against our Government and that they would keep the promise when made.

Earnestly thanking you for several kindnesses and hoping to thank you for another, I remain, very truly, your friend,

GEO. D. PRENTICE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 30, 1861.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, Astor House, New York.

DEAR SIR: I duly received your letters of the 26th instant. Before making up my mind in regard to the subject to which they relate I must have an interview with General Sumner which has been requested but not yet obtained.

I am, dear sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 30, 1861.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

COLONEL: The Hon. William M. Gwin, Calhoun Benham and J. L. Brent, esqs., of California, were arrested on board the mail steamer coming from San Francisco to Panama by Brigadier-General Sumner and on arriving at New York were permitted by him to go at large within the city on parole until the pleasure of the President should be known. On the report of General Sumner to the War Department it was thought prudent that the prisoners should be committed to Fort Lafayette. They are now understood to claim that before embarking they had assurances by Federal authority that they need not apprehend an arrest. Under these circumstances the prisoners may be released on their parole not to do any act hostile or injurious to the Union, and not to enter into or hold any correspondence with persons residing in any of the insurrectionary States and to report themselves to the State Department in Washington for explanations and remain thereafter on parole subject to the direction of the Secretary of State. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, December 5, 1861.

The Secretary of State acknowledges the receipt of the letter of Messrs. Gwin, Brent and Benham of this date and has to inform them that due notice will be given to them in regard to an interview with the Secretary. Meanwhile they may have the full liberty of this city subject to the conditions of their parole.

WILLARD'S, Friday Morning, December 6, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I shall call to see you a few moments and I may shorten the interview by writing what it would otherwise be my wish to speak. I desire to trouble you as little as possible. I hope you read the letter I sent to your house last night. Doctor Gwin saw you at the appointed hour and was gratified with the interview. I trust all will be right and pleasant. I am telegraphed to hasten to Louisville. It is important to me and I think it highly important to the Government that I should be there. I wish that I could go at once but as I told you in my letter last night I must not go whilst my brother is a prisoner. He and his two companions have no desire whatever to hasten a decision in their case, but I do wish that the matter may be decided soon on my account. I am sure that the three prisoners were arrested without just cause. They went on board the steamer at San Francisco under what they at least understood to be a distinct declaration on the part of General Sumner that they should not be molested. My brother having served the United States Government faithfully and successfully started for Washington with claims to a considerable amount upon the Treasury and it is simply absurd under the circumstances to suppose that an arrest on the Pacific was necessary to bring him where our laws could reach him. Doctor Gwin could not take the oath of allegiance without sacrificing a fortune, and my brother could not take it without sacrificing what he regards as more than a hundred fortunes—his own convictions of honor and self-respect—not from the slightest feeling of disloyalty but from an abhorrence of what he conscientiously believes would be a stigma. He is amid all his trials and sorrows firm in the conviction that it is his duty to ask his full rights and if he fail to attain them to return to close confinement.

I will when I call upon you ask but a moment of your time. Why can you not let me go home to-morrow or to-night? I feel that I am at one post of duty but I would fain be at another.

Ever your friend,

GEO. D. PRENTICE.

DECEMBER 7, 1861.

In an interview between President Lincoln and Mr. Calhoun Benham at the White House on the night of the 7th of December, 1861, at which I assisted, Mr. Lincoln stated to Mr. Benham that he (Mr. Benham), Doctor Gwin and Mr. Joseph L. Brent might go their several ways, they to ask no questions nor any questions to be asked of them, and the pending affair between them and the Government growing out of their arrest and parole to be thus entirely disposed of and ended.

GEO. D. PRENTICE.

The above statement is correct.

Memorandum.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 10, 1861.

The Hon. William M. Gwin and Calhoun Benham and J. L. Brent have arrived at Washington. Explanations from them have been received. It is found that they took passage on board the steamer at San Francisco with what they regarded as assurances from the U. S. military authorities that their respective voyages would not be objected to. Although General Sumner did not understand the general terms he used on that occasion as implying any such opinion the Secretary of State has been fully satisfied that no one of the parties had any disloyal purpose in his journey, and that the complaint that they bore treasonable dispatches or correspondence and destroyed the same on their way to Panama is unfounded. The President therefore has directed that they be released from duress so that they will stand on the same footing as all other citizens whose loyalty is unquestioned.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Military Surveillance of Judge William M. Merrick.

Judge Merrick, assistant judge of the U. S. court in the District of Columbia, was placed under military surveillance by order of the Secretary of State October 21, 1861, having a guard placed about his residence. He was charged with interfering with the officers of the U. S. Army while in the discharge of their duties in enforcing the rules and regulations established in Washington for the preservation of the Government. The surveillance was removed a few days after it had been established.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

CONFIDENTIAL.]

COOK COUNTY, ILL., *January 21, 1861.*Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A letter has been received in Chicago within a day or two where I do business (living only six miles from the court-house, south) from Judge Merrick, of your city, stating in effect that Washington would be in the hands of the secessionists by the 4th of March and that thousands of the Marylanders that you are arming have a plot to desert all at once and fight on the other side and that this is unknown to you. This was told in confidence to me.

The fact is, general, that messengers and letters are continually arriving here from Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Virginia, Maryland, Washington, &c., which establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt that a conspiracy does actually exist which has for its object the sacking or taking of our national capital. God forbid that such a thing should happen while such experienced veterans as yourself and others are at the helm. Do not heed this information too lightly or your life and that of other valuable citizens who love their country will pay the forfeit, for they will destroy all that oppose them if they can. Their secret force now sworn to the accomplishment of this object is said to be over 50,000 and scattered over the States I have named. There is one company in the city of Saint Louis of 300 who say they stand ready to go to South Carolina at a moment's notice if she is coerced; but it is pretty well ascertained that Washington is their destination if an opportunity is offered.

Why, sir, you can have 1,000 or 5,000 men from Chicago by only asking for them. I implore you to be prepared for the worst as the best will take care of itself. I am ready to die if need be in defending the national flag. It is thought by our people generally that the defense of the capital ought not to be intrusted too much to citizens of Maryland, Virginia, or even of the District.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 21, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: You are directed to establish a strict military guard over the residence of William M. Merrick, assistant judge of the circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 21, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: In answer to your note of this date I have to say that it is not expected that Judge Merrick will be confined to his house. Indeed it may be sufficient to make him understand that at a juncture like this when the public enemy is as it were at the gates of the capital the public safety is deemed to require that his correspondence and proceedings should be observed.

I am, general, your very obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 21, 1861.

ELISHA WHITTLESEY, Esq., First Comptroller of the Treasury.

SIR: I am instructed by the President to direct that until further orders no more moneys be paid from the Treasury of the United States on account of the salary of William M. Merrick, assistant judge of the circuit court for the District of Columbia.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SOUTH AMHERST, MASS., October 30, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The day after the announcement in The New York World that Judge Merrick, of the U. S. circuit court, was placed under arrest I wrote to him conjuring him to disprove all suspicions of rebel sympathies and to stand firm in the front rank of the nation. Last night I received his reply thanking me for my interest in his welfare and declaring that he had conscientiously discharged with fidelity his private duties and public trust and quoting for his comfort the sentiment of the pious Psalmist who said (37: 6):

And He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

Judge Merrick imputes his arrest to false information without any accusation being communicated to him that he may meet and repel as it deserves. No one in this vicinity will accuse me of rebel sympathies or of lack of patriotism at this time when the nation calls all faithful sons to rally bravely for the welfare of the country and posterity. I trust Judge Merrick is true to the nation and Government, and as a friend both to the Administration and to him I very respectfully and earnestly ask that he may be released from arrest or at least and with out delay have the Roman privilege of meeting his accusers face to face with full opportunity to disprove false charges. The nation needs all its friends and none should be alienated who are willing and desirous to serve the country's cause.

Believe me to be, sir, yours, very respectfully,

JAMES L. MERRICK.

Case of John F. Parr.

On the 26th of October, 1861, A. G. Stevens, deputy U. S. marshal at Buffalo, N. Y., wrote to the State Department charging that this person [John F. Parr], a resident of Nashville, Tenn., was in Buffalo, having made now a second visit to that city and to New York to buy goods to take to Tennessee and to induce his brothers to serve in the rebel army and to act as a spy. His first visit had been four or five weeks earlier and he had then taken one or more brothers with him to Tennessee who he said entered the rebel army on arriving there. The deputy marshal aforesaid was immediately directed to arrest the said Parr and convey him to Fort Lafayette, which was done. The arrest was made October 30, 1861. Parr after his arrest acknowledged that he had purchased property in New York to take to Nashville, saying he intended to wait, holding it in readiness to go when communications should be allowed. He refused to state what the property was or where it was. Afterward the Department was informed that a trunk was seized in Buffalo supposed to belong to Parr containing a considerable quantity of quinine marked "William Leonard" and forwarded from New York by the American Express Company, arriving at Buffalo October 31, 1861. Also that proceedings were instituted by the U. S. district attorney for the northern district of New York for the confiscation of said trunk and contents, but no result of such proceedings has been learned. At one time after his arrest Parr informed the Department that he had appealed to the British minister for protection as a British subject, but in all his correspondence transmitted to the Department by his brother to show his loyalty he speaks of his opinion and his position in regard to public questions as if he was a citizen of the United States, declaring what vote he meant to give on the question of convention or no convention in Tennessee and what delegate he intended to vote for. It also appears that he has resided in Nashville for some fifteen years. On the 13th of February, 1862, Parr was ordered to be released on his parole neither to enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State nor to do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. He was therefore released on the 16th day of February, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

FORT LAFAYETTE,

New York Harbor, [November 23 or 24, 1861].

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I take the liberty of addressing this appeal to you. Hoping you will show that forbearance that is due me under the circumstances I demand your attention. I am not positive of the charges against me.

From the best I could learn there were two. One was I aided my brothers to join the Southern army. That is false. I have only one brother in the South. He has been there seven years and he is under age and going to school. I offered to bring him home, but he refused as he could stay without being interfered with by the army.

The other [charge] is I was buying goods to take South. Well, sir, I admit I bought some things, but I had not removed them out of the State and, sir, I pledge my word it was not my intention to violate the laws of the land. The things I had use for I could buy them in the South, but I could get them cheaper here although that was not my business here. It was a family matter. I am no secessionist and never took sides or derived any benefit from it. It has been a great damage to me. If it is necessary I will prove it to you and can satisfy you I have worked for the Union and, sir, if my proclivities were any other way I would never come North. I came to bring a brother home. That I have done. I kept my own affairs and business to myself. That made over-officious ones think because I did not talk and tell a great deal that I was secesh all over; but, sir, I think there is a mistake made in me. My all is in the South. It was my duty to be careful. If I am not for the Union there is no Union men in the South. I am an Englishman by birth; so was my father. Neither of us were ever naturalized.

I wish you to take my case into consideration, and you will oblige, yours,

J. F. PARR.

SETH C. HAWLEY, New York.

SIR: Herewith I inclose the papers on file in this Department in the case of John F. Parr. Will you please examine them, taking such other evidence as may be found and return these inclosures to me with your report thereon?

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

NEW YORK, December 18, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: On examining the papers sent from your Department in the case of John F. Parr and the testimony received from Buffalo I have found that when the officers arrested him they had no grounds to stand upon beyond the fact that his home was in Tennessee. After he was arrested and on the way to Fort Lafayette he admitted that he had then recently purchased goods in New York and refused to say what they were or where they were. This exhibited a guilty knowledge. He is a good-natured man, of infirm purpose. In my interview with him he informed me that his purchase was quinine and that he shipped it to Buffalo. I have put our detectives on the track and shall probably find it. I think it will turn out that he shipped it to an assumed name or the name of a third party, which will give a bad aspect to his case. I write you this to explain the delay and to prevent any possible discharge of the prisoner until his case can be more completely worked up.

Yours, very respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY,

NEW YORK, *February 2, 1862.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: The case of John F. Parr, a prisoner at Fort Lafayette (arrested at Buffalo), should I think be disposed of. When arrested there seemed to be no sufficient grounds for holding him. The correspondence found on him or furnished by his brother, who is a respectable Union man residing at Buffalo, shows on the contrary that though residing in Tennessee he was a Union man until he came North. Why the officers picked him [up] it is difficult to imagine. After he was arrested it transpired (by his own statement) that he had purchased goods in New York, he claiming that he bought them on speculation to ship South when he could legally do so. I set on foot inquiries to find out what and where the goods were and satisfied myself that the purchase was quinine and was sent in a trunk by express to Buffalo. I asked you to order the trunk sent to me so that I might take measures to identify the trunk and Parr as purchaser. The trunk was sent to New York by express to be delivered to me, but was not delivered. By this time the officers in Buffalo got tidings of the matter and interfered and got the trunk ordered back to Buffalo by the express officers and it was sent back without my knowing it had been here. A letter from the district attorney of the northern district of New York shows me that proceedings are to be taken or have been to condemn the property as contraband. The cupidity of the officers has made them vigilant now that compensation is possible. I think the property cannot be condemned even if it can be identified; but if it is that would I think be punishment enough when added to the confinement in Lafayette which Mr. Parr has suffered.

The same testimony which states that Mr. Parr bought the quinine states also that he intended to take it South only when he could legally do so, i. e., after the Confederate forces should be driven from Nashville. That result he expected to occur before this date. It would be harsh to condemn him on that part which indicated guilt and reject that part which if true established his innocence. Especially would this be harsh when the penalty is to be indefinite confinement.

As in these proceedings the public safety and not the punishment of the prisoner is the end to be subserved I have no hesitation in recommending that John F. Parr be dismissed on the usual terms, as I feel confident that he will not meddle with public affairs. It may perhaps be well to take his parole to reside in Buffalo and not to visit Tennessee until the Federal authority shall be established in that State. I herewith return the papers forwarded me with others procured since.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

Richard B. Posey, of Charles County, Md., was arrested by order of General Hooker and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison October 27, 1861. He was charged with having been in communication with the rebels. Lights supposed to be signals were seen at the windows of his house, which was on the river opposite Evansport where the rebels had a strong battery. A report of the investigation of this case was made by Lieut. Col. George D. Wells, commanding First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at Camp Hooker, October 30, 1861, containing among other things the following statements:

Tom, a colored servant of Mr. Posey, aged about twenty, stated that Massa Dick (Mr. Posey) used to hoist flags during the day down on the bank of the river; that about two months previous to this statement he sent a barrel of crushed sugar over the river. Alonzo, one of Mr. Posey's servants, stated that Mr. Posey with himself and others went over the river after shad barrels; that Mr. Posey saw a steamer and told him to row fast; that they got over to the lower side of the wharf; that after they got over the steamer came over; that they drew their boat up into a little inlet when Mr. Posey went up to the head boss of some soldiers that were there and got them to come down and hide in a little clump of pines that were there so as to fire at the steamer's men if they should come there; that he told the soldiers to go down easy and hide themselves and if the steamer's men got near enough to fire upon them; that there were some twenty-five or thirty of the soldiers; that this was about the last of shad time (middle of May).

He was discharged by order of Brig. Gen. R. B. Marcy November 12, 1861.

Philip H. Linton was arrested on the 6th day of November, 1861, by order of General McClellan on a charge of having been in communication with the rebels and was committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison, but was afterward removed to the Old Capitol. Linton was a resident of Washington in April, 1861, and retired with his wife and sister to the residence of a relative, Richard B. Posey, in Charles County, Md., where they remained up to about the time of his arrest. Some intercourse was known to have taken place between the family of Posey and the family of Evans in Virginia, and the Poseys, including Linton, were accused of communicating with the rebels by signals day and night, conveying letters to and from Virginia and doing other unlawful acts. An investigation was had by order of General Hooker, when it was shown that lights were seen in the southwest room of Posey's house, which were thought to be signals to the rebels, and this room was occupied by Linton. A report of the investigation was made by Lieut. Col. George D. Wells, commanding First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at Camp Hooker, October 30, 1861, containing among other things the following statements,* * * * A large number of his friends certified strongly to the loyalty of Linton. On the 13th day of January, 1862, Linton was ordered to be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the United States stipulating not to enter any insurrectionary State nor correspond with persons therein nor do any act hostile or injurious to the United States and giving an approved bond in the sum of $1,000 to observe the conditions of such stipulation.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

* Omitted here. See report of E. J. Allen, December 17, p. 1028.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: In the case of Philip H. Linton, a state prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report as follows: Said Philip H. Linton was arrested on the 6th of November last by order of General McClellan on a charge of having been in communication with the rebels, and was committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison from which he has since been removed to the Old Capitol. The grounds upon which he was arrested and has been held will appear from the following extracts from a report sent up from General Joseph Hooker's division on the occasion of the arrest and sending to Washington of Richard B. Posey, wife and daughter, of Charles County, Md. This report was made to General Hooker by Lieut. Col. George D. Wells, commanding First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at Camp Hooker, October 30, 1861, and among other things embraces the following passage in the summing up of the evidence:

My own judgment would be from various revelations and hints in the course of investigation impossible to put on paper but more conclusive to my mind than the written evidence itself that Linton was the mainspring of the whole affair. His family came from Virginia after he came from Washington. His was the south-west room where the signals were mainly seen; he was frequently across, his wife at one time staying in Virginia for weeks, and it was to him that Evans sent when Posey became too cautious to let him into the house. The negroes say that frequently when out late at nights they have stumbled on people below the house and hid from them fearing to be seen as their orders were strict to keep in their quarters. Linton has connections in one of the Departments at Washington and has gone there.

Statements of witnesses kept entirely separate during their examination.

Tom, a colored servant of Mr. Posey, aged about twenty, stated on examination by Lieutenant-Colonel Wells that Mr. Linton (Philip H.) went over the river often to see Mr. Evans [at Evansport where the rebel batteries are]; that he (Linton) was boarding at Posey's; that he sometimes went over in the morning and came back at night; sometimes was gone three or four days; that he went over once with some barrels and was seen from the Government steamer; that he was afraid that the steamer's boats would get his boat and got a guard of men (rebels) to come down to protect it; that Mr. Evans used to come back and forth very often; that he used to bring letters and papers and take letters and papers back with him; that he used to bring the papers to Mr. Linton and that Mr. Linton would take them to Mr. Skinner at the post-office; that Mr. Skinner used to come there (to Mr. Posey's) often to see the men from Virginia; that Massa Dick (Mr. Posey) used to hoist flags during the day down on the bank of the river; that about two months before this statement he sent a barrel of crushed sugar over the river; that his Massa Dick raised him up to tell the truth and if it turned against him still he must tell the truth

Alonzo, one of Mr. Posey's servants, stated on examination that Mr. Posey, Mr. Tom Lozier, Mr. Linton, Frank Wedge (a free colored man), Fido and himself went over the river after shad barrels; that Mr. Posey saw a steamer and told them to row fast; that they got over to the lower side of the wharf; that after they got over the steamer came over; that they drew their boat up into a little inlet, when Mr. Posey went up to the head boss of some soldiers that were over there and got them to come down and hide in a little clump of pines there was there so as to fire at the steamer's men if they should come there; that he told him (Alonzo) to hide behind the house out of the way of the shots; that he told the men to go down easy and hide themselves, and if the steamer's men got near enough to fire upon them; that there were some twenty-five or thirty of the soldiers; that this was about the last of shad time (middle of May).

Frank Wedge, a free colored man, stated on examination that he had been at work for Mr. Posey since the 24th of May; that they went across after some shad barrels the first day he (Posey) hired him; that they saw a steamer while going across; that after they landed on the other side Mr. Posey went up to Mr. Evans' house and on coming back told them to haul the boat up into the inlet, which they did; that then a parcel of soldiers came down and went into a bunch of pines; that Mr. Posey told them (his men) to go behind a hill; that they staid there until the steamer came up; that she laid there and blowed her whistle and the Pawnee came down; that the company that went over after the first barrels was composed of Mr. Radcliff, Tom De Lozier, Tom Davis (free colored man), Mr. Linton, Fido and Alonzo, beside Mr. Posey and himself; that they had three boats.

Theodore Neff, familiarly called Fido, stated on examination that he was about twenty years of age; that his occupation was that of a laborer; that he first came to live with Mr. Posey some time in May; that they went across the river after shad barrels about the middle of the month; that four boats went across; that the company consisted of himself and Isaac (a colored boy), Mr. Posey and a colored boy, Mr. Lozier and George Lozier (brothers); that Mr. Linton saw a tug as they were going over—a tug with a red smoke stack; that he (Fido) saw some fifteen or twenty soldiers across the river; that they had on gray uniforms; that they came out back of Evans' and stood on a hill there about five minutes; that they then came down to the edge of the river not quite to where the boat lay; that on the edge of the beach over the boat there was a growth of pines which concealed the soldiers from the river; that they laid down there until the tug was out of sight; that they had their guns with them; that when the soldiers went down Mr. Posey was up at Mr. Evans' house; that he told the boys that they had better go up on the hill; that they hauled the boat up in a little creek there by the wharf; that this was the only time he (Fido) went across the river.

Samuel Bush stated on examination that he was sixty-four years of age and was a laborer in the employ of Mr. Posey; that he knew Mr. Linton; that he did not think Mr. Linton had been across the river since he and Mr. Posey were fired on by one of the tugs some time about the 1st of May; that he remembered when he went over after barrels that there were no soldiers there then.

Question. Did not Mr. Posey tell you about the men coming down to protect his boats?

Answer. Yes; now you mention it I think he did say something about getting men down to protect his boats. My memory is rather short. There was a picket over there. They used to picket.

Mr. Bush further stated on examination that young Mr. Evans had been back and forth across the river several times during the summer; that he gave the letters and papers that he brought over to Mr. Linton; that the reason that lights were burning at the house of Mr. Posey so late was that there were a good many in the family; that there were no lights burning except when the people went up to bed; that he (Bush) occupied the room in the front of the house with the dormer window; that the room in the southwest corner of the house was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Linton; that Mr. Posey brought the Lintons over there—Mr. Linton, his wife, and sister—about the middle of May.

Albert Berry Posey, son of Richard B. Posey, aged fifteen, stated on examination that Mr. Linton went across the river once with his wife; that he staid two or three weeks he reckoned; that he staid with Mr. Evans and his family; that his (Albert's) father, Mr. Posey, went over there and brought them back again; that Mr. Linton had been staying there (at Mr. Posey's) since April, having come from Washington.

James Posey, ten years old, stated on examination that Mr. Linton used to go over the river sometimes until one time when his (James') father went over there to get some ladies one of the Federal steamers stopped him and told him not to go over there any more and that he hadn't been over since; that Tip (his brother) had wanted to go over and join the Confederate Army pretty bad, but that his mother and father would not let him.

At the time of Linton's arrest in this city he acknowledged on examination at my office that he was present in company with Mr. Posey at the time of the ambuscade above spoken of, but denied having taken any part in that affair. It appears from the foregoing evidence that Mr. Philip H. Linton from the first commencement of our national troubles has been in intimate association with the Evans family, notorious secessionists and traitors on the Potomac at Evansport, Va., where one of the most formidable of the rebel batteries is located; that he has been in co-operation with one of the Evanses in carrying on a clandestine mail arrangement between Maryland and Virginia and that in the latter part of May last he was present in company with Richard B. Posey on the occasion of an ambuscade said to have been laid by Posey on an inlet near Evansport for the crew of a U. S. steamer similar to that by which the gallant Lieutenant Ward lost his life in the early part of this conflict.

I append hereto sundry recommendatory documents* on the part of Mr. Linton which have been received from various quarters, and which although actions speak louder than words I hope will have their due effect and that upon a full examination of the case, evidence and all, such favors will be extended to Mr. Linton as his real status may merit and the safety of the country at this critical time may allow.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

Case of Robert S. Bunker.

Robert S. Bunker, of Mobile, was arrested at Cincinnati on the 31st of October, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State made in consequence of information having been communicated that Bunker who had just returned from Europe was a bearer of dispatches for the rebels. Bunker was taken to Fort Warren and detained there until the 11th day of November, 1861, when he was released by order of the Secretary of State on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against going to or corresponding with any insurrectionary State.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Cases of Andrew Low, Mrs. John Low and Charles Green.

Andrew Low, of Savannah, Ga., was arrested in Cincinnati on the 3d day of November, 1861, while on his way from England to Georgia. The arrest was made by order of the Secretary of State upon information that Low had been one of the rebel commissioners to receive subscriptions to the Confederate loan at Savannah; that he was supposed to have an interest in the steamer Bermuda that ran the blockade off Tybee Island, and that he had been an agent of the rebels at Liverpool during the summer. He was conveyed to Fort Warren and there confined. No treasonable papers or correspondence were found in Low's possession. He admitted, however, that he had been one of the rebel loan commissioners for the State of Georgia. On the 8th day of February, 1862, Mr. Low was ordered to be released upon his parole to proceed at once to Baltimore and report himself each day to General John A. Dix, or such other person as General Dix should designate, and at the expiration of the period of sixty days from the date of release to return and surrender himself to be recommitted to the fort; and that in the meantime he would neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States nor hold any correspondence with any person residing therein, nor to be engaged in any treasonable communication with any person whomsoever nor do any act hostile or injurious to the United States.

Mrs. John Low was arrested in Detroit by a Government agent and by order of the Secretary of State was taken to Washington and committed to the Greenhow House Prison November 10, 1861. She claimed to be a subject of Great Britain and a resident of Virginia. She had just returned from Europe with her brother, Charles Green, who was arrested at the same time. The charges against Mrs. Low were that she was conveying contraband correspondence and information to the insurrectionary States. November 12, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State directing General Andrew Porter, provost-marshal at Washington, to release Mrs. Low on her engaging on honor to hold no correspondence with and not to enter the insurrectionary States during the rebellion and do no act hostile to the United States Government. Mrs. Low was accordingly released November 13, 1861.

This person [Charles Green] was a resident of Savannah, Ga., and on his return from Europe via Canada was arrested in Detroit by an agent of the Government, and by order of the Secretary of State was committed to Fort Warren November 9, 1861. His family connections in England and America are as far as appears hostile to the Union. He was a large holder of property both real and personal and his papers indicated that he had made extensive preparations to carry on direct and illegal traffic with foreign countries and that he had entertained propositions for running the blockade if not actually joined in such enterprises. The papers found on him also showed that he had subscribed to the Confederate loan and held the bonds of the rebel government. The said Charles Green remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

NEW YORK, November 1, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Washington.

SIR: Mr. Andrew Low, of Savannah, has returned from England at Halifax and proceeded thence to Montreal and then for Louisville with his wife, en route for Georgia. He was one of the rebel commissioners to receive subscriptions to the Confederate loan at Savannah. He is——a leading cotton house in that city and is supposed to have had an interest in the steamer Bermuda that ran the blockade off Tybee Island, Georgia coast. Mrs. Low is the daughter of W. H. Stiles, of Georgia, formerly minister to Austria, and the family all rank rebels. It is for you to determine about his arrest. I have no doubt of his being an agent at Liverpool this summer. Mr. Low has a sandy head, dark red, and looks like a Scotchman or Englishman.

J. G. ANDREW.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of a letter which I received yesterday from Mr. Charles Green, a British merchant, who appears to be imprisoned in Fort Warren. The principal object of Mr. Green's letter is to request me to claim in behalf of Messrs. Bailey Bros. & Co., of Liverpool, a letter containing valuable papers belonging to that mercantile house which has been taken from him. I trust that there may be no objection to restoring these papers to their owners.

Mr. Green mentions that his sister, Mrs. John Low, is also under arrest. He is mistaken, however, in supposing that her case had been brought to my notice before. I shall be very much obliged if you will give me such information concerning these two arrests as it seems proper that I should receive.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, Boston, November 11, 1861.

Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: On my way from England to the South where (at Savannah) I have a commercial house and a winter residence I was arrested and brought to this place.

* Not found.

Although an English subject as my passport shows and never naturalized I prefer giving your lordship no trouble in my case. Later when I ascertain the exact charges and evidence upon which I am detained I may ask your lordship's interference. For the present I must beg you to claim from among my papers on behalf of Messrs. Bailey Bros. & Co., of Liverpool, a letter addressed to me by that house containing statement of claim and order upon William Johnston, president of the Charlotte and South Carolina Railway, for $33,821.98; 48 coupons of the East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad due 1st of July, 1861, at $30 each, $1,440; 82 coupons of the Tennessee State bonds, No. 9982 to No. 10063, due 1st of July, 1861, at $30 each, $2,460.

As the letter indicates these specialties were confided to me to realize and remit proceeds to Messrs. Bailey Bros. & Co., whose property they are. I have no interest whatever in them.

There are also among my papers some orders for cotton to be executed at Savannah which when the ports open there I shall be glad to recover.

Among my effects carried to Washington was a small parcel of apparel chiefly underclothes, value of the whole parcel as nearly as I can recollect £12 or £13, designed for my young kinsman Mr. Josiah G. Low, of Virginia. When this young friend asked me to bring him these things he had not entered the Confederate service where he now is and therefore the apparel, which speaks for itself, could not be as my captors have represented in the papers a rebel uniform. I only allude to this to explain an erroneous statement to my prejudice and to express my regret that it should have caused the transfer to Washington of a trunk and a bag of other clothing upon which I paid the U. S. duties at Detroit. In these two packages everything was procured for my own and family use except the bill for £12 or £13 already mentioned.

I must really apologize to your lordship for occupying your valuable time with such unimportant questions. One affecting me far more is the case of my sister Mrs. John Low, which I trust she has herself brought to your lordship's attention. Her arrest grew solely out of the accident of her traveling with her brother, a Southern merchant. I do not permit myself to doubt her speedy restoration to her family in Virginia upon the examination of her papers. We were traveling under British passports from Earl Russell viséed at the U. S. legation in London.

I may not conclude without acknowledging the considerate treatment the English prisoners receive at the hands of the officers of this fort, and remain, with great respect,

CHARLES GREEN.

I am of course well known to Mr. Molyneux at Savannah.

NEW YORK, November 28, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

SIR: * * * When at Boston I was earnestly requested by some of the solid men of that city to look particularly into the case of Mr. Low, of Savannah, Ga., banker, who was arrested at Cincinnati en route from England to Georgia, via Canada, &c. His friends in Boston who are loyal and influential (none more so) hoped that he might be set at liberty on some restricted parole, they thinking that it would be safe, &c. Mr. Low excluded himself from the class to be examined by refusing to take the oath, and with that I should leave him—considering him in the right place—but for the circumstances following which induced me to refer to his case lest sooner application in his behalf from very respectable and loyal men might effect his release without his case being fully appreciated.

Mr. Low is a banker of the first rank in the South, of English origin; has a branch house in England; is the corresponding banker in the South for W. Peabody, Baring & Co.; is very rich and commands a very extended and rich moneyed circle at home and abroad. While last in England he was on his own account proprietor of 50,000 bales of cotton in Liverpool on which he had realized the advance growing out of the rebellion, making a large fortune by that operation. He is able and influential and is one of the commissioners for the Confederate loan. He pretends that he has not accepted but does not pretend that he has declined, and unquestionably has so far undertaken the trust as to lend his influence to the enterprise. The man who can raise the money to carry on a war is of more consequence than he who commands the armies. Mr. Low at liberty, wherever his parole might place him, if disloyal would be dangerous. He is valuable as a hostage; is guilty of treason if he has acted as commissioner, as I assume he has, and in case of being driven to set up the lex talionis he would be worth a thousand common men.

I consider him the most important man in Fort Warren—to keep—unless it be Slidell. I deem it probable that all this is known to your Department, but out of abundant caution I write this lest some of the facts might not have reached you.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

NEW YORK, December 3, 1861.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: Shall I trouble you too much by asking you to send me word whether Andrew Low, imprisoned at Fort Warren, is in a way of having his case disposed of? I know that these matters are taken up with much dispatch by the Department and I have been unwilling to trouble you even with this letter, but Mr. Low's friends are quite pressing with me, and as I fully understand Mr. Low is not aware of any grounds against him except his Southern residence I should be very glad to hear either that he will be released or that some examination will be had in his case wherein he may meet the charges against him. * * *

Very truly, yours,

WM. M. EVARTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 4, 1861.
WILLIAM M. EVARTS, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 3d instant, and have brought the subject to which it relates before the Secretary of State. In reply I am directed by him to inform you that the release of Mr. Andrew Low at the present time is deemed inexpedient.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, December 17, 1861.

IN THE MATTER OF ANDREW LOW, A PRISONER:

I observe in looking at the memoranda connected with this matter shown me at the Department of State two principal suggestions as to Mr. Low's relations or conduct in support of his continued imprisonment.

First. He is said to have acted as "a commissioner of the Confederate loan." Thus nakedly stated this would seem to be a somewhat grave matter, but when examined it amounts to nothing more than is implied in his present unwillingness to take our oath of allegiance, to wit, that he has not heretofore (as he is not disposed to do now) taken sides against the sentiments and action of the community in which he lives. I understand that Mr. Low has never assumed any duty or taken any part in aid of the Confederate loan. The place of commissioner assigned to him consisted only in his being named in a list of prominent business men of Savannah who were expected to act in furthering subscriptions. The list was made out at Richmond and Mr. Low's name inserted without his knowledge or assent. Mr. Low submitted to this after it was done but nothing more. There was no office or function which called upon him for its rejection or resignation and he never performed any act.

Second. A suspicion of Mr. Low's having been connected with the voyage of the steamer Bermuda and with the agent of the Confederate Government aboard is introduced upon the evidence of a letter in the possession of Mr. Green, of Savannah, when the latter was arrested. However just the suspicion might be in reference to the Mr. Low mentioned in that letter, Mr. Andrew Low should not suffer from it. An entirely different person with whom he has no connection by blood or otherwise, who is a brother-in-law of Green, is the person intended by that reference.

Having thus met the main grounds of imputation against Mr. Andrew Low beyond the mere fact of his being a Savannah merchant of wealth and character, I may add upon the reliable statements of trustworthy men—

First. That Mr. Low went to Europe wholly for his private interests and was careful whether in going, while there or in returning to abstain from any act or intervention (even to the extent of carrying a letter) in behalf of the Confederate interests.

Second. That his return to this country was prompted wholly by the motive of placing Mrs. Low with her children who had been left in Georgia with her relatives.

Third. That Mr. Low is a gentleman of high personal character and that his parole will be observed with the strictest integrity.

Fourth. That as a man of wealth and of sober, prudent character, capable of sensible ideas, his presence at the South is more likely to count in the scale of Union than of secession when the period of reaction arrives.

Upon all the facts of the case in behalf of Mr. Low I respectfully ask:

First. That Mrs. Low, now residing in Baltimore, be permitted to go South to join her family. Her separation at once from her husband and from her own family is made especially trying by her now expecting her confinement.

Second. That Mr. Low be released from actual imprisonment upon such conditions as to residence and under such restrictions as holding intercourse with the South as may be expedient.

Third. That in any case a permission may be given to Mr. George B. Blake, of Boston, to visit Mr. Low at Fort Warren. Mr. Blake is well known to me as a loyal and wholly reliable man.

WM. M. EVARTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 6, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th of November last inclosing the copy of a letter from Mr. Charles Green, an alleged British subject, imprisoned in Fort Warren, relative to a certain letter containing valuable papers taken from him, and to the arrest of his sister Mrs. John Low, and asking for information concerning these two arrests.

No time was lost in issuing an order for the release of Mrs. Low,* and I was under the impression that immediately thereupon you had been advised of that fact and that the Department had also communicated to you the papers referred to by Mr. Green. In this, however, I was mistaken. It would seem that by some accident the papers got mislaid. Regretting the circumstance I now hasten to repair the omission by transmitting them to you.

I avail myself of this opportunity to offer to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: Representations are made to this Department by the friends of the Government of the United States favorable to the release of Mr. Andrew Low, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren. The gentlemen making these representations seem to be of opinion that there is no well-founded reason for continuing his confinement. Under these circumstances I have to request that you will examine the papers† herewith inclosed and proceed to Fort Warren and take such additional testimony as may be offered and return to this Department with your opinion thereon these inclosures.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

He is a man of large fortune and wide-spread and influential moneyed connections. His estate is chiefly in the rebel States but does not as I think consist to any considerable extent of plantations or slaves. I do not learn that he has any property in the free loyal States except stock interests in the iron mines of Lake Superior. He is of English extraction and perhaps born in England. His family connections are chiefly there. His estate is largely composed of funds and personal property and therefore exposed to confiscation and plunder by the pretended authority of the Confederate Government in case he should exhibit Union views. From these circumstances it is inferred that his interests and sympathies are naturally Southern and English and therefore hostile.

† Not inclosed, but see preceding statements.

There is nothing to show that he has ever been a politician or that he is a conspirator and it is clear that he is a non-combatant. It appears that he was named as one of the commissioners of the Confederate loan in Savannah and that he did not decline the position. He alleges, no doubt with truth that he did not act as commissioner, but it would not have offended his sense of propriety probably if the whole loan had been taken through the influence of his name. On the other hand it is not unlikely that refusal of that position would have driven him from the South robbed of his property and therefore that his compliance was under restraint to that extent. He went to England in July, 1861, apparently on private business. There is no evidence that while abroad he interested himself in the public concerns of this country, North or South. On the contrary several worthy persons who were familiar with his actions certify that his non-intervention was real and complete.

When arrested nothing was found to implicate him in any disloyal proceedings. Indeed there is evidence of his having acted the part of prudence most thoroughly, while the condition of his estate and family (especially the latter) were such as to excuse the strongest solicitude to return to Georgia. Mr. Andrew Low had for partner in the firm of Andrew Low & Co., Mr. Charles Green, also a prisoner in Fort Warren, and it would seem from papers found on Mr. Green that they were probably brothers-in-law as well as partners. The circumstances that have transpired have created the impression that Mr. Green and his family are disposed to be active traitors. This relation has been prejudicial to the case of Mr. Low. A careful scrutiny, however, shows that Mr. Low and Mr. Green have dissolved partnership and separated their business interests for the future, and that such differences and divergencies have occurred to preclude the idea of any sympathy in business or other transaction. Mr. Low's estate is in such condition as to [be] put in peril by any active adhesion to the cause of the United States. He will of course, indeed does, decline to take the oath of allegiance.

My conclusion is that Andrew Low is at present from interest, sympathy, education and prejudice a disloyal man, and if permitted to go South or to England would from necessity throw his influence against the cause of the United States. But he has been represented to be an honorable and upright man in business and personal relations and that his promise could be relied on implicitly. He is clearly no conspirator and has no political ambition to mislead him. Good and true men who have known him long express the highest degree of confidence that he would keep any parole that he would give. All this I believe. If this view of Mr. Low's character is not mistaken the public safety would not be compromised by allowing him his liberty or parole to live in the city of New York, with such conditions or restrictions as to holding intercourse by letter or otherwise as the Department may please to prescribe. This disposition of the case I would recommend.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 8, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston Harbor.

COLONEL: You may release Mr. Andrew Low upon his engaging upon honor that he will proceed at once to Baltimore, Md., and report himself each day to Maj. Gen. John A. Dix, or such other person as he (General Dix) shall designate, and at the expiration of the period of sixty days from the date of his release he will voluntarily return and surrender himself to you to be recommitted to the fort, and that in the meantime he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government, nor hold any correspondence with any person residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State, nor be engaged in any treasonable communication with any person whatsoever nor do any act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, March 1, 1862.

Hon. FRED. W. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I find that I need to trouble you again in Mr. Andrew Low's case. The order of the State Department in his case of February 8 ultimo leaves him a quasi prisoner, whereas had he been actually in Fort Warren when the general order respecting political prisoners took effect he would have been enlarged on simple parole with the rest. I am told that to set him right his special parole (which obliges him to report daily in Baltimore and to return to Fort Warren in sixty days) will need to be canceled and the common parole substituted. Upon seeing the new order of the Secretary of War appointing a special commission I at first thought my proper application would be to these commissioners, but on reflection am satisfied that Mr. Low was intended to be put on the footing of release on parole. May I ask that you would be so good as to make the proper order?

Yours, very truly,

WM. M. EVARTS.

BALTIMORE, March 7, 1862.

Major-General DIX, &c.

GENERAL: In view of your commission to investigate the cases of prisoners of state and in order that you may apprehend my own I beg leave to submit to you a statement of the charges which so far as I understand them have detained me a prisoner.

First. On my return from England via Canada I was arrested on the 3d of November in Cincinnati on a charge of bearing treasonable correspondence. I had been in that city five days openly seeking to procure a military pass for myself and wife, and failing to do so had paid my fare to Washington to try and procure one at headquarters when I was arrested and sent off to Fort Warren. There was no foundation for this charge as I positively declined to take with me any letter or paper on ordinary or private business. My own and wife's baggage was for three hours subjected to the closest scrutiny and nothing was found for there was nothing to find. I would also state that I never saw and have never seen the Confederate commissioners, Messrs. Yancey and Mann, nor did I hold any communication with them either directly or indirectly.

Second. That I was under suspicion from certain causes of being connected with enterprises to furnish the Confederates with munitions of war, &c. This is utterly untrue. So far from this being the case I carefully avoided doing anything in England in violation of my neutrality. My sole business there was of an urgent, private nature, viz, to attend to arranging a dissolution of my copartnership and to see after the welfare of two young daughters I have at school in Brighton. Abundant evidence has been furnished the commissioner of the State Department, Mr. Hawley, by friends who were aware of all my actions, movements and opinions.

Another charge is that I was a commissioner of the Confederate loan and which came to the knowledge of the Government after I was imprisoned some time. The explanation of that charge is this: Some time in May or June the Confederate Government in Montgomery appointed three commissioners for Georgia to attend to a loan of $15,000,000. These gentlemen resided in the interior and without consulting me on the subject named myself and two other gentlemen as references for the city of Savannah. I gave the matter very little thought; the whole thing was managed by a bank. I never received nor had the custody of any money and never corresponded with the Government or any of its agents on that or any other subject. I do not hold myself responsible in any way for this and you cannot fail to see the situation. The State of Georgia had asserted its sovereignty. A new government was placed over me, and I cannot think that I should be held responsible and punished for events over which I had no control nor taken any part in bringing about, but on the contrary.

In the fullest confidence that you will give my case a just consideration, and that you will release me from my present unfortunate and painful position, I am, with respect, your obedient servant,

AND. LOW.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 12, 1862.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore.

GENERAL: You will discharge Mr. Andrew Low from the conditions of his present parole and furnish him with a pass to enable him to go beyond the lines of the U. S. Army upon his engaging upon honor that he will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States and also that he will not communicate to the persons in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States any information calculated to aid them, and that at the expiration of the period of three months he will report himself to the Secretary of War unless during that time he shall effect the discharge of a political prisoner whose exchange shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

Case of Matthew F. and Rutson Maury, Jr.

M. F. Maury, a British subject residing at New Orleans, was arrested at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 7th day of November, 1861, by the U. S. marshal of the northern district of Ohio acting by direction of the Secretary of State. He was taken to Fort Lafayette and afterwards transferred to Fort Warren. Maury's offense was conveying letters to and from the rebel States, between those States and others of the United States and foreign countries. Some hundreds of letters addressed to parties in the rebel States were found in his possession. It is shown by the affidavits of Mr. Taylor and Mr. Patterson that Maury voluntarily told them that he had been engaged in conveying letters both ways between New York and New Orleans; had brought some 700 from New Orleans and was carrying a quantity to that place on his return. Maury states the same in a letter by him addressed to the Department of State. On the 5th of February, 1862, Colonel Dimick was instructed to release Maury on his undertaking under oath not to enter or correspond with any insurrectionary State nor do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection.

Rutson Maury, jr., late of Galveston, Tex., was arrested at Washington on or about the 9th day of November, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State and conveyed to Fort Lafayette and there confined. He was charged on information communicated from the U. S. marshal for the northern district of Ohio through the Attorney-General and from the U. S. collector at Cleveland through the Treasury Department with conveying correspondence to and from the States under insurrectionary control, between those States and the loyal States and Europe. Maury came from the South to New York and Boston about the 10th of October, 1861, and according to a statement made by William L. Burt, of Boston—

He stated to various parties that he brought on letters from the South—over 1,000—protected by the consular seal of British Consul Mure, of New Orleans. He delivered a great many letters and stated in my presence that he forwarded English letters that he brought through.

Maury started for the South by way of Cleveland and Louisville in the early part of November, 1861, and on or about the 4th day of that month his baggage was seized at Cleveland and several hundred letters were found in his possession addressed to persons in New Orleans and other places in the insurrectionary States. He left Cleveland for Washington with the object of soliciting the release of his baggage and was arrested in Washington as above stated. The U. S. marshal for the northern district of Ohio informs the Attorney-General that he has satisfactory evidence that Maury had made systematic arrangements—

For the regular transmission of letters to and from the States in rebellion, embracing both foreign and domestic correspondence. Foreign letters intended for New Orleans and other Southern points are sent by mail to houses in New York and probably Boston whence they are systematically delivered to carriers for him, who undertake their transmission clandestinely to their destination or to New Orleans for distribution.

Maury having been detected in the criminal act with which he is charged no attempt has been made to deny or conceal his guilt. The said Maury remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Cincinnati, Ohio, November 4, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: A man by the name of Rutson Maury, who is as I am informed a resident of New Orleans, came to this city October 26, and on the 28th of the same month he left here saying that he was going to Washington City. I have since his departure ascertained that he was a bearer of written dispatches, and I now have in my possession a large number of letters left by him with a friend in this city. He had a large cloth belt made which he wore about his body, having the letters sewed up in the belt. Some of the letters are open which I have read and they are of a treasonable character.

Shall I send the letters to you and arrest Maury if he returns to this city? R. M. N. Taylor, of Cleveland, Ohio, has important information in reference to Maury's visit South.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. SANDS,
U. S. Marshal.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Cleveland, November 5, 1861.

Hon. EDWARD BATES, Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: From facts that have come within my knowledge of late I am satisfied that systematic arrangements exist at New York for the regular transmission of letters to and from the States in rebellion embracing both foreign and domestic correspondence. Foreign letters intended for New Orleans and other Southern points are sent by mail to houses in New York and probably Boston, whence they are systematically delivered to carriers for hire who undertake their transmission clandestinely to their destination or to New Orleans for distribution.

Two of these carriers have during the last week had their baggage detained here, and secreted within it have been found large quantities of letters, in one instance (that of Rutson Maury) nearly 300 of them. Evidences have also been found with them of the systematic and periodical nature of the intended journeys through our lines.

In view of these facts I respectfully inquire whether the arrest of these contraband mail carriers is desired by the Government? Under the telegraphic instructions of the honorable Postmaster-General the letters have been seized and forwarded to Washington, but thus far no arrests have been made. Your early reply will much oblige.

Respectfully, yours,

EARL BILL,
U. S. Marshal.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, November 7, 1861.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

I have this day arrested Matthew F. Maury, of New Orleans. In his trunk found about 200 letters to various points in rebellious States. His business evidently letter carrying between New York and New Orleans. What shall I do with him?

EARL BILL,
Marshal Northern District of Ohio.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 7, 1861.

EARL BILL, U. S. Marshal, Cleveland:

Send Matthew F. Maury to Fort Lafayette, N. Y., and send the papers to the State Department.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Cleveland, November 7, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Referring to the telegraphic dispatch I had the honor to send you of this date and in further explanation of the matter therein mentioned I beg further to say that about the 28th of October a trunk or valise belonging to one Rutson Maury was seized by the inspector of the revenue at this place containing (as then disclosed) some seventy-nine or eighty letters directed to persons at various points and places in the States in rebellion against the Government. On the 2d instant M. F. Maury passed through here on his way South and his trunk was also seized by the inspector. In it were found twenty packages of letters having a destination beyond the lines of the Government forces, the number estimated at from 600 to 700. Both trunks are still held, information having been filed and proceedings commenced for confiscation under the act of Congress of July 13, 1861, and now remain in my hands under process of attachment duly issued.

On a close investigation a secret pocket was found in R. Maury's valise in which were stowed about 200 more letters having destination like those mentioned above, among which I found one unsealed addressed to "James Maury, New Orleans," informing him that the writer would be in New Orleans November 8, and ready to leave on the succeeding 11th, to which were appended the words "You understand," signed "M. F. M." I was therefore led to conclude that both Maurys—who I learn are brothers—were jointly engaged in the regular and systematic transmission of information by letters and perhaps otherwise across the lines of our armies, and made such arrangements as were intended to secure the persons of either or both of them should they be found in my district. This I have been induced to believe was my official duty and in accordance with the desire of the Government as expressed in the telegraphic circular of the honorable Postmaster-General under date of — August, in which he says, "The President * * * directs that his proclamation of the 16th instant interdicting commercial intercourse with the South shall be applied also to correspondence; and wherein he directs the arrest of any person who after this order shall receive letters for transmission to or from said States, &c." Under these circumstances it was that I respectfully asked the instructions of the Government as to what disposition to make of M. F. Maury, who is in my custody without a formal warrant. Permit me to add that all the letters taken as above stated have been duly forwarded to Washington pursuant to the instructions of the Postmaster-General.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

EARL BILL,
U. S. Marshal.

OFFICE OF SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, November 7, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: The papers announce the arrest of M. F. Maury at Cleveland with a bag of letters, &c., on Saturday last. He is the same person to whom allusion was made in mine of 3d instant as carrying on a messenger express between New York and New Orleans. I understand him to be a relative of Lieutenant Maury; that he has been residing in Galveston, Tex., where he is connected with a mercantile house; that the firm of Maury Bros., No. 5 Hanover street, New York, are his near relatives and business correspondents. In searching I find that his rates were $2.50 per half ounce. Those at a distance were instructed to forward their letters for him to the address of "Donald Rose, care of Maury Bros., New York." I send you this additional information in order that interested friends may not succeed by misrepresentations to have him released before he is fairly in custody.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, November 8, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I inclose herewith two letters from Charles J. Ballard, collector at Cleveland, Ohio, giving particulars concerning the case of Mr. R. Maury. Mr. Maury has evidently been engaged in conveying correspondence into the States under insurrectionary control and should be arrested. By the proclamation of the President the insurrectionary States are placed in the position of public enemies; to carry correspondence between them and the loyal States is to render them aid and comfort; to render such aid and comfort is treason. Mr. Maury is in the city.

Yours, truly,

S. P. CHASE.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Cleveland, November 4, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

DEAR SIR: Yours of 1st instant asking me to report particulars concerning R. Maury's case is just received. In reply would say in the first place that his letter to Secretary Seward* (a copy of which was sent) sounds very nice taken in connection with facts that we are in possession of here. The trunk of said Maury contained a small quantity of gentleman's clothing, dress patterns, dry goods of different kinds in small quantities, drugs, toilet articles, &c., and when first opened some eighty letters directed to different parts of the Southern Confederacy were found, the majority of which were directed to New Orleans. Upon a more thorough examination of said trunk some 200 more letters similarly directed were found secreted in the partition that separates the top from the lower part of said trunk. Said letters have been delivered to the postmaster here and will I suppose in due time be forwarded to the Postmaster-General.

Some five days after the seizure of R. Maury, jr.'s trunk we seized a trunk belonging to M. F. Maury who is without doubt a brother of R. Maury. The latter trunk contained in connection with other things from 200 to 300 letters directed to different parts of the South, more to New Orleans than to any one other place. We think from the circumstances connected with the seizure of their two trunks that these Maurys are engaged in the transmission of correspondence from the loyal to the disloyal States and vice versa.

* Probably refers to Matthew F. Maury to Seward, ante.

A good many of the packages were marked "unpaid;" others not marked thus. I would infer from this they get pay for conveying said letters, some of which they obtain North and some South. Some of said letters are from Liverpool, some from Paris, others from New York, &c. Some of the foreign letters were sent to care of parties in this country whose names are now cut out. I think there are regular headquarters in New York and Boston where these letters are collected together, and I would not wonder if it was at Maury Bros., New York, and Henry C. Wainwright, No. 20 State street, Boston. We find by papers in one of said trunks that there is a time fixed to leave New Orleans (on their return we suppose), which is November 11.

In short we are fully of the opinion that we have been lucky enough to intercept two of the regular mails that are being carried from North to South and from South to North. Upon the return of R. Maury from Cincinnati it was reported to him that we had found in his trunk some seventy-nine letters. If he had known of our finding the some 200 letters secreted in partition I do not think he would have made the effort to get possession of his trunk, but by getting his trunk he hoped and expected to get the secreted letters. The place of secretion would not hold all that he had and the seventy-nine or eighty were in the pockets of his clothes.

Procedure for forfeiture has been commenced in the U. S. court here against the trunk and contents (except letters) of R. Maury, jr.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES J. BALLARD,
Collector.

COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Cleveland, November 5, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

DEAR SIR: Since writing the letter that accompanies this I have learned some facts concerning R. Maury, jr., that I thought best to communicate. When in this city trying to have his baggage released he was quite free with a certain person here. He said to him that circumstances connected with himself were such that he should not think at all strange if he was sent to Fort Lafayette, and instructed him what to do concerning his effects if such should be the case. He as much as acknowledged that he knew he was violating the laws of the land, and said if he were shot or his head pulled off or whatever was done to him he never would reveal who put this correspondence into his possession to carry South.

He had several hundred dollars in gold when here (this we learned after he left). We have just learned that he left a package in safe at Burnet House, Cincinnati. We have not learned what the contents of said package is but have learned that the same has been seized by U. S. officer. This package may contain correspondence of such a nature that he dare not put the same in his trunk. He says he is cousin to Lieutenant Maury.

I believe this whole Maury tribe are as full of secesh as an egg is of meat.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES J. BALLARD,
Collector.

NEW YORK, November 11, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I learn that my nephew Matthew Fontaine Maury, a cotton broker at New Orleans, was arrested in Ohio on his way to New Orleans and a number of letters found in his trunk and that he has been lodged in Fort Lafayette. I hear the same also of another nephew, Rutson Maury, jr., but of this I am not so certainly informed. In the first case his trunk and all his clothing and effects (except what he had on) have been seized and taken from him and it may be the same with Rutson. I therefore hope that you will at least order the trunks, &c., to be delivered to them, if not their release from confinement, for I have no idea that they had any treasonable intentions. It has been said in the New York papers I think of one or both of them that they have served in the Southern army, or are members of it, but this is not true. It has also been said that they came northward for the sole purpose of carrying a mail, which is not true either.

There are four brothers of them in commercial business in the South, and as they were all in a state of destitution the question was should they go into the army or try to get a support in some other way. They decided against the army, and the chief object of M. F. Maury in coming here was to bring a bill of his brother James on Liverpool for £120 for negotiation as it could not be negotiated at New Orleans and the chief object of Rutson was to receive some money due to him in Boston as a member of the late firm of Maury & Wilder at Galveston, and which he suspected and with reason that his partner (Wilder) now in Boston would appropriate to his (Wilder's) own use. The carrying of letters was a mere incident, as I believe, to the chief object of the journey in both cases. They found they could eke out their slender resources (both having been almost wholly disappointed in their chief objects in coming North) by carrying letters, but I am told they stipulated expressly that the letters should be purely commercial or family letters and that they should be open or authority given to open them themselves and that they should contain nothing of a treasonable nature.

Under these circumstances I hope that you will not think my application unreasonable. Their parents have both been dead some years and they have their way to make in the world. You knew Sarah Mytton Maury, their mother, when she was in the United States some years ago. M. F. Maury is unmarried. Rutson has left a wife and child in the South who are destitute of support. Both are in delicate health and may require some attention. I therefore hope you will also give permission for their brother, Walker Maury, of New York, to see them occasionally.

It is perhaps due to myself to say that neither I nor my house have received any letters from our correspondents in the South nor written any thither since the prohibition (though our business required it to be done) except the advice from New Orleans of the bill for £120. If Commodore Du Pont were here he among others could well vouch for my loyalty from first to last.

With much respect, I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

MATTHEW MAURY.

BOSTON, November 12, 1861.

Hon. JOHN A. KENNEDY, Superintendent of Police.

MY DEAR SIR: I see by the telegraph that "Jutson" Maury was arrested in Washington at the Treasury Department and will probably come under your care. The name should be Rutson Maury, jr. He belongs in Galveston, Tex., and was a member of the firm of Maury & Wilder. He is a secessionist and came North from New Orleans arriving in New York about the 10th of October, bringing some thousand letters as he stated of all kinds and for secession as well as commercial purposes. He stated that he brought letters under the seal of the British consulate (from Mr. Mure, the British consul in New Orleans) containing secession information, &c., for parties here and abroad.

I think evidence can be obtained showing that he was personally employed by the rebels, thinking to use his British citizenship as a protection. He has stated to parties who can be produced before the rebellion that he was born in Virginia and I think can claim nothing on that score probably. I think I can put you in possession of any reasonable amount of testimony in reference to him and had endeavored myself to see that he was arrested when he first left New York for the South nearly two weeks since, but the party failed to find you in New York.

If any information further than you have is wanted in reference to Rutson Maury, jr., or Matthew Fontaine Maury, arrested in Cleveland, Ohio, his brother, let me know. If you wish any further information as to how you hear from me, &c., I have inclosed card to Frank E. Howe, the Massachusetts agent in Broadway just below the Astor.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM L. BURT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 16, 1861.

JONATHAN AMORY, Esq., Boston, Mass.

SIR: I transmit herewith a copy of a letter written by William L. Burt, esq., attorney and counselor at law, whose office is at 46 Washington street, Boston, received from John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police, New York. Will you have the kindness to call upon the writer and obtain from him a statement under oath of all the facts and circumstances in reference to the Maurys in his possession and forward them to this Department by post as soon as you conveniently can?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 18, 1861.

JOHN S. KEYES, Esq., U. S. Marshal, Boston, Mass.

SIR: From letters found in possession of the Maurys who were recently arrested it appears that Henry C. Wainwright, of Boston, has been in the habit of receiving and forwarding correspondence between parties in the insurrectionary States and their sympathizers in Europe as well as in the North. Will you please place him under surveillance and make a thorough examination of his person and premises and secure all letters and other papers found thereon and remit them with your report to this Department?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 18, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: From extracts which were found in possession of the Maurys recently arrested for conveying information to the insurrectionary States it appears that the following persons in New York have been engaged in receiving and forwarding correspondence between parties in the insurrectionary States and their sympathizers in Europe as well as in the loyal States: John Munroe & Co., Charles Le Cesne, C. A. Robert, Maury Bros., and Mr. Converse.

Will you please cause a quiet but thorough watch to be kept over the movements of these parties and after the arrival of the next foreign mail place them under surveillance and seize all correspondence and other papers and send them with your report to this Department?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 19, 1861.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

COLONEL: You will permit Mr. Archibald, the British consul at New York, to see Rutson Maury, * * * a British subject now confined at Fort Lafayette.

I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, November 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The Postmaster-General submits to your notice the accompanying letter from William L. Burt, esq., and will be glad to receive any suggestion you may desire to make as to the matter to which it relates.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

T. P. TROTT,
Chief Clerk.

BOSTON, November 15, 1861.

Hon. MONTGOMERY BLAIR, U. S. Postmaster-General.

DEAR SIR: I telegraphed you* relative to the letters of Rutson Maury, jr., and Maury & Wilder, as I knew that Rutson Maury, jr., had been arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette and these letters if resent, whether directed to him or to James Maury & Co., New Orleans, or Maury & Wilder, Galveston, Tex., probably contained information and plans to carry out a scheme to have all the cotton in the exposed Southern ports transferred to English hands. This plan in event of confiscation or capture would save the cotton and in event the ports were opened it would be ready for a profitable market.

Maury is an Englishman undoubtedly, although he has said at times he was an American and has been spending his time in Louisiana and Alabama since last spring and is in open sympathy and action with the rebels. He stated here in Boston that he brought more than a thousand letters through from the South; also that he had the seal of the British consul (Mure) at New Orleans to protect the inclosures for Southern agents abroad. Maury and his brother were engaged in this scheme for getting letters through probably from the fact of their English origin and acquaintance.

The letters were delivered to Mr. Wainwright here in Boston before your dispatch arrived. Four of them for Rutson Maury, jr., seven of them for James Maury & Co., of New Orleans, were forwarded to Maury Bros., New York, by Mr. Wainwright before we could stop them, and I have requested the postmaster here to telegraph Mr. Kennedy, chief of police, to call for the letters in New York as having been improperly delivered. This scheme for transferring all the cotton in the South to English hands for a nominal price is being carried out systematically and agents are now employed in Southern cities to take the transfers. The more the Government can learn of this the better they can meet it. Letters with the same superscription as above will come for Maury by every steamer now from Europe till his arrest is known there. These letters will pass through the Boston and New York offices. Those in Boston being directed probably to care of Henry C. Wainwright and very likely all the letters for delivery will be directed to him or to his care.

Mr. Wainwright is entirely innocent in this matter no doubt, but is used by Maury from the fact that he has been the agent for these parties before, and is now by appointment from our court the receiver of the late firm of Maury & Wilder. These letters for the next few weeks so directed will probably contain much political information, and ought in some way to be in the control of the Government. You will see the importance of the suggestion, and I presume Mr. Wainwright whenever English letters are delivered to him will be willing to satisfy the postmaster, Mr. Palfrey, that the contents or inclosures are not for Maury or his friends, and if for them that the contents are legitimate.

A letter in reference to the Maurys is on file in the State Department. I have troubled you with this communication believing that I possess some information that the Government could use to advantage. I was surprised that letters should be ordered to be delivered without an examination to parties under arrest.

I am, yours, &c.,

WILLIAM L. BURT.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Boston, November 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to report that * * * Matthew F. Maury, who was committed to Fort Independence on Monday last, but for whom no arrangements had been made, was delivered to me by Lieutenant-Colonel McPherson, in command there, and transferred by me to Fort Warren. Colonel McPherson is about to leave for the West where he is ordered to report to General Halleck, and as his absence will leave the fort without an officer he obtained General Butler's order for the transfer of Maury to Fort Warren, and I transferred him accordingly. * * *

Your obedient servant,

JOHN S. KEYES,
U. S. Marshal.

BOSTON, November 19, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Your esteemed favor of 16th instant was only received this morning with copy of note from William L. Burt, esq. I immediately called on that gentleman who tells me that he will commit to paper his reasons for knowing Mr. Maury, to whom you allude, to be "a dangerous secessionist." He gave me much reason to think him so. The

Mr. Wainwright to whose care the letters were intrusted is a distant relative of mine and he was at the time acting under the court in winding up the affairs of Maury & Wilder, and I obtained from him the within account of his transactions, and as he advised my writing to Mr. Kennedy to demand the letters of Maury Bros. sent them by Mr. Wainwright I have done so. I trust that you may obtain valuable information from that quarter. I am under the impression that this Mr. Maury undertook to send letters at $2.50 per ounce. I shall probably receive by to-morrow morning Mr. Burt's promised communication.

I remain, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JONATHAN AMORY,
U. S. Dispatch and Passport Agent.

[Inclosure.]

BOSTON, November 19, 1861.

J. AMORY, Esq.

DEAR SIR: With regard to your inquiries this morning as to my relations with Mr. R. Maury, jr., I first became acquainted with him a year ago and have since then been agent in this city for his firm, Maury & Wilder, of Galveston, Tex. During the summer the firm was dissolved and I acted as his agent until October when he arrived here. The firm being embarrassed I was appointed by the supreme judicial court of this Commonwealth as the receiver. He soon after left for the South and I now understand that he is under arrest by order of the Government. On the 13th instant I received a notice through the post-office that eighteen letters from the Dead-Letter Office were received for me. The next day I received another notice and then called and took the letters and sent eleven to Maury Bros., New York. Seven of them were directed to R. Maury, jr., and four to J. Maury & Co., New Orleans. I retained seven directed to Maury & Wilder, and they were opened and examined in the presence of Mr. Burt and found to be purely of a business character.

I regret that I sent the eleven letters to New York but it never occurred to me that there could be anything in them except business or family matters. I have never seen or corresponded with M. F. Maury.

Your obedient servant,

HENRY C. WAINWRIGHT.

OFFICE OF SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, November 20, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: This morning I received a letter from Mr. Jonathan Amory, agent, Boston, informing me that Mr. Henry C. Wainwright had sent eleven letters to the care of Messrs. Maury Bros., 5 Hanover street, for Mr. Rutson Maury, jr. I immediately dispatched one of my force to obtain those letters and any others in their possession. He returned with the inclosed letters* addressed to sundry persons in the rebel States, being fifteen more than the number forwarded by Mr. Wainwright. No sort of objection was made by the Mr. Maury in charge when the demand was made.

*Omitted as unimportant.

A package of other papers belonging to the firm of Maury Bros. was brought to me but upon examination I do not find anything in them to justify their being withheld and shall restore them.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

I sent forward the envelope with the letters referred to above but omitted to place this* in it. If I have put in another in mistake please return the same.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 21, 1861.
HON. MONTGOMERY BLAIR, Postmaster-General, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 19th instant inclosing a letter from William L. Burt, esq., of Boston, relative to correspondence intended for the insurgents addressed to their agents in Europe under cover to Mr. Wainwright, of Boston. In reply I have to suggest that since Mr. Wainwright appears to be a loyal citizen the postmaster at Boston be directed to deliver the letters to him, but at the same time to inform him that inasmuch as letters relative to plans for breaking the blockade and furnishing information to the insurgents have passed through his hands it is expected that hereafter he (Wainwright) will not send such letters forward but that when he comes in possession of any treasonable correspondence he will deliver it to the U. S. marshal for the district of Massachusetts to be forwarded to this Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal, New York.

SIR: It has been intimated to this Department that M. S. officers of the northern district of Ohio who have filed a libel for the confiscation of the same with their contents. You will please ascertain the facts and take [such] measures as may be necessary to provide the Maurys with needful clothing.

Assistant Secretary.

BOSTON, November 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request of your Department please find below the information in reference to the Maury's that I have been able to obtain for you.

Rutson Maury, jr., is some twenty-eight or thirty years of age, and has been engaged in business for the last few years in Galveston, Tex. He has been one of the partners of the firm of Maury & Wilder, of Galveston, Tex., cotton buyers. Since the beginning of the difficulties with the South Maury has freely expressed his sympathy with and confidence in the success of the rebellion. About the 16th of April last (1861) he left Galveston and went to Montgomery, Ala., and as he stated saw the officers of the rebel government and for purposes which he did not he said wish to have known. He went I think from there to Charleston, S. C., and thence to Washington and New York. He was North until about May 6 when he left Boston and New York for Washington and the South. He stated in the cars on his way that if he carried through certain matters for the South that he had in his charge he was to receive $500 and his expenses paid, and he sent through all his luggage consisting of several trunks by express taking nothing with himself but a small satchel. He did not, however, return to Galveston, but was at the South—in New Orleans, Mobile and other places—and during the month of August was at Cullum's Springs, Choctaw County, Ala.

In September he went to Galveston, and from there back to New Orleans and then started North. He came by the way of Louisville and arrived here probably not far from the 10th or 12th of October. He stated to various parties that he brought on letters from the South—over a thousand—protected by the consular seal of British Consul Mure, of New Orleans. He delivered a great many letters, and stated in my presence that he forwarded English letters that he brought through. He delivered letters to Lewis L. Squier or Squires, but whether political or not I do not know—probably not, however. He delivered letters and made statements to John P. Ritter, No. 132 Broadway, New York City. He told Mr. Ritter how he brought the letters from New Orleans; of the abuse of the consul's seal. He said he was on his journey stopped by the officials; paid them $100 to permit him to take his packages through.

His arrangements for correspondence have been made, and the letters are to come to the care of or under cover to Henry C. Wainwright, of Boston, as I have suggested in a previous letter to the Post-Office Department, and to Mr. Jonathan Amory, U. S. dispatch agent here. And I think it all important that their contents should be known to the Government. The other letter will convey all the information upon this point that I have.

The family consists of brothers James Maury, of New Orleans; Rutson Maury, jr., now under arrest; William Maury, of the firm of Maury & Hogg, of New Orleans; Matthew F. Maury, clerk for James Rareside, of New Orleans, also under arrest; Walker Maury, clerk for Maury Bros., New York (Maury Bros. are uncles), and another brother who is preparing for some profession in New York. As to what Maury undertook to carry South in the shape of letters, correspondence, &c., the Department of course have the best information in the letters themselves.

Mr. Wilder, of the firm of Maury & Wilder, is here in Boston and a native of Massachusetts, his father being a manufacturer in the town of Lancaster, Mass. He can be seen at my office at any time and will give with pleasure any information in this or any matter that will assist the Government. He has been to Washington once in reference to affairs in Texas and will probably be on again before long. The firm of Maury & Wilder had all their property that is left them in the shape of cotton in the hands of George M. Barnard, of Boston, and one small consignment to Liverpool. The debts here will probably exhaust the funds if a settlement is ever made and I am not aware that Maury has any other pecuniary interest in any matters that the Government can reach. Mr. Wainwright (Henry C.) is acting as receiver for the firm and for that reason and his previous acquaintance probably he acted as the agent for receiving and transmitting Maury's correspondence. Mr. Wainwright says he never directed or requested the letters forwarded to him for the Maurys by the Post-Office Department and if he did of course that Department has his letter or letters on file. It may be that Maury signed his name without his knowledge or authority. I should like to know the facts. Will you see how the matter is in the Post-Office Department?

Yours, truly,

WM. L. BURT.

NEW YORK, November 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose a letter from Mr. Maury. He feels very bad. Can't you give instructions as to his letters? Certainly he is a loyal man and has so conducted himself all through these troubles. He is in business in this city and has many correspondents in England. The detention of his letters is a serious matter and may cause him much trouble.

I am, very truly, yours, &c.,

M. H. GRINNELL.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, November 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: When I returned to my office (Maury Bros.) two days ago after an absence of about two hours I found that two policemen had been there ransacking my papers and a tin bank box (which I held for another party and which contained about $80,000 of bonds and stocks), acting under an order from you or Superintendent Kennedy as I understood from the youth in my office. They carried off a number of letters, memoranda, &c., for which they gave no receipt. Superintendent Kennedy on my personal application has returned to me a quantity of papers and letters which he says are all that were taken except some letters which he has sent to you, but the truth of which I may be unable to ascertain for some time to come.

Among the letters sent to you are some dead letters which came to us from Boston and a portion of a quantity of letters received from Europe to be forwarded to the South and which have been accumulating for months (without our having forwarded any) though we wrote to England that we should not forward any until we could do so legally. Be good enough to return all these letters and any other papers to us.

I find to-day that our letters by the steamer Asia have been stopped by your order. A letter from Washington has been detained one day by being opened, and the delay of our letters by the previous steamer which I had supposed to be purely accidental has probably been caused by a like stoppage. I am aware that you have to do many things to guard against treason, &c., but I hereby protest against the aforementioned acts in behalf of my house, Maury Bros., in case any loss or damage should occur thereby. We suffer great inconvenience from not having our English letters because we cannot answer them by to-morrow's steamer, and very probably some loss of which I cannot judge until I get them. If it is necessary that the letters of my house should be stopped, but for which I know no other reason than that my name is Maury, I should be particularly obliged to you to name some person to read them here at the post-office that I may get them without greater delay than an hour or so.

As I have a suspicion that all these things are concocted by a conspiracy in Boston I asked Superintendent Kennedy whether the search arose from Walker Maury naming to his brother in Fort Lafayette that we had a number of letters for him (the dead letters before named) and of which information the policemen at the fort took a memorandum. He said "No." I then asked if it arose from information from Boston but he refused to answer. I have seen him again on this subject after first seeing Police Commissioner Bowen and he said the information was from your office. I then asked whether the order from you was the result of information received by him from Boston and sent to you which he refuses to tell me. It is important to trace up the origin of the whole matter and if the order upon which you acted came through Superintendent Kennedy I shall be obliged to you to send me an order to Superintendent Kennedy to tell me all about it. If not through him I shall be equally obliged by your giving me the information.

With much respect, I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

M. MAURY.

P. S.—I beg leave to add I feel that I have been treated with gross and careless injustice. An important reason for revoking the exequatur of Consul Barclay, of this city, during the Crimean war was that he had acted upon the information of policemen and spies in regard to the bark Maury instead of applying to Mr. A. A. Low, the owner, and to those who knew him and his business. I claim that I am entitled to the same consideration as Mr. A. A. Low. Nevertheless I am willing to pass over these indignities thus far if there is reason to suppose they were in any way necessary for the good of the country.

M. M.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Boston, November 23, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq.,

Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have duly received yours of the 15th and 18th instant and have previously written you of my action in the premises as directed by your telegram of the 15th instant. * * *

In the matter of Henry C. Wainwright I have had a conference with J. Amory, esq., U. S. dispatch agent, who informs me that he has written to you inclosing a letter from William L. Burt, esq., on the same subject. I then waited on Mr. Wainwright and saw and read all his letter books and accounts connected with the Maurys, and examined him in relation to them. His acquaintance began with R. Maury, jr., one year ago when he took the agency here for the firm of Maury & Wilder, of Galveston, Tex. Upon the return from the South in October of R. Maury, jr., several letters from Europe, which had been received by Mr. Wainwright from the Boston post-office, being directed to his care, were handed to R. Maury, jr., to whom they were addressed, and read by him in Wainwright's presence. They were business letters from a cotton house in Liverpool and Mr. Wainwright thinks had no improper communications in them; at any rate knew of none if there were any.

During Maury's stay in Boston he told Mr. Wainwright that he had or should write to the Dead-Letter Office for his letters to be sent to Boston and did so, but whether in Wainwright's name or in his own Wainwright does not remember. The notice of the Dead-Letter Office came to Wainwright after Maury had left, and he not understanding it waited till the Boston post-office notified him when he called and took the letters which had been forwarded from the Dead-Letter Office, seven of which being addressed to the firm of Maury & Wilder, of whom he is the receiver, he opened and found to be simply business letters. He has them still, and I examined them and could see nothing wrong in them. The other eleven which were addressed to the other Maury he sent to New York and informed Mr. Amory, so that they were obtained and you have them now. He has brought me another which arrived to-day by the Asia which I inclose* herewith.

The whole action on his part has been simply a straightforward business transaction and without a thought of harm. I think that R. Maury, jr., directed his European letters to be sent to the care of Mr. Wainwright, Boston, when he was going North, and then being in Boston he used Wainwright's name to get those from the Dead-Letter Office. Mr. Wainwright is a very sound, loyal Union man, and is very indignant that Maury should have done anything to compromise him. He is in the interests of Wilder against Maury in their partnership transactions, and will do everything fair and honorable to assist the Government.

If there are any facts beyond the direction of the letters to his care I should be glad to know them that I may make further inquiries, and would like also the order to the Dead-Letter Office that I may see if it is in Wainwright's handwriting.

* * * * * *

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN S. KEYES,
U. S. Marshal.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, November 23, 1861.
Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: A period of fourteen days has elapsed since my arrest in Washington and beyond the fact of letters on family and business relations to the best of my knowledge and belief which were handed to me by friends in New York being found in my baggage, I know of no charge that can be brought or exists against me. If any it is false. The contents of the letters I am totally ignorant of as I did not suppose any friend would knowingly act treasonably.

* Not found.

I can assure you on the honor of a gentleman that I have at no time had any communication or correspondence of a political character or been engaged in or a party to any act of rebellion with any person or persons either on this or the other side of the Atlantic, North, South, East or West. In evidence of my neutrality there is in possession of the Treasury Department a letter written by Mr. William Mure, Her Britannic Majesty's consul at New Orleans, which I handed to Mr. Harrington, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, prior to my arrest. My business alone and my family who arrived from England at New Orleans in May last have solely engrossed my attention since I left Liverpool twelve months since. My business as a cotton buyer for England and the North is at an end for some time, hence my object in going South was my family.

Now, sir, allow me to ask you as an act of humanity, looking at my guiltlessness of any intention of acting wrongfully, some clemency which I would also seek from the friendship and esteem felt by my mother (Mrs. Sarah M. Maury) toward yourself. My wife is and has been long an invalid, a stranger where she is (Bladen Springs, Ala.), and where she has been ever since her first arrival in this country and moreover destitute of funds as owing to the disturbed state of the country I could not draw a bill on any quarter prior to my leaving the South.

At least if I am still to remain in confinement allow me the privilege of knowing how long I am sentenced for, and if not asking you to grant too great a favor grant me a permit to write to my wife through General Wool at Fortress Monroe to inform her of my position.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

RUTSON MAURY, JR.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 29, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: The letter addressed to Maury Bros. sent hither shows that that house has been made a medium of communication for those violating the laws of the United States and of hostility to this Government. This ought not to be tolerated in view of the safety of the Government itself. If, however, the representative of the house at New York will give his parole that the practice shall be discontinued, and that he will receive and transmit no letters having for their object to evade the blockade or to do any other act of hostility toward the United States the correspondence of the house may then be delivered to them.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE OF SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: To-day I called on Messrs. Charles Le Cesne and Cæsar Augustus Robert and returned to them the letters you returned to me belonging to these gentlemen. They expressed themselves entirely satisfied with the course the Government had taken toward them; very satisfactorily explained the manner in which they were induced to forward letters South that had come into their possession in a legitimate way; readily agreed to any stipulation submitted in regard to the disposition of any similar letters they may receive.

On the contrary Mr. Maury endeavored to treat the proceeding lightly. He spoke very contemptuously of the course the Government had taken and derided the idea of two of his letters being treasonable. His remarks were rather defiant than otherwise when I deemed it proper to caution him that a continuance of the course he had heretofore pursued would subject him to be dealt with in a more decided manner. I delivered to him the three letters you returned to me.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

[BRITISH LEGATION,] Washington, December 3, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: The open letters which you were so good as to send to me with your informal note of the 30th ultimo were from Mr. Rutson Maury and Mr. Matthew F. Maury, two brothers, who are detained as political prisoners in Fort Lafayette.

On the case of Mr. Rutson Maury I have already had the honor to communicate with you.

Mr. Matthew F. Maury states that he believes that the offense for which he is imprisoned is that of carrying letters between the Northern and the Southern States. He declares that the letters of which he took charge with this object were simply private letters; that he practiced no concealment about them and that he was not conscious that in carrying them he was committing an act contrary to law. I do myself the honor to communicate these statements to you in the hope that they will receive due attention in the consideration of the case. Mr. Matthew F. Maury particularly requests that his trunk containing his personal effects, which appears to have been detained at Cleveland, may be restored to him. I write of course under the impression that Mr. Matthew F. Maury, as well as his brother, Mr. Rutson Maury, is a British subject who has not become a citizen of the United States.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

WASHINGTON, December 4, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: You were so good as to inform me in the note which you did me the honor to write to me on the 19th ultimo that orders had been given to permit Mr. Archibald, Her Majesty's consul at New York, to see Mr. Rutson Maury, a British subject confined as a political prisoner in Fort Lafayette.

I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of the report made to me by Mr. Archibald of the result of a visit which he paid to Mr. Maury in virtue of this permission. I trust that you will allow the statement made in it to have due weight in the consideration of Mr. Maury's case.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

BRITISH CONSULATE, New York, November 30, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, K. C. B., &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to report to your lordship that I have visited at Fort Lafayette Mr. Rutson Maury, jr., who was arrested at Washington about the 5th instant and subsequently transferred to Fort Lafayette. Mr. Maury is a native of England not naturalized in this country; is twenty-seven years of age and has resided for about a year at Galveston in Texas carrying on business there as a cotton broker. He is married and his wife and child are resident in Alabama.

Mr. Maury's business affairs having been greatly damaged by means of the civil war and as he states misconduct of his partner in business he came North to Boston where his partner resided in April, returned to New Orleans in May and from thence to Galveston where he remained until September when his business affairs again required his presence in Boston where he remained until some time in October when he came to New York and determined to return to New Orleans and rejoin his family in Alabama with the intention of spending the winter there.

While in the North he undertook to convey to the South a number of commercial letters almost all of which had been received from England, France and Germany addressed to commercial houses in the South. He received these letters, numbering in all some 200 or 300, from various persons. He says he did not consider it unlawful or improper for him to carry merely private or commercial letters such as these. While at Cleveland, Ohio, on his way South his baggage was taken possession of by the police and detained on account of letters being found in his trunk. Mr. Maury thereupon returned to Washington to obtain restitution of his luggage which after interviews which he had with some members of the Government was directed to be restored to him in case nothing more objectionable than what had been reported were discovered in his luggage. A further search being made more letters as Mr. Maury supposes were found in a secret compartment of his trunk which may not have been previously perceived. These letters he says were of the same character as those which had first been discovered no distinction being made in the packing of them away, and it being necessary on account of the number of them to make use of the secret compartment. On the report to the Government of this fresh discovery Mr. Maury was arrested and has since been detained as a prisoner.

Mr. Maury states that he has never at any time intermeddled in the politics of the country, and solemnly assures me that he has never in any way taken part with the insurgents; that reports which have gone abroad that he had served in the Southern army or militia are utterly unfounded; that in consenting to convey these commercial letters to the South which had been accumulating here for some time his object was in the first place to make his journey useful to parties who had been unable to communicate with their partners and agents in New Orleans on business matters, and secondly, although he made no stipulation to this effect, he hoped to receive some remuneration for the service which in his reduced circumstances would have contributed toward defraying expenses.

The ingenuousness with which Mr. Maury makes his statement and all that he details of the circumstances of his case convince me that in taking charge of the letters in question he believed he could innocently carry letters of a purely commercial and private nature and he stipulated that none of the letters delivered to him should contain political intelligence of any kind, and further should be opened if necessary for the purpose of ascertaining this fact.

I have, &c.,

E. M. ARCHIBALD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 5, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor of replying to your lordship's note of the 3d instant which relates to the cases of Rutson Maury and Matthew F. Maury.

These persons were arrested for having passed the lines of the army without permission of the authorities of the United States and in the act of preparing for again crossing the same lines without such authority, and in direct violation of well-known regulations established by the Government.

They were combined in business and that business was the carrying for hire of correspondence between insurgent citizens and their confederates in the United States and in Europe. On examination it was found that this correspondence was secreted with fraudulent design to escape exposure. Much of the correspondence was found to have for its objects, first, premeditated violation of the blockade; second, the treasonable supply of the insurgents with arms and munitions of war.

The illegal and treasonable practices in which they were engaged must be prevented. These persons are detained with that view.

I have inquired concerning the trunk of Matthew F. Maury and I learn that it is libeled with a view to the confiscation of the trunk itself and its contents by judicial proceeding in the State of Ohio.

I regret exceedingly that these young men have by such palpable acts of hostility to the United States rendered it necessary for the public safety that they be detained in custody. It is proper to say that the authorities in whose custody they are were early instructed to supply them with whatever of clothing and other things should be necessary for their comfort.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 5, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday relative to the case of Mr. Rutson Maury, a British subject confined as a political prisoner in Fort Lafayette and to inform you in reply that I see nothing in it to alter the conclusion come to on the subject in my previous note to you of this date.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, December 5, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, &c.

SIR: I had the honor to address you on 30th of November in company with letters from sundry persons on the subject respecting the strange and unexplained detention of sundry letters belonging to Maury Bros. The inconvenience we are subjected to in consequence must be my excuse for again troubling you. On 2d instant Superintendent Kennedy delivered some letters to us which he had received open from your Department, telling us two were detained by you as apparently of a treasonable nature, which two I suppose must be from my brother, Rutson Maury, and from T. & H. Littledale & Co., or from the acting head of that house, John Torr; nor have I any of our letters per Canada, which ought to be dated 14th, 15th or 16th of November, as the two detained from the Asia ought to be dated 7th, 8th or 9th.

I cannot possibly imagine anything treasonable in the two letters in question, and even if there were any treasonable propositions in them I maintain that they are as safe from doing any harm in my custody as in any other. Torr or Littledale's letter may possibly reply to mine of 22d, in which I urged for the twentieth or thirtieth time that opinion in England must turn more and more in favor of the power and resources of the North at the expense of the South, &c. And my brother's letter will probably contain the result of the applications which he intended to make personally to our friends in London to send us orders to buy 7.30 per cent. Treasury notes. It may also contain remarks upon our two nephews who had arrived from the South and whom you now have in confinement. We must say we are utterly at a loss to divine any rational cause for this suspicion of us. We repeat again that we have not written a letter to the South that we know of nor have we forwarded any European letters to the South since it was made illegal though we have heard of opportunities almost weekly.

With much respect, your most obedient servant,

M. MAURY.

NEW YORK, December 11, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, &c., Washington.

SIR: On Saturday afternoon, 7th instant, Mr. Grinnell read to me your letter of 5th to him. I am greatly surprised at your report that "the correspondence addressed to them (Maury Bros.) and through their care to others and intercepted and now in the State Department conclusively shows that this house has been and is yet expected to be engaged in violating the blockade." As I am utterly unconscious of any disloyalty to the Union unless it can be deemed disloyal to have failed to inform the authorities that my nephews were here, having brought letters from the South in October and contemplating carrying letters (purely commercial and family letters as I understood) back to the South, I have no doubt that I can satisfactorily explain matters if I am only told fully and precisely what I am to explain. In the first place I am at a loss to know whether "blockade" means marine blockade or the land blockade of letters, &c., and whether "has been" refers to "expected" or to "engaged." If marine is intended I deny any knowledge whatever of having violated it or having been or being expected to violate it, and if "has been" refers to "expected" I cannot be responsible for the expectations of others. I certainly have no suspicion who the expecters are and I should be glad to know.

It would appear therefore that the suspicion of my house so far as I am concerned arises entirely from my captured nephews. I have nothing to alter in the explanation of the letter carrying which I wrote to you some days before, 22d ultimo, but I may add some things in further explanation. I have already said that I had four nephews in the South. I gave here to one of them $200 to be divided in certain proportions, having said that none was to go to such as might have entered the army and I gave it because I knew the two left in the South to be destitute and to have regarded our wish that none of them should enter the army. Three of them at least being of a temperament to render it probable that they would go into the army I felt the more favorably toward them because they regarded our wishes and suffered extreme destitution (to the degree of trying to pawn their watches, &c., for support, as corroborated by a relative of the family who saw them at New Orleans) rather than enter the army. They could not come northward without money. The one to look (in vain, alas) for his funds in Boston and the other at a later day to bring hither a bill of exchange on Liverpool for £120 which James Maury, hearing of the rise of cotton at Liverpool, thought he might venture to draw but which was wholly unsalable there and proved to be equally so here.

They had borrowed until they could borrow no more, and with little prospect but of enlistment before them were utterly at a loss what to do when it was discovered that sufficient money for traveling expenses could be got by carrying letters and so their expected resources in the North might be reached. I regarded their visit as the consequence of dire necessity—a sort of second edition of that of Joseph's brethren to Egypt. Under these circumstances I do not think you could have expected me to inform against them for carrying as I supposed mere commercial and family letters.

Allow me to digress and say that the facts of the case were very striking to me as confirming my previous opinions that the inevitable and extreme destitution of the great mass in the South must force nearly all the able into the army for a support and compel most others to regard a return into the Union as desirable even under the old Constitution. And further the more of them that could come here without damage to the North and return, reporting the evidences of trade, prosperity, &c., which they saw in the North the sooner would there be a reunion.

Considering the situation of their brothers and of Rutson's and James' wives and families I was sorry for the arrests; but as respects the arrested themselves I was not altogether sorry, as I have often said, for they were violating the law. Rutson, jr., was here on business in spring; went South in March and remained there until October. Neither of them carried any letters written by me nor any received by us from Europe nor did they bring any letters for us either for ourselves or for Europe except the advice of the bill for £120. I do not know of any letters received here and awaiting their arrival. I neither knew nor know anything of the contents of letters addressed to my nephews to our care received while they were here. I had reason to suppose they were not treasonable but I have since heard it said that there were about 250 letters seized in their possession and all of the most treasonable character, including a plan of breaking the blockade, orders for fire-arms, &c., proofs that double-bottomed trunks passed regularly between the South and Europe. I know nothing of any such trunks. I never saw any trunk of any kind in our office while either of the two young men were here. I did not suppose that either of them were coming here until each of them actually arrived. I warned them most earnestly of the folly and impropriety of carrying anything that could be considered treasonable and I understood they would not carry such things or such letters. If 250 or any smaller number of treasonable letters were found upon them either my confidence was abused by them or theirs perhaps by others.

I have forgotten to name that about the time of their departure and just as I was going up to my dinner I received a note from the district attorney asking me to call at his office, and I did call once or twice without finding him until the afternoon of the next day. He said he had heard that my house was in the regular business of receiving and forwarding letters to and from the South and read me an extract of a letter from Boston to that effect. Hence it was that I wished to know if your information against us came from Boston. I told him it was a mistake and probably arose from my two nephews having been here from the South and having carried letters which I understood were of a purely commercial and family nature. It is notorious that such letters frequently pass between the North and South. In the last two months I have heard of several opportunities of sending but I have not availed myself of any of them though I have much wished to write two or three such for myself and my house.

Allow me to assure you that it is a great error to suppose that we are in any way disloyal to the Union. I and my brother (now in England) voted for Mr. Lincoln. We and my sister having had up to the time when the secession of Virginia approached great influence over our relatives in the Navy and Army used it strenuously to prevent their resignation; but as usual with Southern people our arguments had no more efficiency than arguments to prove the impropriety of catching an epidemic fever. In evidence of my indisposition to embarrass the Government or to risk exposing it to ridicule or contempt I have refused several recommendations to publish the case of Maury brothers here or in Europe, and in giving some details of the detention of our letters to those whose are probably among them, although I felt in the absence of any explanation very indignant at such detention, I wrote thus:

We must request as a favor that you will not publish anything about it in your newspapers. No doubt Mr. Seward's intentions are good and patriotic, but he has made several blunders, and his spies and informers have probably misled him.

From what I have already written you will readily perceive that it could be no satisfaction to me to find my numerous friends here and in England sneering at this Government, or Gladstone and my co-Etonians in Parliament from Lord Derby downward comparing the New York post-office to that of the King of Naples.

Since beginning to write this letter I have received through the post-office sundry letters from Europe for Maury Bros. which have been detained and opened, but I still lack some from my brother and from T. & H. Littledale & Co., or their acting head, John Torr, and there may be others which I cannot conjecture. I trust in view of all circumstances that you will by this time have satisfied yourself on the subject and let us have all our detained letters or accurate copies of them, and direct that our correspondence shall for the future be unobstructed; and I beg leave most particularly to request that those letters from Europe for the South which came direct from thence to our care and which the policemen carried away from our iron safe may be returned to us. We have no account of them or of their number, but they are probably from E. Evans & Co., Liverpool, and John K. Gilliat & Co., London. They were intrusted to us direct by the parties in Europe and we informed them that they would not be forwarded until it was legal. We have not informed the parties of their seizure and we wish not to be under the necessity of doing so in order to avoid throwing unnecessary trouble upon Mr. Adams in London.

I can only add that I shall be glad to explain any particulars that you may have against me or my house and that, with much respect, I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

M. MAURY.

DECEMBER 13, 1861.

P. S.—Not having been able to see Mr. Grinnell yesterday I beg leave to add that I have no more letters. You will observe that Mr. Torr to whom I have alluded refused to preside at the indignation meeting in Liverpool. He showed sense at least, but he has been a constant believer in the impossibility of reunion. He belongs to the old Tory party and is I think in intimate political intercourse with Derby and D'Israeli. I shall be curious to hear what he has to say a fortnight later.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 19, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: You may discontinue the surveillance over the correspondence of Messrs. Maury Bros., and say to them that this is done with the expectation that if any letters addressed to persons in the insurrectionary States come into their possession hereafter they will not attempt to forward them but will deliver them to you to be sent to this Department. Will you please return the inclosed letter to them?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The letters returned from the Department addressed to Messrs. Maury Bros., not in each case having the postage paid, instead of handing over in person to their address I returned to Mr. Taylor, the postmaster, and yesterday called on Mr. Maury to communicate the contents of the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the 19th instant. He not being at home on my invitation has called on me this morning.

I stated to him the requirement made by the Department, viz, that it is expected of him to deliver over to the superintendent of the police any letters he may receive addressed to persons in the insurrectionary States. To this he dissents on the ground that he supposes no letters have been sent to him for persons in those States which were not purely of a commercial or family character, and which are not innocent of any design to interfere with the business of the Government. He desires instead of being required to deliver such letters to me that the condition will stand that he shall return them to the writers, informing them that he can send no letters to the South during the period of interdiction. He says that he has directed his brother in Liverpool to give notice to their correspondents in Europe that no letters for the South will be forwarded by them until it is legal to do so, and gives that as a justification for taking the ground he does. Your further instructions are requested.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 24, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Messrs. Maury Bros., not having as yet agreed to the conditions alluded to in yours of 19th instant I send you two letters* to their address received per America.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

* Omitted.

NEW YORK, *December 24, 1861.*Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, &c., Washington.

SIR: I had the honor to address you on the 11th instant. I have to-day seen Superintendent Kennedy who wished me to promise to deliver to him all letters we may receive from Europe for parties in the South. He kept me so long while he was preparing the letter to you which he read to me that I would not ask him to write it over again for the purpose of giving more fully the reasons why I preferred returning the letters to Europe to delivering them to him. The first reason is that we have not forwarded any such letters since communication was interdicted; the second, that having informed several of our friends and requested my brother in England so to inform them that we should not forward any such letters until it was legal to do so they may send letters to us to be forwarded at the first moment when it is legal, and you must be aware that it may be a matter of much commercial importance to have their letters conveyed to the South immediately it becomes legal to do so without their waiting to hear that it is so.

I have received a number of our letters since my last which have been opened in Washington, but there are evidently several still wanting which I trust you will send to us, including an account sales of cotton and anything that Edward Heath & Co. may have written us as to a shipment of gunny-bags to this port. I wish also the letters for the South to be returned to us as I named on the 11th instant. Among the letters we have received was an envelope which has been marked unimportant at your office and none of the contents of which have come to hand, although it appears to have been prepaid double in England. We do not recognize the writing. Upon speaking to Kennedy he thinks we had better send it to you for explanation.

In conclusion we have done everything that we can think of by way of explanation to satisfy you that we are entitled to be regarded as loyal citizens. We hope therefore that you will give orders that for the future our letters shall pass into our hands without obstruction.

With much respect, I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

M. MAURY.

P. S.—I have to-day written to my brother that I wish our friends to abstain from sending any letters for the South to us on any pretense whatever.

M. M.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, January 2, 1862.*JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: I am directed by the Secretary of State to say that you may return to Mr. M. Maury, of Maury Bros., the inclosed letters. You may also discontinue the surveillance over their correspondence on their engagement (as proposed by Mr. M.) to return to the future writers all such letters as shall come to them for transmission to the insurrectionary States during the continuance of the insurrection.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

NEW YORK, *January 3, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I respectfully beg your attention to the following statement in behalf of my brothers, Rutson Maury, jr., and Matthew F. Maury, who were arrested last October at Cleveland, Ohio, for carrying letters to the South: Rutson Maury, jr., was placed in Fort Lafayette on the 10th of November where he has since remained. Rheumatism and influenza to both of which he is subject in aggravated forms are preying upon his bodily health. In addition to these mental anxiety caused by the destitute condition of his wife and child in Alabama renders his captivity hard to be borne. Matthew F. Maury was conveyed to Fort Lafayette on the 9th of November and transferred thence on the 16th to Fort Warren, where he is still. An intestine disease contracted two years ago in New Orleans and of which his physicians affirmed he ought according to the laws of nature to have died now threatens him again. We have lately heard of the death of the lady to whom he was engaged in marriage. A hopeless depression of spirits acting upon a body infirm and naturally unable from long residence in the South to endure the rigor of a Northern climate makes his confinement trying indeed.

The offense of which they are guilty is carrying letters. I do assure you they took particular care so far as I know and verily believe that neither treason nor political discussion should be contained in them. To say the very least it was their known interest so to do. Every letter was either open or had the words "open if necessary" written upon it.

In fine I beg to remind you of your friendship for my mother, Sarah Mytton Maury, in the years 1845 and 1846, and deigning to hope that such remembrance may descend to her sons and induce you to grant their release I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

WALKER MAURY.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *New York Harbor, January 24, 1862.*Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I last addressed you on the 10th instant, forwarding my communication through Lord Lyons. It is impossible for me to know whether or not said communication reached his lordship but I certainly do know that to this date I am without any replies to my favors. Failing in obtaining any answer I would be pleased to know what steps the United States Government have determined to take in my case and what proposals will be acceptable to the United States Government in order to effect my release from prison. If the Government refuse to allow me to proceed South to rejoin my family I am willing to proceed to England if I am released at once and allowed to forward letters and means of support to my family during the continuance of the war, said letters being forwarded through the U. S. authorities abroad, i. e., the consuls appointed by the Government.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

RUTSON MAURY, JR.

NEW YORK, *January 26, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Earl Bill, U. S. marshal at Cleveland, Ohio, agreeably to the instructions of Hon. Ed. Jordan, Solicitor of the Treasury of the United States and in obedience to the order of the U. S. district court for that district forwarded to their owners the trunks seized as the property of my brothers Matthew F. and Rutson Maury, jr. In the trunk of the former Mr. Bill found the sum of $14.45, from which after deducting necessary charges he sent the balance in the trunk.

I have written to Mr. Bill asking for the restoration of $300 in gold seized in the latter part of November last as the property of Rutson Maury, jr. To this he has replied that he is "not aware that any Department or officer of the Government has given him or any officer of his district any order or direction to restore to Rutson Maury, jr., all his effects," though he restored money found in the trunk of M. F. Maury. He also informs me that the sum in question is now in the hands of James A. Crow, esq., sheriff of Cuyahoga County, at Cleveland; and he further recommends me to apply to your Department for an order to be issued for its restoration.

I therefore respectfully beg of you to issue an order for the restoration of this money to my brother, and am, sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,

WALKER MAURY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 28, 1862.

EARL BILL, Esq., U. S. Marshal, Cleveland, Ohio.

SIR: I have to request that you will inform this Department whether proceedings have been commenced in the U. S. courts for the confiscation of the $300 in coin which was seized with the other property belonging to Mr. Rutson Maury at the time of his arrest.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, January 29, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: On December 4, 1861, Lord Lyons informed me that on the 2d of that month the Solicitor of the Treasury had been requested to direct the U. S. attorney at Cleveland to send my trunks to the care of Her Majesty's consul at New York, thus discontinuing proceedings against them and their contents. I had also at Cleveland deposited $300 in gold in the hands of R. M. N. Taylor, esq., proprietor of the Angier Hotel for safe-keeping until my return there. I have never been able to recover this money and only to-day am informed that my money ($300) is in the hands of James A. Crow, esq., sheriff at Cleveland, seized in the latter part of November last as my property and now held by the sheriff subject to the adjudication of the district court of the United States as to whether it shall or not be confiscated under the act of Congress in that behalf. As I am suffering for this money, my family also, I respectfully ask that the U. S. district attorney at Cleveland be requested to discontinue proceedings and that the money be forwarded to me at Fort Lafayette, care Colonel Burke.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

RUTSON MAURY, JR.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Matthew F. Maury to Lord Lyons, dated Fort Warren, January 30, 1862.

* * * May I ask your lordship to propose to him (Mr. Seward) to grant me a release upon condition that I return to England within a week or thereabout from my discharge, according to the sailing of the steamer, and that I engage on parole of honor to hold no communication with the Southern States or do anything hostile to the United States in the interim. It is but three weeks since one of my fellow-prisoners, Mr. D. C. Lowber, of New Orleans, was released upon precisely the terms thus offered. * * *

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Cleveland, January 31, 1862.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I am this day in receipt of your letter of the 28th instant requesting information "whether proceedings have been commenced in the U. S. courts for the confiscation of the $300 in coin which was seized with the other property belonging to Mr. Rutson Maury at the time of his arrest." In reply I have the honor to state that on the 29th day of November last I found in possession of Mr. R. M. N. Taylor, the proprietor of the Angier Hotel of this city, $300 in gold coin which had been deposited with said Taylor by Rutson Maury, jr., after the seizure of his baggage by the inspector of the revenue (which event took place I think on or about the 28th of October last), and the day prior to his leaving this city for Washington with the avowed purpose of applying to the Government for the discharge of his baggage. Upon being advised of such deposit I seized the package of gold and filed an information with the district attorney who forthwith commenced proceedings against the same for confiscation, and upon the hearing of the cause by the district court on the 21st instant it was by the court adjudged and decreed to be confiscated, and on the 25th instant the court made its order for distribution of the same, one-half to the informer and the remaining half to be paid into the Treasury of the United States according to the provisions of the act of Congress in that behalf, which has been done accordingly as I am informed. It will be seen therefore that the $300 in coin was not seized with the other property belonging to Mr. Rutson Maury at the time of his arrest which was made in Washington (and neither here nor by me) nor at the time of the seizure of his baggage or other property, but a month after that event. The proceedings in court for its confiscation have been wholly separate and distinct from those for the forfeiture of the other property both in character and point of time, in the latter the libel having been filed under the act of Congress of July 13, 1861, and as to the coin they were under the confiscation act of August 6, 1861.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

EARL BILL,
U. S. Marshal.

Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 5, 1862.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: Will you have the kindness to go to Fort Lafayette and see Mr. Rutson Maury? The Government is disposed to release him but is embarrassed by a want of confidence that he will honorably and faithfully keep any engagements he may be required to make. If he can satisfy you upon that point he will be released upon condition that he will not enter any of the insurrectionary States nor hold any correspondence with persons residing in those States nor do any act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States during the present hostilities without permission from the Secretary of State.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Cleveland, February 6, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 4th instant inclosing copy of a letter from Rutson Maury, jr., and instructing me to discontinue proceedings against the sum of money to which it refers and to remit the same to him to the care of Mr. Archibald, British consul at New York, has just been received. It is impossible to comply for the reason that there are no proceedings pending. The trial was had and the gold condemned and decreed to be forfeited on the 21st ultimo, and James A. Crow, sheriff of Cuyahoga County, Ohio, in whose possession the same was, was ordered to pay the money to the clerk of the court, which was done the same day. On the 25th ultimo a final order of distribution was entered ordering one-half paid to the informer and the other into the Treasury of the United States. The proceedings were under the act of August 6, 1861, and my final report to the Solicitor of the Treasury was made January 29. The fact is Rutson Maury, jr., and M. F. Maury were both engaged in the business of giving aid to the rebels. They had established a regular mail between New Orleans and New York and at the time of their arrest they had between 400 and 600 letters on their way to New Orleans, one of which was a letter from the captain-general of Cuba to Jeff. Davis informing him that the rebel flag had been recognized in Cuba, &c.

Your obedient servant,

ROBERT F. PAINE,
U. S. Attorney.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: In pursuance of your instructions of the 5th instant I visited Fort Lafayette and had an interview with Mr. Rutson Maury, a prisoner in that fortress. I have only the man's appearance and manner to guide me to a conclusion in his case. He is undoubtedly a British subject. He tells a story that does not in any respect impeach itself and altogether impresses me as a man to believe. His family (wife and child) are in Alabama and he wishes to go there or to take measures to bring them to him, preferring as I see the former. I think he may be trusted to observe the conditions of any parole you may require and recommend the experiment. If the conditions are that he remain at the North I hope he will be allowed such degree of liberty in correspondence as shall permit him to call his family to him. If he is required to remain here separate from his family there will be a motive constantly operating to induce him to evade his parole. Moreover he should have his family with him if it is possible.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

P. S.—The order to me in this case was not accompanied by any inclosures.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, February 12, 1862.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE,

Third Artillery, Commanding Forts Hamilton and Lafayette.

COLONEL: I have the honor to inform you that in obedience to the instructions received from you I have read to Rutson Maury, jr., a prisoner confined at this post, the communication of the honorable Secretary of State relative to the confiscation of $300 in coin belonging to the said Rutson Maury, jr.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. O. WOOD,

First Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, February 13, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am favored with your communication of 4th instant regarding $300 in gold coin referred to in my letter to you dated 29th ultimo. Since then I have had communication from F. W. Seward, esq., Assistant Secretary of State, addressed to Col. M. Burke, inclosing a copy of a letter from the marshal of Cleveland, Ohio, wherein Mr. F. W. Seward is informed that under the act of Congress dated August 13, 1861, my property has been confiscated, one-half of the amount being paid to the informer and one-half to the Treasury of the United States of America. I am induced to forward you a copy of a letter addressed to my brother by Mr. Earl Bill concerning this money, which letter I judge to have been written on or about the 25th of January, as the date of my brother's letter to me is 27th, and is as follows:

It is true that there is now in the hands of James A. Crow, esq., sheriff at Cleveland, $300 in gold, seized in the latter part of November last as the property of Rutson Maury, and now held by the sheriff subject to the adjudication of the district court of the United States as to whether it shall or not be confiscated under the act of Congress in that behalf. If it is believed by you or by your brother Rutson that it is proper and right that this money should be discharged from the libel filed against it by the district attorney I suggest that application be made to the proper Department of the Government and its order in that behalf obtained. Though the money is not in my possession or under my control, I can vouch that such an order will be most promptly obeyed by the officer who has the custody of it.

EARL BILL.

Now, sir, the very man who writes as above writes to the Assistant Secretary of State that the hearing of the cause came on on the 21st ultimo and on the 25th was declared by the court confiscated, one-half being paid to the informer and one-half to the Treasury of the United States under the confiscation act of August 13. What that act is I know not and should be pleased to know its nature. I wish also to know by what right any court can take my property without my being notified to appear in person or by counsel? I shall await your reply confirmatory of your communication of the 4th instant. For nearly six months I have been unable to send my wife and child money to pay their monthly expenses; in fact I am penniless in your country, and now to have my little taken from me without trial added to my imprisonment is indeed I should think enough to satisfy the revenge of those who have been instrumental in bringing me to the level of a felon.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

RUTSON MAURY, JR.

This man R. M. N. Taylor met me in Mr. Kennedy's (chief of police) office on the morning of the 11th of November last and assured me that he would send the money to my brother, and the way he has done it is by pocketing $150.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, February 15, 1862.

I, Matthew F. Maury, a prisoner in Fort Warren, do solemnly swear that I will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. So help me God.

MATTHEW F. MAURY.

Sworn and subscribed to before me at Fort Warren on this the 15th day of February, A. D. 1862.

J. DIMICK,
Colonel First Artillery, Commanding Fort.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, February 22, 1862.

We, the undersigned, do solemnly promise upon our word of honor that we will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States.

RUTSON MAURY.
[AND 36 OTHERS.]

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Mr. Rutson Maury has sent me a copy of a letter which he addressed to you on the 13th of last month respecting a sum of $300 in gold belonging to him which appears to have been confiscated by order of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio.

Mr. Maury's imprisonment was naturally an impediment to his taking measures to resist the application to the court for the confiscation of his property. He was moreover informed by a letter which you were so good as to write to him on the 4th ultimo that the U. S. district attorney had been directed to discontinue proceedings against the money and to remit the amount to him to the care of Her Majesty's consul at New York.

Under these circumstances he begs me to call your attention again to the matter in the hope that the sum of which he is still deprived may be restored to him. He also requests me to apply for the restoration of letters addressed to him which were taken from the office of Messrs. Maury Bros., of New York, in the month of November last after having been returned from the Dead-Letter Office at Washington. One he says contained a draft drawn by Mr. William Mure on the Royal Bank at Liverpool; another a very important family paper.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 5, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 1st instant calling my attention to a certain sum of money belonging to Mr. Rutson Maury which was confiscated by order of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio.

In reply I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a packet of letters addressed to Mr. Maury with an accompanying list of the same, and to state that when on the 4th ultimo I informed Mr. Maury that the U. S. district attorney had been directed to discontinue proceedings against the money in question and to remit the amount to him I was under the impression that the cause was still pending in the court, but it having been disposed of by judgment of confiscation it is not in the power of the Executive to interpose in the matter.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Case of Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis.

These notorious individuals [James M. Mason and John Slidell], one late a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana and the other holding the same position from the State of Virginia, violated their oaths in the incipient stages of the rebellion, being among the original conspirators in working up the stupendous scheme of treason. They plunged into active and open rebellion the moment their respective power to injure the Government by secret treachery had been exhausted by the course of events. They sought and obtained pretended commissions from the rebel government as commissioners or ministers plenipotentiary to the Governments of France and Great Britain and sailed by a roundabout course for their respective theaters of duty under such pretended appointment. In the course of said voyage on the 8th day of November, 1861, they were found by Captain Wilkes, of the U. S. war steamer San Jacinto, on board the British mail steamer Trent and by him arrested on board the said mail steamer, taken on board the said San Jacinto and brought to the United States and lodged in Fort Warren for safe-keeping. The British Government claimed that the arrest of these malefactors on the Trent under the British flag was a violation of neutral rights and requested that they be surrendered. This claim was acknowledged by the United States to be just, and the request founded thereon was therefore acceded to. The prisoners were placed on board a British man-of-war pursuant to arrangements with the British minister on the 1st day of January, 1862.

George Eustis, private secretary to the rebel commissioner, John Slidell, was captured by Captain Wilkes, of the San Jacinto, near the West Indies on board the English steamer Trent November 8, 1861. He arrived in Boston Harbor November 24 and was committed to Fort

Warren. Eustis was released by order of the Secretary of State January 1, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: The following telegraphic dispatch unfortunately came to my hand after the Nonpareil had left the harbor. It is from the U. S. consular agent at Cardenas and dated last evening:

The steamer Theodora has just entered this port under the flag of the Southern Confederacy. She comes from Charleston; brings passengers, and among them it is said the French consul and his family.

I will communicate any other information that may reach me.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a duplicate dispatch received here yesterday from the consul-general of the United States at Havana, on which he reports the arrival * * * of the Theodora from Charleston at Cardenas.

The Department has been informed that the practice of the commanders of ships of the blockading squadron in suspending lanterns from the mastheads of their respective vessels at night is of great service to the vessels of the insurgents intending to run the blockade; giving them exact information as to the position of the blockading ships, and in the absence of light-houses and buoys furnishing to the pilots of the escaping vessels valuable aid in clearing the harbors.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 15, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * On Tuesday morning the 12th I received an informal note from Lord Palmerston inviting me if convenient to call and see him at his own house between 1 and 2 o'clock of that day. I accepted and went. He received me in his library all alone and at once opened on the subject then evidently weighing on his mind. He said that information had come to him of the late arrival of a U. S. vessel of war, the James Adger. She had put into one or two places and finally stopped at Southampton where she had taken in coals and other supplies. But the day before his lordship had understood the captain had got very drunk on brandy after which he had dropped down to the mouth of the river as if about to sail on a cruise. The impression was that he had been directed to keep on the watch for the steamer expected to arrive on Thursday from the West Indies in order to take out of it by force the gentlemen from the Southern States, Messrs. Mason and Slidell, who were presumed to be aboard. Now he was not going into the question of our right to do such an act. Perhaps we might be justified in it as the steamer was not strictly a public vessel or perhaps we might not. He would set the argument aside for those whose province it was to discuss it. All he desired to observe was that such a step would be highly inexpedient in every way he could view it. It would be regarded here very unpleasantly if the captain after enjoying the hospitality of this country, filling his ship with coals and with other supplies and filling his own stomach with brandy (and here he laughed in his characteristic way) should within sight of the shore commit an act which would be felt as offensive to the national flag. Neither could he see what was the compensating advantage to be gained by it. It surely could not be supposed that the addition of one or two more to the number of persons who had already been some time in London on the same errand would be likely to produce any change in the policy already adopted. He did not believe that the Government would vary its action on their account be they few or many. He could not therefore conceive of the necessity for resorting to such a measure as this which in the present state of opinion in England could scarcely fail to occasion more prejudice than it would do good.

His lordship was about to proceed to another matter when I begged leave to interrupt him for the purpose of disposing of this case first. It is almost needless to point out how completely he had taken for granted from the outset that the intention imputed to the Government in sending over the Adger was the true one. He did not even ask me whether he was correct in presuming it and directed all his reasoning rather to the end of dissuading the execution of the design by trying to convince me not so much of its impropriety as of its inexpediency. This furnishes a curious example of the absence of confidence in our principles of action growing out of indifference to the labor of understanding them. I began a reply by requesting permission to ask his lordship a question, and that was upon what ground he rested his belief that any such enterprise as he described had been meditated by Captain Marchand. This seemed to surprise him a little but he immediately answered that it was his impression derived from the fact of the arrival of the U. S. steamer just now and the coincidence of her preparation to start again with the period assigned for the approach of the gentlemen in the West India steamer. He could not conceive what the Adger was sent all the way across for if not for this object.

It is scarcely difficult to fix upon the source from which such an impression as this must have been directly or indirectly obtained. I made no allusion to it, however, and contented myself with expressing my satisfaction on finding he had no better foundation for the story. In point of fact I might say to him that Captain Marchand had been up to London; had called upon me and had shown me his instructions. The purpose of the Government on learning that Messrs. Mason and Slidell had evaded the blockade by sailing in a steamer called the Nashville, originally stolen from the owners in the North by forcible seizure whilst lying in that port at the commencement of the difficulties, had been to dispatch steamers various ways with instructions to intercept and capture that vessel and her passengers wherever she might be found on the ocean. To that end Captain Marchand had come all the way across in the expectation of overtaking and making prize of her. He would have done so had he met her. I took it for granted that his lordship had no objection to make to that proceeding. But having once arrived here and ascertained that the Nashville was not likely to make its appearance in these waters the captain after refitting his vessel had written to me a note announcing his departure under his instructions to return home.

At the same time I thought it no more than fair to apprise his lordship that I had urged the captain to keep his eye upon a steamer that was departing from London at about the same time under the protection of the British flag though to my knowledge intended to convey a large cargo of contraband of war to some part of the blockaded coast of the United States. It was just as well to confess that we had been very much annoyed by these repeated cases of outfits from this island. First the steamer Bermuda had sailed and she had succeeded in running into Savannah. Next came the Fingal which went only a few weeks since; her fate we had not yet heard of. Lastly was this Gladiator just dispatched from London with scarcely any pretense of concealment. I had advised Captain Marchand to keep on the track of her and the very first moment he could form a reasonable conviction of her intent to land anywhere in the United States to snap her up at once if possible. With this exception I thought the destination of the James Adger might be depended upon.

Here the discussion of this matter rested and his lordship seemed tolerably well satisfied. * * * This conference lasted perhaps half an hour, and on taking my leave his lordship expressed his satisfaction with the result.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, November 15, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: I have written to you relative to the movements of this ship from Cienfuegos on the south coast of Cuba. There I learned that Messrs. Slidell and Mason had landed in Cuba and had reached the Havana from Charleston. I took in some sixty tons of coal and left with all dispatch on the 26th of October to intercept the return of the Theodora; but on my arrival at the Havana on the 31st I found she had departed on her return and that Messrs. Slidell and Mason with their secretaries and families were there and would depart on the 7th of the month in the English steamer Trent for Saint Thomas on their way to England.

I made up my mind to fill up with coal and leave the port as soon as possible to await at a suitable position on the route of the steamer to Saint Thomas to intercept her and take them out.

* * * * *

I then went over to Key West in hopes of finding the Powhatan or some other steamer to accompany me to the Bahama Channel to make it impossible for the steamer in which Messrs. Slidell and Mason were to embark to escape either in the night or day. The Powhatan had left but the day before and I was therefore disappointed and obliged to rely upon the vigilance of the officers and crew of this ship and proceeded the next morning to the north side of the island of Cuba, communicated with Sagua la Grande on the 4th, hoping to receive a telegraphic communication from Mr. Shufeldt, our consul-general, giving me the time of the departure of the steamer.

In this also I was disappointed and ran to the eastward some ninety miles, where the old Bahama Channel contracts to the width of fifteen miles some 240 miles from the Havana and in sight of the Paredon del Grande Light-House. There we cruised until the morning of the 8th awaiting the steamer, believing that if she left at the usual time she must pass us about noon of the 8th and we could not possibly miss her. At 11.40 a. m. on the 8th her smoke was first seen. At 12 m. our position was to the westward of the entrance into the narrowest part of the channel and about nine miles northeast from the light-house of Paredon del Grande, the nearest point of Cuba to us. We were all prepared for her, beat to quarters, and orders were given to Lieut. D. M. Fairfax to have two boats manned and armed to board her and make Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Eustis and Macfarland prisoners and send them immediately on board. (A copy of this order to him is herewith inclosed.) The steamer approached and hoisted English colors. Our ensign was hoisted and a shot was fired across her bow. She maintained her speed and showed no disposition to heave to. Then a shell was fired across her bow which brought her to. I hailed that I intended to send a boat on board, and Lieutenant Fairfax with the second cutter of this ship was dispatched. He met with some difficulty and remaining on board the steamer with a part of the boat's crew sent her back to request more assistance. The captain of the steamer having declined to show his papers and passenger list a force became necessary to search her. Lieut. James A. Greer was at once dispatched in the third cutter also manned and armed.

Messrs. Slidell and Mason, Eustis and Macfarland were recognized and told they were required to go on board this ship. This they objected to until an overpowering force compelled them; much persuasion was used and a little force and at about 2 o'clock they were brought on board this ship and received by me. Two other boats were then sent to expedite the removal of their baggage and some stores when the steamer, which proved to be the Trent, was suffered to proceed on her route to the eastward and at 3.30 p. m. we bore away to the northward and westward. The whole time employed was two hours and thirteen minutes.

I inclose you the statements of such officers who boarded the Trent relative to the facts and also an extract from the log book* of this ship.

It was my determination to have taken possession of the Trent and send her to Key West as a prize for resisting the search and carrying these passengers whose character and objects were well known to the captain, but the reduced number of my officers and crew and the large number of passengers on board bound to Europe who would be put to great inconvenience decided me to allow them to proceed.

Finding the families of Messrs. Slidell and Eustis on board I tendered them the offer of my cabin for their accommodation to accompany their husbands. This they declined, however, and proceeded in the Trent.

Before closing this dispatch I would bring to your notice the notorious action of her Britannic Majesty's subjects, the consul-general of Cuba and those on board the Trent in doing everything to aid and abet the escape of these four persons and endeavoring to conceal their persons on board. No passports or papers of any description were in possession of them from the Federal Government, and for this and other reasons which will readily occur to you I made them my prisoners and shall retain them on board here until I hear from you what disposition is to be made of them.

I cannot close this report without bearing testimony to the admirable manner in which all the officers and men of this ship performed their duties and the cordial manner in which they carried out my orders.

To Lieutenant Fairfax I beg leave to call your particular attention for the praiseworthy manner in which he executed the delicate duties with which he was intrusted. It met and has received my warmest thanks.

After leaving the north side of Cuba I ran through the Santaren Passage and up the coast from off Saint Augustine to Charleston, and regretted being too late to take a part in the expedition to Port Royal.

I inclose herewith a communication from Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Eustis and Macfarland with my answer.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES WILKES,
Captain.

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, At Sea, November 8, 1861.

Lieut. D. M. FAIRFAX, U. S. Navy,
Executive Officer, San Jacinto.

SIR: You will have the second and third cutters of this ship fully manned and armed and be in all respects prepared to board the steamer Trent now hove to under our guns.

On boarding her you will demand the papers of the steamer, her clearance from Havana with the list of passengers and crew.

Should Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland be on board you will make them prisoners and send them on board this ship immediately and take possession of her as a prize.

* Omitted.

I do not deem it will be necessary to use force; that the prisoners will have the good sense to avoid any necessity for using it, but if they should they must be made to understand that it is their own fault. They must be brought on board. All trunks, cases, packages and bags belonging to them you will take possession of and send on board this ship. Any dispatches found on the persons of the prisoners or in possession of those on board the steamer will be taken possession of also, examined and retained if necessary.

I have understood that the families of these gentlemen may be with them. If so I beg you will offer some of them in my name a passage in this ship to the United States, and that all the attentions and comforts we can command are tendered them and will be placed in their service.

In the event of their acceptance should there be anything which the captain of the steamer can spare to increase the comforts, in the way of necessaries or stores of which a war vessel is deficient, you will please to procure them. The amount will be paid for by the paymaster.

Lieut. James A. Greer will take charge of the third cutter which accompanies you and assist you in these duties.

I trust that all those under your command in executing this important and delicate duty will conduct themselves with all the delicacy and kindness which becomes the character of our naval service.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES WILKES,
Captain.

Lieut. D. M. FAIRFAX, U. S. Navy.

SIR: You will report to me in writing all the facts which transpired under your observation on board the mail steamer Trent, bound from Havana to Saint Thomas, whilst hove to under our guns on the 8th instant and boarded by you under my orders.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES WILKES,
Captain.

(Same to Lieut. James A. Greer, Second Assistant Engineer James B. Houston, Third Assistant Engineer George W. Hall, Paymaster's Clerk R. G. Simpson, Master's Mate Charles B. Dahlgren, and Boatswain H. P. Grace, U. S. Navy.)

[Inclosure No. 3.]

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, At Sea, November 12, 1861.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES, U. S. Navy,
Commanding San Jacinto.

SIR: At 1.20 p. m. on the 8th instant I repaired alongside of the British mail packet in an armed cutter, accompanied by Mr. Houston, second assistant engineer, and Mr. Grace, the boatswain.

I went on board the Trent alone leaving the two officers in the boat with orders to await until it became necessary to show some force.

I was shown up by the first officer to the quarter-deck where I met the captain and informed him who I was, asking to see his passenger list. He declined letting me see it. I then told him that I had information of Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland having taken their passage at Havana in the packet to Saint Thomas and would satisfy myself whether they were on board before allowing his steamer to proceed. Mr. Slidell evidently hearing his name mentioned came up to me and asked if I wanted to see him. Mr. Mason soon joined us, and then Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland when I made known the object of my visit. The captain of the Trent opposed anything like a search of his vessel nor would he consent to show papers or passenger list. The four gentlemen above mentioned protested also against my arresting and sending them to the U. S. steamer near by. There was considerable noise among the passengers just about this time and that led Mr. Houston and Mr. Grace to repair on board with some six or eight men, all armed. After several unsuccessful efforts to persuade Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell to go with me peaceably I called to Mr. Houston and ordered him to return to the ship with the information that the four gentlemen named in your order of the 8th instant were on board, and force must be applied to take them out of the packet. About three minutes after there was still greater excitement on the quarter-deck which brought Mr. Grace with his armed party. I however deemed the presence of any armed men unnecessary and only calculated to alarm the ladies present, and directed Mr. Grace to return to the lower deck where he had been since first coming on board.

It must have been less than half an hour after I boarded the Trent when the second armed cutter under Lieutenant Greer came alongside (only two armed boats being used). He brought in the third cutter eight marines and four machinists in addition to a crew of some twelve men. When the marines and some armed men had been formed just outside of the main-deck cabin where these four gentlemen had gone to pack up their baggage I renewed my efforts to induce them to accompany me on board. Still refusing to accompany me unless force was applied I called in to my assistance four or five officers and first taking hold of Mr. Mason's shoulder with another officer on the opposite side I went as far as the gangway of the steamer and delivered him over to Lieutenant Greer to be placed in the boat. I then returned for Mr. Slidell who insisted that I must apply considerable force to get him to go with me. Calling in at least three officers he was also taken in charge and handed over to Mr. Greer. Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis after protesting went quietly into the boat. They had been permitted to collect their baggage but were sent in advance of it under charge of Lieutenant Greer. I gave my personal attention to the luggage, saw it put in a boat and sent in charge of an officer to the San Jacinto.

When Mr. Slidell was taken prisoner a great deal of noise was made by some of the passengers which caused Lieutenant Greer to send the marines into the cabin. They were immediately ordered to return to their former position outside. I carried out my purpose without using any force beyond what appears in this report. The mail agent, who is a retired commander in the British navy, seemed to have a great deal to say as to the propriety of my course, but I purposely avoided all official intercourse with him. When I finally was leaving the steamer he made some apology for his rude conduct and expressed personally his approval of the manner in which I had carried out my orders. We parted company from the Trent at 3.20 p. m.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. M. FAIRFAX,
Lieutenant and Executive Officer.

[Inclosure No. 4.]

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, *At Sea, November 12, 1861.*Captain WILKES, Commanding San Jacinto.

SIR: In accordance with your instructions I submit the following:

On November 8, between 1 and 2 p. m., I was ordered by Lieutenant Breese, acting executive officer, to shove off with the third cutter and go alongside of the English mail steamer which was then lying to under our guns. In the boat with me were Third Assistant Engineer Hall, Paymaster's Clerk Simpson, Master's Mate Dahlgren, 1 sergeant, 1 corporal and 6 privates of marines, 4 machinists and the crew, consisting of 13 men, the whole party being well armed. When I arrived at the steamer I was met on the guard by Mr. Grace with a message from Lieutenant Fairfax (who had preceded me on board) to bring the marines on board and station them outside of the cabin, which I did; also to keep the spare men on the guard and to have the boats' crews in readiness to jump on board if needed. As soon as the marines were stationed I had the space outside and forward of the cabin kept clear of passengers and assumed a position where I could see Lieutenant Fairfax, who was then engaged in conversation with persons in the cabin. He shortly came out and told me to remain as I was. He then went back into the cabin and in a few minutes returned with Mr. Mason. He had his hand on his shoulder and I think Mr. Hall had his on the other one. He transferred Mr. Mason to me and I had the third cutter hauled up, into which he got. Shortly after Mr. Macfarland came out and got into the boat. I think he was unaccompanied by any of the officers.

About this time I heard a good deal of loud talking in the cabin and above all I heard a woman's voice. I could not hear what she said. Mr. Fairfax appeared to be having an altercation with some one. There was much confusion created by the passengers and ship's officers who were making all kinds of disagreeable and contemptuous noises and remarks.

Just then Mr. Houston came to me and said he thought there would be trouble. I told him to ask Mr. Fairfax if I should bring in the marines. He returned with an answer to bring them in. At that time I heard some one call out "Shoot him." I ordered the marines to come into the cabin which they did at quick time. As they advanced the passengers fell back. Mr. Fairfax then ordered the marines to go out of the cabin which they did, Mr. Slidell at the same time jumping out of a window of the state-room into the cabin where he was arrested by Mr. Fairfax and was then brought by Mr. Hall and Mr. Grace to the boat, into which he got. Soon after Mr. Eustis came to the boat accompanied by Mr. Fairfax.

I then by his order took charge of the boat and conveyed the gentlemen arrested, viz, Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Macfarland and Eustis, to the San Jacinto where I delivered them over to Captain Wilkes. This was about 2 o'clock. I then returned to the steamer. When I reached her the baggage of the gentlemen was being brought up and sent to the San Jacinto. Soon after Mr. Fairfax told me to send the marines and spare hands on board which I did. He then left me in charge of our party and went on board the San Jacinto. About 3 o'clock she ran under the Trent's stern. I was hailed and directed to come on board, which I did with all excepting Mr. Grace, Mr. Dahlgren and Mr. Hall, who came in another boat.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. GREER,
Lieutenant.

P. S.—I desire to add that it was about 1.35 p. m. when I went alongside of the Trent. There were but two armed boats used during the day. A third boat the crew of which were unarmed went alongside during the detention. When I first went on board with the marines and at intervals during my stay the officers of the steamer made a great many irritating remarks to each other and to the passengers which were evidently intended for our benefit. Among other things said were: "Did you ever hear of such an outrage?" "Marines on board! Why, this looks devilish like mutiny." "These Yankees will have to pay well for this." "This is the best thing in the world for the South; England will open the blockade." "We will have a good chance at them now." "Did you ever hear of such a piratical act?" "Why, this is a perfect Bull Run." "They would not have dared to have done it if an English man-of-war had been in sight." The mail agent (a man in the uniform of a commander in the royal navy I think) was very indignant and talkative and tried several times to get me into a discussion of the matter. I told him I was not there for that purpose. He was very bitter. He told me that the English squadron would raise the blockade in twenty days after his report of this outrage (I think he said outrage) got home; that the Northerners might as well give up now, &c. Most all the officers of the vessel showed an undisguised hatred for the Northern people and a sympathy for the Confederates. I will do the captain of the vessel the justice to say that he acted differently from the rest, being when I saw him very reserved and dignified. The officers and men of our party took no apparent notice of the remarks that were made and acted with the greatest forbearance.

Respectfully,

JAS. A. GREER.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES, Commanding.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 11th instant I respectfully report:

That upon going alongside of the English steamer Trent on the 8th of this month Lieutenant Fairfax went on board ordering the boat-swain and myself to remain in the boat. A few minutes after this my attention was attracted by persons speaking in a loud and excited manner upon the steamer's upper deck. While considering its meaning the noise was repeated which decided me to join Lieutenant Fairfax immediately on board, and I found him surrounded by the officers of the ship and passengers, among whom I recognized Messrs. Mason, Slidell and Eustis. The confusion at this time passes description. So soon, however, as he could be heard the mail agent (who was a retired lieutenant or commander in the British navy) protested against the act of removing passengers from an English steamer.

Lieutenant Fairfax requested Mr. Mason to go quietly to the San Jacinto but that gentleman replied that he would "yield only to force," whereupon I was ordered to our ship to report the presence of the above-named gentlemen together with Mr. Macfarland and ask that the remainder of our force be sent to the Trent, after which I returned to her and entering the cabin saw Mr. Fairfax endeavoring to enter Mr. Slidell's room which was then prevented in a measure by the excitement which prevailed in and around that gentleman's quarters. The passengers (not including Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Eustis or Macfarland) were disposed at this time to give trouble; some of them went so far as to threaten, and upon Lieutenant Greer being informed by me of this fact he ordered the marines to clear the passage-way of the cabin, but as Mr. Slidell had now come out of his state-room through the window where we could get to him the order to the marines was countermanded by Lieutenant Fairfax. Mr. Slidell was removed to the boat by Mr. Grace and myself, and no more force was used than would show what would be done in case of necessity. Mr. Mason was taken charge of by Lieutenant Fairfax and Third Assistant Engineer Hall. The two secretaries walked into the boat by themselves.

While we were on board of the Trent many remarks were made reflecting discreditably upon us and the Government of the United States. No one was more abusive than the mail agent, who took pains at the same time to inform us that he was the only person on board officially connected with Her Britannic Majesty's Government who, he said, would in consequence of this act break the blockade of the Southern U. S. ports. Another person supposed to be a passenger was so violent that the captain ordered him to be locked up. A short time before leaving the steamer I was informed by one of her crew that the mail agent was advising the captain to arm the crew and passengers of his ship, which I immediately communicated to Lieutenant Greer. About 3.30 p. m. we returned to the San Jacinto.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. HOUSTON,

Second Assistant Engineer, U. S. Steamer San Jacinto.

[Inclosure No. 6.]

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, At Sea, November 13, 1861.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES,

Commanding U. S. Steamer San Jacinto.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 11th instant I respectfully make the following report of what came under my observation on board the mail steamer Trent whilst hove to under our guns on the 8th instant:

I boarded the steamer in the third cutter under the command of Lieutenant Greer. Immediately on reaching the steamer's deck I stationed four men (an oiler, assistant oiler, and two firemen) who accompanied me in the port gangway. I then went into the cabin where I saw Lieutenant Fairfax surrounded by a large number of passengers and the officers of the ship. He was conversing with Mr. Mason and endeavoring to get him to come peaceably on board this ship. Mr. Mason refused to comply unless by force. Lieutenant Fairfax said he would take him by force and taking hold of Mr. Mason's coat collar gave an order, "Gentlemen, lay hands on him." I then laid hold of him by the coat collar, when Mr. Mason said he would yield under protest. I accompanied him as far as the boat which was at the port gangway.

Returning to the cabin Lieutenant Fairfax was at Mr. Slidell's room. After a short time Mr. Slidell came from his room through a side window. He also refused Lieutenant Fairfax's order to come on board the ship unless by force. I with several of the officers then caught hold and used sufficient power to remove him from the cabin. He was accompanied to the boat by Second Assistant Engineer Houston and Boatswain Grace. I then received an order from both Lieutenants Fairfax and Greer to retain the boat until Messrs. Eustis and Macfarland were found. I remained in the gangway till Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Eustis and Macfarland shoved off, Lieutenant Greer having charge of the gentlemen.

There was a great deal of excitement and talking during the whole time, the officers of the steamer endeavoring particularly to thwart Lieutenant Fairfax in carrying out his orders. They also used very harsh expressions toward us, calling us pirates, piratical expedition, &c., and threatened to open our blockade in a few weeks. At one time the officers and passengers made a demonstration. At the moment the marine guard came hastily in the cabin, but were immediately ordered back by Lieutenant Fairfax.

As far as I am able to judge everything was conducted on our part in a peaceable, quiet and gentlemanly manner, and most remarkably so by Lieutenant Fairfax who certainly had sufficient cause to resort to arms. I remained aboard the Trent till after the baggage belonging to the gentlemen had been sent, and finally returned to this ship with Lieutenant Greer.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE W. HALL,
Third Assistant Engineer, U. S. Navy.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES,

Commanding U. S. Steamer San Jacinto.

SIR: In compliance with your order of yesterday I have the honor to state the following:

Between the hours of 1.30 and 2 p. m. on Friday, November 8, I boarded the mail steamer Trent in the third cutter under the command of Lieut. James A. Greer, of this ship. Immediately after my arrival on board the Trent I was called into the cabin by Lieutenant Fairfax who was endeavoring to persuade Mr. Mason to go peaceably on board the San Jacinto which he obstinately refused to do, and said he would only go by force. Lieutenant Fairfax then said, "Gentlemen" (addressing the officers of this ship then present, Mr. George W. Hall, third assistant engineer; Mr. H. P. Grace, boatswain, and myself), "lay your hands on Mr. Mason," which we accordingly did. Mr. Mason then said, "I yield to force," or words to that effect, when a gentleman alongside in uniform, apparently an officer of the Trent, said, "Under protest." Mr. Mason then said, "I yield to force under protest and will go."

There was a great deal of excitement on board during this time, and the officers and passengers of the steamer were addressing us by numerous opprobrious epithets such as calling us pirates, villains, traitors, &c. The above occurred on the port side of the cabin. Immediately after I was ordered by Lieut. James A. Greer to take charge on the starboard side, as some of our boats were coming alongside to take the personal effects of the prisoners. I remained there until about 3.15 p. m. when I was ordered by Lieut. James A. Greer to return on board the San Jacinto in charge of a portion of the prisoners' baggage.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT G. SIMPSON,
Paymaster's Clerk.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES.

SIR: In obedience to your order I hereby state that I was one of those who boarded the Trent mail packet. Mr. Mason and Messrs. Macfarland and Eustis stepped quietly into the boats and were removed to the San Jacinto. Mr. Slidell, however, on a flat refusal to leave the ship in any other manner was by a gentle application of force placed in the boat and removed.

Everything was conducted in an orderly, gentlemanly manner as far as it came under my observation.

I remain, your obedient servant,

Capt. CHARLES WILKES,

Commanding U. S. Steamer San Jacinto.

SIR: In obedience to your orders of the 12th instant I have the honor to make the following statement:

On the 8th instant about 1.30 p. m. I was ordered to accompany Lieut. D. M. Fairfax in the second cutter to board the mail steamer Trent, then hove to under the guns of the San Jacinto. Lieutenant Fairfax ordered Mr. Houston and myself to remain in the boat while he went on board. A few minutes after Mr. Fairfax boarded her we heard some loud talking on deck and Mr. Houston went on board to see if Mr. Fairfax needed assistance. He shortly returned and delivered Lieutenant Fairfax's order that I should come on board with the crew. I came on board, found Mr. Fairfax surrounded by ladies and gentlemen and reported to him. He ordered me to remain in the gangway with the men. He was talking at the time to Mr. Mason, persuading him to come on board the San Jacinto without further force being used. Soon after another boat came alongside in charge of Lieut. James A. Greer. He went in the cabin. Soon afterward Lieutenant Fairfax ordered me to wait on Mr. Slidell to the boat. At this order some of the passengers began to shout and the marines rushed in the cabin but Lieutenant Fairfax ordered them back to the gangway. I saw Mr. Slidell in the second cutter. Messrs. Mason, Eustis and Macfarland were in the boat. Mr. Greer returned with those gentlemen to the San Jacinto and I was charged to bring the baggage and effects of the gentlemen on board the San Jacinto, which I did and reported my return to Lieutenant Breese. All the officers of this ship that boarded her have been grossly abused by the officers and passengers of the mail steamer.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. P. GRACE,
Boatswain, U. S. Navy.

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, *At Sea, November 9, 1861.*Captain WILKES, U. S. Navy, Commanding San Jacinto.

SIR: We desire to communicate to you by this memorandum the facts attending our arrest yesterday on board the British mail steamer Trent by your order and our transfer to this ship.

We, the undersigned, embarked at Havana on the 7th instant as passengers on board the Trent, Captain Moir, bound to the island of Saint Thomas, the Trent being one of the regular mail and passenger line of the British Royal Steamship Company running from Vera Cruz via Havana to Saint Thomas and thence to Southampton, England. We paid our passage money for the whole route from Havana to Southampton to the British consul at Havana, who acts as the agent or representative of the said steamship company, Mr. Slidell being accompanied by his family consisting of his wife, four children and a servant, and Mr. Eustis by his wife and servants.

The Trent left the port of Havana about 8 o'clock on the morning of the 7th instant and pursued her voyage uninterruptedly until intercepted by the U. S. steamer San Jacinto under your command on the day following (the 8th instant) in the manner now to be related.

When the San Jacinto was first observed several miles distant the Trent was pursuing the usual course of her voyage along the old Bahama or Nicholas Channel; was about 240 miles from Havana and in sight of the light-house of Paredon Grande, the San Jacinto then lying stationary or nearly so about the middle of the channel and where it was some fifteen miles wide as since shown us on the chart, the nationality of the ship being then unknown.

When the Trent had approached near enough for her flag to be distinguished it was hoisted at the peak and at the main and so remained for a time. No flag was shown by the San Jacinto.

When the Trent had approached within a mile of the San Jacinto, still pursuing the due course of her voyage, a shotted gun was fired from the latter ship across the course of the Trent and the U. S. flag at the same time displayed at the peak. The British flag was again immediately hoisted as before by the Trent and so remained. When the Trent had approached, still on her course, within from 200 to 300 yards of the San Jacinto a second shotted gun was fired from your ship again across the course of the Trent. When the Trent got within hailing distance her captain inquired what was wanted. The reply was understood to be they would send a boat, both ships being then stationary with steam shut off. A boat very soon put off from your ship followed immediately by two other boats with full crews and armed with muskets and side arms. A lieutenant in the naval uniform of the United States and with side arms boarded the Trent, and in the presence of most of the passengers then assembled on the upper deck said to Captain Moir that he came with orders to demand his passenger list. The captain refused to produce it and formally protested against any right to visit his ship for the purpose indicated.

After some conversation importing renewed protests on the part of the captain against the alleged object of the visit and on the part of the officer of the San Jacinto that he had only to execute his orders, the latter said the two gentlemen (naming Mr. Slidell and Mr. Mason) were known to be on board as also two other gentlemen (naming Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland) and that his orders were to take and carry them on board the San Jacinto. It should have been noted that on first addressing the captain the officer announced himself as a lieutenant of the U. S. steamer San Jacinto. The four gentlemen thus named being present the lieutenant addressed Mr. Slidell and afterward Mr. Mason repeating that his orders were to take them together with Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland and carry them on board his ship, which orders he must execute.

Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell in reply protested in the presence of the captain of the Trent, his officers and passengers against such threatened violation of their persons and of their rights, and informed the lieutenant that they would not leave the ship they were in unless compelled by the employment of actual force greater than they could resist and Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland united with them in expressing a like purpose. That officer stated that he hoped he would not be compelled to resort to the use of force but if it became necessary to employ it in order to execute his orders he was prepared to do so. He was answered by the undersigned that they would submit to such force alone. The lieutenant then went to the gangway where his boats were; the undersigned going at the same time to their state-rooms on the deck next below, followed by Captain Moir and by the other passengers. The lieutenant returned with a party of his men a portion of whom were armed with side arms, and others appearing to be a squad of marines having muskets and bayonets. Mr. Slidell was at this time in his state-room immediately by and in full view. The lieutenant then said to Mr. Mason that having his force now present he hoped to be relieved from the necessity of calling it into actual use. That gentleman again answered that he would only submit to actual force greater than he could overcome when the lieutenant and several of his men by his order took hold of him in a manner and numbers sufficient to make resistance fruitless, and Mr. Slidell joining the group at the same time one or more of the armed party took like hold of him and those gentlemen at once went into the boat.

During this scene many of the passengers became highly excited and gave vent to the strongest expressions of indignation, seeming to indicate a purpose of resistance on their part, when the squad armed with muskets with bayonets fixed made sensible advance of one or two paces with their arms at a charge. It must be added here, omitted in the course of the narrative, that before the party left the upper deck an officer of the Trent named Williams, in the naval uniform of Great Britain and known to the passengers as having charge of the mails and accompanying them to England, said to the lieutenant that as the only person present directly representing his government he felt called upon in language as strong and emphatic as he could express to denounce the whole proceeding as a piratical act.

Mr. Slidell and Mr. Mason, together with Mr. Eustis and Mr. Macfarland, against whom force in like manner had been used, were taken to the San Jacinto as soon as they entered the boat. When they reached your ship you received them near the gangway, announcing yourself as Captain Wilkes, the commander of the ship, and conducted them to your cabin, which you placed at their disposal. When the undersigned came on board they found the men at their quarters and the guns bearing on the Trent. After some time occupied in bringing on board our baggage and effects the San Jacinto proceeded to the northward through the Santaren Channel, the Trent having been detained from three to four hours.

The foregoing is believed to be a correct narrative in substance of the facts and circumstances attending our arrest and transfer from the British mail steamer to the ship under your command, and which we doubt not will be corroborated by the lieutenant present as well as by all who witnessed them.

The incidents here given in detail may not have been witnessed by each one of the undersigned individually but they were by one or more of them. As for the most part they did not pass under your notice we have deemed it proper to present them in this form before you, expressing the wish that if considered incorrect in any part the inaccuracies may be pointed out.

With a respectful request that you will transmit a copy of this paper to the Government of the United States together with your report of the transaction, to facilitate which a copy is herewith inclosed,

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN SLIDELL.

Messrs. JOHN SLIDELL, JAMES M. MASON, GEORGE EUSTIS and J. E. MACFARLAND.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter dated the 9th instant was handed to me yesterday. I shall transmit it agreeably to your request to the honorable Secretary of the Navy with my report of the transaction to which it refers.

In reply to your wish to have any inaccuracies it may contain pointed out I deem it my duty to say that the facts differ materially in respect to the time and circumstances.

First, the facts in my possession are derived from the log book (the official record of the ship); and second, from the reports in writing of all the officers who visited the Trent, all which will form a part of my report.

SIR: The San Jacinto, Captain Wilkes, has just arrived (2 p. m.) from the Bahama Channel. She put in here for coal in order to get to New York. She has on board Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Eustis and Macfarland, all of whom she took out of the English steamer Trent on the 8th instant. The moment she gets through with taking on board 100 tons of coal she will start for New York.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: I have found it impossible to reach New York, my coal being exhausted; I have but a half day's supply remaining on board. I shall obtain sufficient in a few hours to proceed forthwith to my destination, New York, where I hope to receive your instructions relative to the Confederate prisoners I have on board and this ship.

I have determined to send Commander A. Taylor, U. S. Navy, who is a passenger in this ship from the coast of Africa, to Washington by the boat as bearer of dispatches and have given him orders to report to you in person. He will be able to answer you all and every question relative to the subject of my dispatch of which he is the bearer.

Believing that the Department has entertained doubts of the loyalty of Commander Taylor it affords me great pleasure to say that my intercourse with him has fully satisfied me that no one is more loyal to the Union in the Navy.

DEAR SIR: The excitement of the day—the seizure of Mason and Slidell—must plead my apology for addressing you. I have conversed with many of our leading merchants, heard the opinions of many of our ablest lawyers, and all agree that the action of Captain Wilkes in seizing these men is commendable and that the Administration ought to sustain him and hold them at all hazards. In New York the English interest will be loud in condemnation and ought not to be heeded.

We think here the results will justify the act of Wilkes and there are precedents in abundance in the records of the British courts to sustain it. Public sentiment in New England will be all right and entirely sustain this course. The question of opening a port of trade at Beaufort, S. C., if seriously entertained involves numerous questions and difficulties and here it is generally considered that it will be a mistake to attempt it.

With great respect, yours, truly,

PHILO S. SHELTON.

NEW YORK, *November 18, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Washington.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the relatives of John Slidell, esq., and the family of the late Commodore Perry (whose daughter is my wife) I write to ask whether I may be allowed to communicate with him and to tender him so far as a loyal citizen may do such acts of kindness and friendship as his situation may demand. You will greatly oblige me if you will indicate the practice and wishes of the Government in this respect. Where I am known it would be unnecessary for me to add that I have no sympathy whatever in any of the political views of Mr. Slidell and never entertained any other feeling than love for my country and her flag.

With high regard, your obedient servant,

WASHINGTON, November 19, 1861.

(Received December 2.)

[EARL RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: I have already informed your lordship by telegraph that Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell who are believed to have been on their way to England and France as commissioners from the so-called Confederate Government were taken by force out of the British mail-packet Trent by the U. S. ship San Jacinto in the Bahama Channel and brought to this country as prisoners.

The copious extracts from American newspapers which I have the honor to inclose* will make your lordship acquainted with such particulars concerning this unfortunate affair as have transpired here. They will also convey to you a tolerably correct idea of the impression which it has made upon the American public. The evidence of the English witnesses on board the Trent will probably reach London about the same time as the present dispatch. Without a knowledge of that evidence it is impossible for me to form any correct opinion of the character of the transaction. I have accordingly deemed it right to maintain the most complete reserve on the subject. To conceal the distress which I feel would be impossible nor would it if possible be desirable; but I have expressed no opinion on the questions of international law involved; I have hazarded no conjecture as to the course which will be taken by Her Majesty's Government. On the one hand I dare not run the risk of compromising the honor and inviolability of the British flag by asking for a measure of reparation which may prove to be inadequate. On the other hand I am scarcely less unwilling to incur the danger of rendering a satisfactory settlement of the question more difficult by making a demand which may turn out to be unnecessarily great.

In the present imperfect state of my information I feel that the only proper and prudent course is to wait for the orders which your lordship will give with a complete knowledge of the whole case. I am unwilling moreover to deprive any explanation or reparation which the United States Government may think it right to offer of the grace of being made spontaneously. I know too that a demand from me would very much increase the main difficulty which the Government would feel in yielding to any disposition which they may have to make amends to Great Britain. The American people would more easily tolerate a spontaneous offer of reparation made by its Government from a sense of justice than a compliance with a demand for satisfaction from a foreign minister.†

SIR: I intended to send you the inclosed dispatch from New York; but on my arrival in the Narrows I was boarded by a steam-tug with Marshal Murray and his deputy on board. As soon as they came on board and handed me your and Mr. Seward's dispatch I headed the ship for Boston.

† Some of the correspondence between the British authorities relating to Mason and Slidell's case herein arranged in its chronological order with the American reports, orders, correspondence, &c., on the same subject, is copied from an official British document, "North America, No. 5," covering "Correspondence respecting the seizure of Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis from on board the royal mail-packet Trent by the commander of the U. S. ship of war San Jacinto; presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, 1862." It was transmitted to the Department of State by Hon. Charles Francis Adams. See Adams to Seward, January 17, 1862, discussing some of this correspondence. Copies of the same document are also found on file in the Confederate archives, having been transmitted by the Confederate representatives in London to the authorities in Richmond.—COMPILER.

Adverse winds and want of coal compelled me to put in this port, and shall leave as soon as I have taken in sufficient coal to carry me to Boston.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy:

I have been obliged to put in here for coal, being unable to reach Boston owing to the severe winds we encountered. I shall coal and leave the earliest moment for my destination. I forward you the contents of a note received from the prisoners on board my ship at their request, and ask for an early reply to its contents. It is as follows, viz:

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, At Sea, November 20, 1861.

Capt. CHARLES WILKES.

SIR: You have informed us in consequence of adverse winds and a short supply of coal it is your intention to put into Newport, R. I. We have seen in the newspapers that the Government of the United States has decided that we shall be placed in custody of the commanding officer at Fort Warren in Boston Harbor. The voyage from Newport to Boston by sea at this season of the year will probably be tempestuous and disagreeable; still we should with the exception of one of the signers of this letter who is much indisposed prefer that mode of conveyance to Fort Warren to that by land. Still we would much prefer to be placed in custody at Newport on account of comparative mildness of climate and the delicate health of the undersigned, and we are willing to pledge ourselves not to make any attempt to escape nor to communicate with any person while there unless permitted so to do. We will esteem it a favor if you will by telegraph make our wishes known to your Government.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,
 JOHN SLIDELL.
 J. M. MASON.
 J. E. MACFARLAND.

I have forwarded you a dispatch relative to my reasons for making the capture of these commissioners by this day's mail.

Your obedient servant,
CHARLES WILKES.

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * I transmit to your lordship herewith copies* of the articles on the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell which have been published in the principal newspapers since I had the honor to address to you my dispatch of the 19th ultimo. To a person accustomed to the strong language of the American press these articles appear moderate and even subdued in tone. At all events the line taken by the greater part of the newspapers is rather to argue that Great Britain has not the right to complain and therefore will not do so than to defy her to make objection right or wrong. I wish I could add that the argument was generally carried on in courteous language or in a friendly spirit.

Your lordship may observe in several of the inclosed extracts from the American newspapers assertions concerning language stated to have been held by me in private conversation. These assertions are wholly without foundation. I have avoided the subject of the capture on board the Trent as much as possible, and have said no more than that it is an untoward event which I very much regret. I have neither publicly nor privately expressed any opinion whatever on the question of international law or on the course likely to be taken by Her Majesty's Government. I have had no communication on the subject, verbal or written, official or private, with any member of the Government of the United States.

Messrs. Mason and Slidell with their secretaries, Messrs. Macfarland and Eustis, have been sent to Fort Warren, in Boston Harbor.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I left Newport in this ship at 11.30 p. m. on the 21st instant en route for Boston, but on the next morning I was obliged to put into Holmes' Hole on account of the intense fog. We arrived off Boston Light last evening and anchored there, the night being very dark and a severe storm ahead.

I delivered the Confederate commissioners this morning to Colonel Dinick, commanding U. S. detachment at Fort Warren, from whom I obtained a receipt. So soon as the prisoners were landed I proceeded immediately to Boston and at 2 p. m. anchored off the navy-yard.

I have telegraphed you through Captain Hudson the amount of money required to pay off the crew and shall await your further orders.

U. S. STEAMER SAN JACINTO, At Sea, November 16, 1861.

HON. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: In my dispatch by Commander Taylor* I confine myself to the reports of the movements of this ship and the facts connected with the capture of Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Eustis and Macfarland, as I intended to write you particularly relative to the reasons which induced my action in making them prisoners.

When I heard at Cienfuegos on the south side of Cuba of these commissioners having landed on the Island of Cuba and that they were at the Havana and would depart in the English steamer on the 7th of November, I determined to intercept them and carefully examined all the authorities on international law to which I had access, viz, Kent, Wheaton and Vattel, besides various decisions of Sir William Scott and other judges of the admiralty court of Great Britain which bore upon the rights of neutrals and their responsibilities.

The governments of Great Britain, France and Spain having issued proclamations that the Confederate States were viewed, considered and treated as belligerents and knowing that the ports of Great Britain, France, Spain and Holland in the West Indies were open to their vessels and that they were admitted to all the courtesies and protection vessels of the United States received, every aid and attention being given them, proved clearly that they acted upon this view and decision and brought them within the international law of search and under the responsibilities. I therefore felt no hesitation in boarding and searching all vessels of whatever nation I fell in with and have done so.

The question arose in my mind whether I had the right to capture the persons of these commissioners, whether they were amenable to capture. There was no doubt I had the right to capture vessels with written dispatches. They are expressly referred to in all authorities, subjecting the vessel to seizure and condemnation if the captain of the vessel has the knowledge of their being on board. Both these gentlemen were not dispatches in the literal sense and did not seem to come under that designation and nowhere could I find a case in point.

That they were commissioners I had ample proof from their own avowal, and bent on mischievous and traitorous errands against our country, to overthrow its institutions and enter into treaties and alliances with foreign States, expressly forbidden by the Constitution.

They had been presented to the captain-general of Cuba by Her Britannic Majesty's consul-general, but the captain-general told me that he had not received them in that capacity but as distinguished gentlemen and strangers.

I then considered them as the embodiment of dispatches and as they had openly declared themselves as charged with all authority from the Confederate Government to form treaties and alliances tending to the establishment of their independence I became satisfied that their mission was adverse and criminal to the Union and it therefore became my duty to arrest their progress and capture them if they had no passports or papers from the Federal Government as provided for under the law of nations, viz: "That foreign ministers of a belligerent on board of neutral ships are required to possess papers from the other belligerent to permit them to pass free."

* Wilkes to Secretary Welles, November 15, p. 1080.

Report and their assumption gave them the title of ministers to France and England, but inasmuch as they had not been received by either of these powers I did not conceive they had any immunity attached to their persons and were but escaped conspirators plotting and contriving to overthrow the Government of the United States and they were therefore not to be considered as having any claim to the immunities attached to the character they thought fit to assume.

As respects the steamer in which they embarked I ascertained in the Havana that she was a merchant vessel plying between Vera Cruz, the Havana and Saint Thomas carrying the mail by contract.

The agent of the vessel, the son of the British consul at Havana, was well aware of the character of these persons; that they engaged their passage and did embark in the vessel; his father had visited and introduced them as ministers of the Confederate States on their way to England and France.

They went in the steamer with the knowledge and by the consent of the captain, who endeavored afterward to conceal them by refusing to exhibit the passenger list and the papers of the vessel. There can be no doubt he knew they were carrying highly important dispatches, and were endowed with instructions inimical to the United States. This rendered his vessel (a neutral) a good prize and I determined to take possession of her and as I mentioned in my report send her to Key West for adjudication where I am well satisfied she would have been condemned for carrying these persons and for resisting to be searched. The cargo was also liable, as all the shippers were knowing to the embarkation of these live dispatches and their traitorous motives and actions to the Union of the United States.

I forbore to seize her, however, in consequence of my being so reduced in officers and crew and the derangement it would cause innocent persons, there being a large number of passengers who would have been put to great loss and inconvenience as well as disappointment from the interruption it would have caused them in not being able to join the steamer from Saint Thomas to Europe. I therefore concluded to sacrifice the interests of my officers and crew in the prize and suffered the steamer to proceed after the necessary detention to effect the transfer of these commissioners, considering I had obtained the important end I had in view and which affected the interests of our country and interrupted the action of that of the Confederates.

I would add that the conduct of Her Britannic Majesty's subjects both official and others showed but little regard or obedience to her proclamation by aiding and abetting the views and endeavoring to conceal the persons of these commissioners.

I have pointed out sufficient reasons to show you that my action in this case was derived from a firm conviction that it became my duty to make these parties prisoners and to bring them to the United States.

Although in giving up this valuable prize I have deprived the officers and crew of a well-earned reward I am assured they are quite content to forego any advantages which might have accrued to them under the circumstances.

I may add that having assumed the responsibility I am willing to abide the result.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES WILKES,

Captain.

I forbear from speaking of the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell. The act was done by Commander Wilkes without instructions and even without the knowledge of the Government.

[Mr. HAMMOND.]

SIR: I am commanded by my lords commissioners of the admiralty to send you herewith for the information of Earl Russell a copy of a letter dated the 9th instant from Commander Williams, the agent for mails on board the contract steamer Trent, detailing the circumstances under which Messrs. Mason and Slidell, commissioners from the so-styled Confederate States of America to this country and France, and their secretaries were forcibly taken out of the Trent by an armed party of officers and men from the U. S. ship of war San Jacinto on the 8th instant in the Bahama Channel.

TRENT, At Sea, November 9, 1861.

Captain PATEY.

SIR: There devolves on me the painful duty of reporting to you a wanton act of aggression on this ship by the U. S. war screw-steamer San Jacinto, carrying a broadside of seven guns and a shell pivot gun of heavy caliber on the fore-castle, which took place on the 8th instant in the Bahama Channel abreast of the Paredon Light-House. The Trent left Havana at 8 a. m. on the 7th instant with Her Majesty's mails for England, having on board a large freight of specie as well as numerous passengers, amongst whom were Messrs. Mason and Slidell, the former accredited with a special mission from the Confederate States to the Government of Great Britain and the latter to the French Government, with their respective secretaries, Messrs. Macfarland and Eustis.

Shortly after noon on the 8th a steamer having the appearance of a man-of-war but not showing colors was observed ahead hove to. We immediately hoisted our ensign at the peak but it was not responded to until on nearing her at 1.15 p. m. she fired a round shot from her pivot gun across our bows and showed American colors. Our engines were immediately slowed and we were still approaching her when she discharged a shell from her pivot gun immediately across our bows, exploding half a cable's length ahead of us. We then stopped when an officer with an armed guard of marines boarded us and demanded a list of passengers, which demand being refused the officer said that he had orders to arrest Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis and that he had sure information of their being passengers in the Trent.

Declining to satisfy him whether such persons were on board or not, Mr. Slidell stepped forward and announced that the four persons he had then named were standing before him under British protection and that if they were taken on board the San Jacinto they must be taken vi et armis, the commander of the Trent and myself at the same time protesting against this illegal act, this act of piracy carried out by brute force, as we had no means of resisting the aggression the San Jacinto being at the time on our port beam about 200 yards off, her ship's company at quarters, ports open and tompons out. Sufficient time being given for such necessities as they might require being sent to them these gentlemen were forcibly taken out of the ship and then a further demand was made that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto, but as he expressed his determination not to go unless forcibly compelled likewise this latter demand was not carried into execution.

At 3.40 we parted company and proceeded on our way to Saint Thomas, on our arrival at which place I shall deliver to the consul duplicates of this letter to Lord Lyons, Sir Alexander Milne, Commdore Dunlop and the consul-general at Havana.

I have, &c.,

RICHARD WILLIAMS,

Commander, Royal Navy, and Admiralty Agent in Charge of Mails.

LANCASTER, OHIO, November 28, 1861.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: I do not think it wise policy for the United States to insist on extending the rights of belligerents over neutral vessels on the high seas, consequently we ought not to vouch as authority previous aggressive acts of England at a time when she was a swaggering bully on the ocean and insist on them as supported by international law, for if we do our mouths will be closed when England as a belligerent hereafter (and such she will be ten years to our one) shall stretch the law against us to the same point.

If she remonstrates and makes reclamation the proper mode in my judgment is to let her lay down the law—agree to any proposition she may lay down favorable to neutral vessels, their cargoes and passengers. Say to her: "You have not habitually conformed to these rules and may possibly trespass them hereafter. The law must be the same to us both now and in all future time. We will make a treaty with you declaring and settling as international law the principle which you now propose and when settled by treaty we will let it embrace this case and fully conform to it."

The proposition that she must lay down will be that a neutral vessel cleared at one neutral port and bound to another is not liable to search and seizure under charge of carrying contraband of war; or in more general terms that under these circumstances the neutral vessel is entitled to the same immunity as neutral soil. I think this position a sound one. It is at all events for the permanent interest of the United States that it should be settled as the law of nations if it can be definitively so settled.

But England will not agree to it. If the proposition be made to so settle it by treaty she will equivocate, diplomatize and finally waive her claim.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

T. EWING.

[Indorsement.]

DECEMBER 3, 1861.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

GOVERNOR: The President directs me to send you Mr. Ewing's second* dissertation on neutral rights.

JOHN HAY.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 29, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: It has appeared to me not without its social use to accept from time to time such invitations as are customarily extended to the minister at this season of the year by persons of influence to visit them at their houses in the country. I was absent for three days this week at the residence of a member of Parliament in Yorkshire on one of these occasions when the news came to London of the seizure of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board of the steamer Trent in the West Indies by the commander of the U. S. steamer San Jacinto. A telegram was sent up to me on Wednesday evening and I returned to this place the next day.

In the meantime it is not to be denied that the popular feeling has been very strongly excited by this intelligence. Advantage was taken of it in Liverpool by the friends of the insurgents to summon a hasty meeting and precipitate the public indignation upon the ministry in order to drive them into some decided measure. It may be regarded as rather a fortunate event that circumstances had in some degree prepared them for the possibility of such a result. Whatever may have been the source from which Lord Palmerston drew the inferences of the mission of the James Adger which he explained to me† it is now clear to my mind that he erred rather in the selecting of the agency than in the nature of the work proposed to be done. So much was he convinced of the soundness of his opinion that it now appears from the newspapers an armed steamer had been actually sent out before he saw me to be on the watch to prevent such a catastrophe in this neighborhood. It is also made certain that the law officers of the Crown had been already consulted on the merits of the case. Hence the readiness with which the leading newspapers immediately came forward to elucidate to the people the doctrine applicable to the question.

*No other letter from Ewing on this subject found.

†See Adams to Seward, November 15, p. 1078.

It is not to be disguised that the medicine is not the less bitter because it is an old one of their own concoction. The pride of the British nation is deeply touched. The consequences foreseen by Lord Palmerston are not unlikely to follow and all opportunity for further usefulness in my present capacity threatens to be soon at an end. I may perhaps be permitted to add that I regret this prospect. A delay of a few months or even of a few weeks might have brought our affairs to a positive termination without materially affecting the good understanding here which has been in such rapid process of dissolution. As it is, what with the case of the Harvey Birch to irritate us on the one side and that of the steamer Trent to provoke them on the other, the season for the influence of pacific counsels is gradually but certainly passing away.

On my arrival in town on Thursday I found a note from Lord Russell asking me to call and see him at an hour of the day which had already elapsed. But my secretary, Mr. Moran, who had been apprised of the moment when I should return, called in person at the foreign office and explained to one of the under secretaries the reason of the delay. The conference was then postponed until Friday at a quarter to 2 o'clock, when it took place. The substance of it I will now proceed to submit to your consideration.

His lordship remarked that it was altogether too early to enter into any discussion of the subject upon which he had desired to see me, the seizure of Messrs. Mason, Slidell and others on board of a British vessel. His object now was only to inquire in advance of a meeting of the ministers at 2 o'clock whether I had any information from my Government touching the matter or was possessed of any light which it might be useful for him to possess. I replied that I knew no more of the affair than what had been stated in the newspapers. I was not prepared to say a word about it because I was possessed neither of the true state of the facts nor of the views which my Government had taken of them. I did not even know how far the naval officer had acted under authority.

His lordship then alluded to my conference with Lord Palmerston the other day and to his report of what I had said to him about the mission of the James Adger in order to know if it could have been correct. Lord Palmerston had understood me as saying that the captain's instructions which I told him I had seen not only directed him to intercept the Nashville with Messrs. Slidell and Mason on board but prohibited him from stopping any British ship. I replied that his lordship had not understood me quite correctly. He had begun the conversation by taking for granted that the intention of the captain of the Adger had been to take these persons out of a British ship. I had asked him what reason he had for imputing such a motive to him. His lordship had assigned his belief to come from a coincidence in the movements of the respective ships. I then observed that if that was all I could say that I had seen the captain's instructions, which directed him to intercept the Nashville if he could and in case of inability to do so to return at once to New York keeping his eye on such British ships as might be going to the United States with contraband of war. Lord Palmerston's recollection and mine differed mainly in this last particular. Lord Russell then remarked that this statement was exactly that which he had recollected my making to him. Nothing had been said in the instructions about other British ships.

The conference then ended having lasted about ten minutes. His lordship's manner was a little more grave than usual but in all other respects much the same as ever.

It is now stated that the Queen's proclamation* is to be issued prohibiting the further exportation of contraband of war. This is understood to be mainly caused by the purchases lately made of great quantities of saltpeter for the use of the Government of the United States. I only regret that it had not been issued long ago and thus put an end to the annoyance and irritation consequent upon the great exertions of the insurgent emissaries to fit out vessels against us in the ports of this country.

I ought to add that in going into the ante room previous to the conference I met there Baron Brunnow, the Russian minister, who seized the occasion to express his great regret at the misunderstanding which is taking place and his earnest offer of any services on the part of himself or his Government that might have the effect to restore friendly relations between the two countries.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 29, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * In the meantime the excitement caused by the late news of the seizure of Messrs. Mason and Slidell is so great as to swallow up every other topic for the moment. It may then be the part of prudence to let the old topic† lie in abeyance until the heats stirred by the new one shall subside.

* * * * *

It is plain from the turn which has been taken in the newspapers of this morning that the law officers of the Crown have modified their original position so far as to deny the right of the United States Government to take out persons when they do not take papers and things. In other words Great Britain would have been less offended if the United States had insulted her a great deal more.

There is little reason to doubt that the same steamer which bears this will carry out a demand for an apology and the restoration of the men.

I confess that the turn things have taken has given me great anxiety for the fate of my unhappy country. But I shall wait with resignation the instructions which will probably close my mission.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

† The capture and destruction of American merchant vessels by Confederate privateers fitted out in English ports.

have devolved upon you, has given me very high gratification as a proof of your regard and friendship. I would be happy indeed if I could accept the kind invitation to myself and wife which your letter conveys, and I hope the day will come when I shall be able to see you again in your own land and enjoy the hospitality which I have received before and which you offer to me again.

Little did I think when we last met in London that the disruption of your glorious Union was either possible or near at hand, though I knew that in any danger or difficulty that might arise your voice would be heard on the rightful side and that no exertions of yours would be spared to do a true man's duty.

I would not have run the risk of boring you with politics in reply to a letter of friendship, but the excitement in London and throughout England is so great in reference to the unfortunate seizure of Messrs. Slidell and Mason that I cannot refrain from telling you what I see and hear for your information and that of the President. There never was within memory such a burst of feeling as has been created by the news of the boarding of the La Plata [Trent]. The people are frantic with rage, and were the country polled I fear that 999 men out of 1,000 would declare for immediate war. Lord Palmerston cannot resist the impulse if he would. If he submits to the insult to the flag his ministry is doomed—it would not last a fortnight. But he is decided to demand reparation, and Lord Derby has made no secret for the past two or three months of his opinion that England ought immediately to recognize the Southern Confederation.

The whole feeling of the people has undergone a change. Sympathy was but coldly expressed for the South. Now it is warm and universal. I deeply deplore and lament what has happened, and could I believe that your Government could or would undo it and disavow the act of the captain of the San Jacinto I should rejoice and consider it a blessing to my own country as well as to the United States. The scene in the Reform Club when the men arrived was more exciting than anything I ever witnessed, and staid and sober men (as Englishmen generally are) became violent, demonstrative and outrageous. Englishmen would rather fight with any power in the world than with America, but I do assure you their blood is up and they mean mischief in this business.

A peaceful member of our Parliament declared to me that if this insult were not atoned for he saw no use for a flag; that he would recommend the British colors to be torn into shreds and sent to Washington for the use of the Presidential water-closets, and that he would rather become a U. S. citizen than continue any longer to be thought an Englishman. The whole people express the same feeling though not quite so forcibly or idiomatically as this gentleman. I mix a great deal with people of all classes of society and have the means of feeling the public pulse as thoroughly as any man in London and I give you openly the result of my observations.

The Southern men in London, of whom I know several, are delighted and think it the best thing that could have happened for their cause. They already see the South recognized by England and France in unison and cannot conceal their exultation.

I am afraid you will think this but a rambling and incoherent letter, but it is because I so admire and esteem you that I write what comes uppermost, perhaps not without being touched with the contagious excitement of everybody about me, excitement which you know is difficult to be free from when the world is crazy around you. I trust, however, that it will blow over and that the United States and England will be friends now and forever.

With the sincerest and most hearty wishes for your welfare and health, and for the restoration of peace to your suffering country, believe me, my dear Mr. Seward, ever your devoted friend,

CHARLES MACKAY.

(Received December 12.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: The discussion of the questions of international law raised by the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board the Trent continues to be actively carried on in the newspapers of this country. With previous dispatches I have transmitted to your lordship abundance of articles in favor of the legality of the capture. I have the honor to inclose herewith two* in which the contrary opinion is maintained. That from The Albion has attracted a great deal of attention. It quotes the stipulation of the postal convention of 1848 by which immunities are secured to postal steamers even in case of war between Great Britain and the United States and argues by analogy that such steamers are still more entitled to respect by the United States under present circumstances.

I have had no communication with the United States Government concerning the capture.

I am informed that a letter from one of the prisoners which has been received here states that they are considerably treated in Fort Warren.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 30, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: Your confidential note of the 15th of November, not marked as a dispatch, has been submitted to the President and I hasten to reply to it in time for the Wednesday's mail.

No minister ever spoke or acted more wisely in a crisis which excited deep public solicitude than you did on the occasion of the lord mayor's dinner. We are impressed very favorably by Lord Palmerston's conversation with you. You spoke the simple fact when you told him that the life of this insurrection is sustained by its hopes of recognition in Great Britain and in France. It would perish in ninety days if those hopes should cease. I have never for a moment believed that such a recognition could take place without producing immediately a war between the United States and all the recognizing powers. I have not supposed it possible that the British Government could fail to see this; and at the same time I have sincerely believed the British Government must in its inmost heart be as averse to such a war as I know this Government is.

I am sure that this Government has carefully avoided giving any cause of offense or irritation to Great Britain, but it has seemed to me that the British Government has been inattentive to the currents that seemed to be bringing the two countries into collision. * * *

* Not found.

I infer from Lord Palmerston's remark that the British Government is now awake to the importance of averting possible conflict and disposed to confer and act with earnestness to that end. If so we are disposed to meet them in the same spirit as a nation chiefly of British lineage, sentiments and sympathies—a civilized and humane nation—a Christian people.

Since that conversation was held Captain Wilkes in the steamer San Jacinto has boarded a British colonial steamer and taken from her deck two insurgents who were proceeding to Europe on an errand of treason against their own country. This is a new incident unknown to and unforeseen at least in its circumstances by Lord Palmerston. It is to be met and disposed of by the two Governments if possible in the spirit to which I have adverted. Lord Lyons has prudently refrained from opening the subject to me, as I presume waiting instructions from home. We have done nothing on the subject to anticipate the discussion and we have not furnished you with any explanations. We adhere to that course now because we think it more prudent that the ground taken by the British Government should be first made known to us here and that the discussion if there must be one shall be had here. It is proper, however, that you should know one fact in the case without indicating that we attach much importance to it, namely, that in the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board a British vessel Captain Wilkes having acted without any instructions from the Government the subject is therefore free from the embarrassment which might have resulted if the act had been specially directed by us.

I trust that the British Government will consider the subject in a friendly temper and it may expect the best disposition on the part of this Government.

Although this is a confidential note I shall not object to your reading it to Earl Russell and Lord Palmerston if you deem it expedient.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 30, 1861.

[Capt. CHARLES WILKES.]

SIR: I congratulate you on your safe arrival, and especially do I congratulate you on the great public service you have rendered in the capture of the rebel emissaries. Messrs. Mason and Slidell have been conspicuous in the conspiracy to dissolve the Union and it is well known that when seized by you they were on a mission hostile to the Government and the country. Your conduct in seizing these public enemies was marked by intelligence, ability, decision and firmness and has the emphatic approval of this Department.

It is not necessary that I should in this communication, which is intended to be one of congratulation to yourself, officers and crew, express an opinion on the course pursued in omitting to capture the vessel which had these public enemies on board further than to say that the forbearance exercised in this instance must not be permitted to constitute a precedent hereafter for the infractions of neutral obligations.

SIR: Mr. J. M. Mason wishes to send two bills of exchange on the Royal Bank, Liverpool, to England. One is for £1,600 and the other for £300, in all £1,900 sterling. I informed him I would retain his letter until I heard from you. The bills were given to the officer in charge of the prisoners' funds on Mr. Mason's arrival.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] November 30, 1861.

Lord LYONS, K. C. B., &c., Washington.

MY LORD: Intelligence of a very grave nature has reached Her Majesty's Government.

This intelligence was conveyed officially to the knowledge of the admiralty by Commander Williams, agent for mails on board the contract steamer Trent.

It appears from the letter of Commander Williams, dated "Royal Mail Contract Packet Trent, at sea, November 9," that the Trent left Havana on the 7th instant, with Her Majesty's mails for England, having on board numerous passengers. Commander Williams states that shortly after noon on the 8th a steamer having the appearance of a man-of-war but not showing colors was observed ahead. On nearing her at 1.15 p. m. she fired a round shot from her pivot gun across the bows of the Trent and showed American colors. While the Trent was approaching her slowly the American vessel discharged a shell across the bows of the Trent exploding half a cable's length ahead of her. The Trent then stopped and an officer with a large armed guard of marines boarded her. The officer demanded a list of the passengers; and compliance with this demand being refused the officer said he had orders to arrest Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis, and that he had sure information of their being passengers in the Trent. While some parley was going on upon this matter Mr. Slidell stepped forward and told the American officer that the four persons he had named were then standing before him. The commander of the Trent and Commander Williams protested against the act of taking by force out of the Trent these four passengers then under the protection of the British flag. But the San Jacinto was at that time only 200 yards from the Trent, her ship's company at quarters, her ports open and tompions out. Resistance was therefore out of the question and the four gentlemen before named were forcibly taken out of the ship. A further demand was made that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto but he said he would not go unless forcibly compelled likewise and this demand was not insisted upon.

It thus appears that certain individuals have been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral power, while such vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage—an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

Her Majesty's Government bearing in mind the friendly relations which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the United States are willing to believe that the U. S. naval officer who committed the aggression was not acting in compliance with any authority from his Government, or that if he conceived himself to be so authorized he greatly misunderstood the instructions which he had received; for the Government of the United States must be fully aware that the British Government could not allow such an affront to the national honor to pass without full reparation, and Her Majesty's Government are unwilling to believe that it could be the deliberate intention of the Government of the United States unnecessarily to force into discussion between the two Governments a question of so grave a character and with regard to which the whole British nation would be sure to entertain such unanimity of feeling.

Her Majesty's Government therefore trust that when this matter shall have been brought under the consideration of the Government of the United States that Government will of its own accord offer to the British Government such redress as alone could satisfy the British nation, namely, the liberation of the four gentlemen and their delivery to your lordship in order that they may again be placed under British protection and a suitable apology for the aggression which has been committed. Should these terms not be offered by Mr. Seward you will propose them to him.

You are at liberty to read this dispatch to the Secretary of State and if he shall desire it you will give him a copy of it.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] November 30, 1861.

[Lord LYONS, &c., Washington.]

MY LORD: In my previous dispatch of this date I have instructed you by command of Her Majesty to make certain demands of the Government of the United States.

Should Mr. Seward ask for delay in order that this grave and painful matter should be deliberately considered you will consent to a delay not exceeding seven days. If at the end of that time no answer is given, or if any other answer is given except that of a compliance with the demands of Her Majesty's Government your lordship is instructed to leave Washington with all the members of your legation, bringing with you the archives of the legation and to repair immediately to London. If, however, you should be of the opinion that the requirements of Her Majesty's Government are substantially complied with you may report the facts to Her Majesty's Government for their consideration and remain at your post until you receive further orders.

You will communicate with Vice-Admiral Sir A. Milne immediately upon receiving the answer of the American Government and you will send him a copy of that answer together with such observations as you may think fit to make. You will also give all the information in your power to the governors of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Jamaica, Bermuda and such other of Her Majesty's possessions as may be within your reach.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] November 30, 1861.

[Lord LYONS, &c., Washington.]

MY LORD: Mr. Adams called upon me yesterday at the foreign office by my desire. I asked him whether he had any information or instructions which could throw light on the transactions which had occurred on board the Trent. I said the cabinet was about to meet and I should be glad to receive any information which might assist their deliberations on this painful subject. Mr. Adams said he had no instructions or information which could throw light on what had occurred nor did he know whether the captures which had taken place on board the Trent had the sanction of his Government or not. I said in that case there would be no good and there might be some harm in discussing with him the merits of the question itself, but I wished him to repeat to me what he had told me some days ago in regard to the instructions to the commander of the James Adger. Mr. Adams then said that he had seen the instructions to the commander of the James Adger; that they directed him to look out for the Nashville, a Confederate vessel which it was supposed would convey Messrs. Mason and Slidell to England. He was directed if that supposition should not turn out to be the fact to return to the United States, but to keep an eye on any merchant vessel proceeding from this country with contraband of war. There was nothing in the instructions directing the commander to interfere with any foreign ship bringing Messrs. Mason and Slidell to Europe. Mr. Adams then took his leave.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] November 30, 1861.

THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF THE ADMIRALTY.

MY LORDS: I have received the Queen's commands to transmit to your lordships the instructions* which are to be sent to-day to Lord Lyons. The Queen directs that copies of these instructions should be sent to Vice-Admiral Sir A. Milne. Vice-Admiral Sir A. Milne should be directed to communicate fully with Lord Lyons and to take such measures as circumstances may seem to require.

The vice-admiral will refrain from any act of hostility against the sea or land forces of the United States except in self-defense. But as the act of wanton violence and outrage which has been committed makes it not unlikely that other sudden acts of aggression may be attempted, Vice-Admiral Sir A. Milne will take care not to place his ships in positions where they may be surprised or commanded by batteries on land of a superior force. He should not detach more than one line-of-battle ship and two frigates on the expedition to Vera Cruz, and he should dispose of the rest of his force in the manner in which it may prove most serviceable in case of hostilities. He will look to the safety of Her Majesty's possessions in North America and the West Indies, and he will in all respects execute all such commands as he may receive from your lordships to guide him in the performance of his arduous duties. Your lordships will no doubt be of opinion that Admiral Milne ought not himself to go to Vera Cruz and in that case an officer acquainted with the Mexican coast may be the most fitting person to act with Sir Charles Wyke in the discharge of duties on that coast.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

MY LORD: * * * The dispatches which were agreed to at the cabinet yesterday and which I have signed this morning impose upon you a disagreeable task. My wish would be that at your first interview with Mr. Seward you should not take my dispatch with you but should prepare him for it and ask him to settle with the President and Cabinet what course they would propose. The next time you should bring my dispatch and read it to him fully. If he asks what will be the consequence of his refusing compliance I think you should say that you wish to leave him and the President quite free to take their own course and that you desire to abstain from anything like menace.

Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives December 2, 1861.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to present to Capt. Charles Wilkes a gold medal with suitable emblems and devices in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his good conduct in promptly arresting the rebel ambassadors James M. Mason and John Slidell.

Preamble and resolution adopted by the House of Representatives December 2, 1861.

Whereas Col. Michael Corcoran who was taken prisoner on the battle-field of Manassas has after suffering other indignities been confined by the rebel authorities in the cell of a convicted felon: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to similarly confine James M. Mason, late of Virginia, now in custody at Fort Warren until Colonel Corcoran shall be treated as all the prisoners of war taken by the United States on the battle-field have been treated.

Extract from report of the Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 2, 1861.

The PRESIDENT:

* * * * *

Capt. Charles Wilkes, in command of the San Jacinto, while searching in the West Indies for the Sumter received information that James M. Mason and John Slidell, disloyal citizens and leading conspirators, were with their suite to embark from Havana in the English steamer Trent on their way to Europe to promote the cause of the insurgents. Cruising in the Bahama Channel he intercepted the Trent on the 8th of November and took from her these dangerous men whom he brought to the United States. His vessel having been ordered to refit for service at Charlestown the prisoners were retained on board and conveyed to Fort Warren where they were committed to the custody of Colonel Dimick, in command of that fortress.

The prompt and decisive action of Captain Wilkes on this occasion merited and received the emphatic approval of the Department, and if a too generous forbearance was exhibited by him in not capturing the vessel which had these rebel emissaries on board it may in view of the special circumstances and of its patriotic motives be excused, but it must by no means be permitted to constitute a precedent hereafter for the treatment of any case of similar infraction of neutral obligations by foreign vessels engaged in commerce or the carrying trade.

ADMIRALTY, [London,] December 2, 1861.

[MR. HAMMOND.]

SIR: With reference to my letter of the 27th ultimo inclosing a copy of one dated the 9th of November from Commander Williams relative to the forcible removal of Messrs. Mason and Slidell and their secretaries from the Trent contract steamer by an armed party of officers and men from the San Jacinto, U. S. ship of war, I am commanded by my lords commissioners of admiralty to send you herewith for the information of Earl Russell a copy of a memorandum made by Commander Williams at the admiralty on the 27th ultimo and containing further information on the above-mentioned subject. My lords did not send a copy of this memorandum at the time it was written as Commander Williams on that day made a verbal statement at the foreign office; but it is now transmitted as it may be useful hereafter as showing the actual force used on the occasion and the strong protest made against it by Commander Williams.

I am, &c.,

W. G. ROMAINE,
Secretary to the Admiralty.

[Inclosure.]

Memorandum made by Commander Williams.

On Mr. Slidell's announcing that the four persons inquired for were then standing before Lieutenant Fairfax under British protection and that if taken on board the San Jacinto they must be taken vi et armis, I addressed that officer in the following terms:

In this ship I am the representative of Her Britannic Majesty's Government and in the name of that Government I protest against this illegal act—this violation of international law—this act of piracy which you would not dare to attempt on a ship capable of resisting such aggression.

It was then that Lieutenant Fairfax waved his hand toward the San Jacinto and additional force was sent. The marines were drawn up at the entry port, bayonets fixed; and on Miss Slidell uttering an hysterical scream on her being separated from her father—that is on his breaking the window of his cabin and thrusting his body through to escape from the distressing scene of forcible separation from his family—they rushed into the passage at the charge. There were upward of sixty armed men in all, and the aforesaid gentlemen were then taken out of the ship, an armed guard on either side of each seizing them by the collar of the coat.

Every inducement was held out so far as importunate persuasion would go to prevail on Mrs. Slidell and Mrs. Eustis with the son and three daughters of the former to accompany their husbands, but as they did not wish their wives to be subjected to imprisonment (Lieutenant Fairfax having replied to Mrs. Slidell's inquiry as to their disposal if they did accompany them that they would be sent to Washington) they remained on board the Trent and came to England in the La Plata.

The ships getting somewhat farther apart than when this affair commenced a boat came from the San Jacinto to request us to approach nearer, to which I replied that they had the same power as ourselves and if they wished to be nearer to us they had their own remedy.

*Preamble and resolution adopted by the House of Representatives
December 3, 1861.*

Whereas Col. Alfred M. Wood, of the Fourteenth Regiment New York State Militia, who was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Bull Run, has now by rebel authorities been ordered to confinement in a felon's prison, and by the same order is to be treated as a prisoner convicted of infamous crimes: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to order John Slidell to the same character of prison and to the same treatment until Colonel Wood shall be treated as the United States have treated all prisoners taken in battle.

CONFIDENTIAL.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, December 3, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The Persia has not brought to me any dispatches touching this unfortunate difficulty between the two countries. In the meantime the feeling is running very high on this side and little confidence is entertained of the possibility of preserving peaceful relations. I confess after examining the American journals and the current of opinion in the absence of all knowledge of the views of the Government I am making my arrangements for the termination of my stay at this post, preparatory to the reception of the instructions which I expect with the return of Lord Lyons.

That a very strong argument as against the British Government can be made in justification of the act of seizure does not admit of a doubt. The whole spirit of their policy on the ocean for centuries has been dictatorial and especially toward the United States in their earlier days. At the same time it is not to be denied that the position taken by the United States from first to last has been one of resistance to their policy and of maintenance of the privileges of neutrals to be free from search. I should be very sorry to see our own country varying from what seems to me so honorable a record under the temptation of a little ephemeral success, entailing as it does so many of the most serious consequences to the prosperity of two great nations.

I have been particularly struck with the language used by Mr. Madison on this subject in his instructions given to Mr. Monroe to treat with the Government of Great Britain on the subjects then in dispute between the countries dated 5th of January, 1804. It is scarcely possible for words to be stronger in deprecation of such acts as the one that has just been committed. It would appear that he went so far as to propose a degree of immunity to neutral vessels which was objected to on the part of the British Government on the ground of "the facility it would give to the escape of traitors and the desertion of others whose services in time of war may be particularly important to an enemy." Under these circumstances it would not seem advisable for us to insist upon assuming their position unless we are ready also to assume their old arrogant claim of the dominion of the seas. Our neutral rights are as valuable to us as ever they were, whilst time has reflected nothing but credit on our steady defense of them against superior power.

It has occurred to me then that at this moment it might be well to consider the expediency of renewing in some form at Washington the proposal made at the time alluded to by Mr. Madison which constitutes the first article of his project. Whatever may be the answer that will be given to the message sent out through Lord Lyons, the nature of which I do not undertake to prejudge, the offer of such a proposition may be of use as a basis of reconciliation whether before or after the commencement of hostilities. And it will serve to break the force of the public opinion of Europe which will certainly be against us, and if I may be permitted to say so, not without justice, should we choose to place ourselves in the position which has always heretofore earned for England the ill will of all the other maritime nations of the globe, not excluding ourselves.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

[Translation.]

ADMINISTRATION OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, POLITICAL DEPARTMENT,
Paris, December 3, 1861.

HENRI MERCIER, Minister of the Emperor at Washington.

SIR: The arrest of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board the English packet Trent by an American cruiser has produced in France if not the same emotion as in England at least extreme astonishment and sensation. Public sentiment was at once engrossed with the lawfulness and the consequence of such an act and the impression which has resulted from this has not been for an instant doubtful.

The fact has appeared so much out of accordance with the ordinary rules of international law that it has chosen to throw the responsibility for it exclusively on the commander of the San Jacinto. It is not yet given to us to know whether this supposition is well founded; and the Government of the Emperor has therefore also had to examine the question raised by the taking away of the two passengers from the Trent. The desire to contribute to prevent a conflict perhaps imminent between two powers for which it is animated by sentiments equally friendly and the duty to uphold, for the purpose of placing the rights of its own flag under shelter from any attack, certain principles essential to the security of neutrals have after mature reflection convinced it that it could not under the circumstances remain entirely silent.

If to our deep regret the Cabinet at Washington were disposed to approve the conduct of the commander of the San Jacinto it would be either by considering Messrs. Mason and Slidell as enemies or as seeing in them nothing but rebels. In the one as in the other case there would be a forgetfulness, extremely annoying, of principles upon which we have always found the United States in agreement with us.

By what title in effect would the American cruiser in the first case have arrested Messrs. Mason and Slidell? The United States have admitted with us in the treaties concluded between the two countries that the freedom of the flag extends itself over the persons found on board should they be enemies of one of the two parties, unless the question is of military people actually in the service of the enemy. Messrs. Mason and Slidell were therefore by virtue of this principle which we have never found any difficulty in causing to be inserted in our treaties of friendship and commerce perfectly at liberty under the neutral flag of England. Doubtless it will not be pretended that they could be considered as contraband of war. That which constitutes contraband of war is not yet it is true exactly settled; the limitations are not absolutely the same for all the powers; but in what relates to persons the special stipulations which are found in the treaties concerning military people define plainly the character of those who only can be seized upon by belligerents; but there is no need to demonstrate that Messrs. Mason and Slidell could not be assimilated to persons in that category. There remains therefore to invoke in explanation of their capture only the pretext that they were the bearers of official dispatches from the enemy; but this is the moment to recall a circumstance which governs all this affair and which renders the conduct of the American cruiser unjustifiable.

The Trent was not destined to a point belonging to one of the belligerents. She was carrying to a neutral country her cargo and her passengers, and moreover it was in a neutral port that they were taken. If it were admissible that under such conditions the neutral flag does not completely cover the persons and merchandise it carries its immunity would be nothing more than an idle word; at any moment the commerce and the navigation of third powers would have to suffer from their innocent and even their indirect relations with the one or the other of the belligerents. These last would no longer find themselves as having only the right to exact from the neutral entire impartiality and to interdict all intermeddling on his part in acts of hostility. They would impose on his freedom of commerce and navigation restrictions which modern international law has refused to admit as legitimate; and we should in a word fall back upon vexatious practices against which in other epochs no power has more earnestly protested than the United States.

If the Cabinet of Washington would only look on the two persons arrested as rebels whom it is always lawful to seize, the question, to place it on other ground, could not be solved, however, in a sense in favor of the commander of the San Jacinto. There would be in such case misapprehension of the principle which makes a vessel a portion of the territory of the nation whose flag it bears and violation of that immunity which prohibits a foreign sovereign by consequence from the exercise of his jurisdiction. It certainly is not necessary to recall to mind with what energy under every circumstance the Government of the United States has maintained this immunity and the right of asylum which is the consequence of it.

Not wishing to enter upon a more deep discussion of the questions raised by the capture of Messrs. Mason and Slidell, I have said enough I think to settle the point that the Cabinet of Washington could not without striking a blow at the principles which all neutral nations are alike interested in holding in respect nor without taking the attitude of contradiction of its own course up to this time give its approbation to the proceedings of the commander of the San Jacinto. In this state of things it evidently should not according to our views hesitate about the determination to be taken.

Lord Lyons is already instructed to present the demand for satisfaction which the English cabinet is under the necessity of reducing to form and which consists in the immediate release of the persons taken from on board the Trent, and in sending explanations which may take from this act its offensive character toward the British flag. The Federal Government will be inspired by a just and exalted feeling in deferring to these requests. One would search in vain to what end, for what interest it would hazard to provoke by a different attitude a rupture with Great Britain.

For ourselves we should see in that fact a deplorable complication in every respect of the difficulties with which the Cabinet of Washington has already to struggle and a precedent of a nature seriously to disquiet all the powers which continue outside of the existing contest. We believe that we give evidence of loyal friendship for the Cabinet of Washington by not permitting it to remain in ignorance in this condition of things of our manner of regarding it. I request you therefore, sir, to seize the first occasion of opening yourself frankly to Mr. Seward and if he asks it send him a copy of this dispatch.

Receive, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

THOUVENEL.

WASHINGTON, December 3, 1861. (Received 16th.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * The second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress of the United States began yesterday at noon. The business done in the Senate was of a merely formal character. In the House of Representatives several motions were made for the confiscation or emancipation of slaves whose masters are not loyal to the United States.

Resolutions requesting the President to confine Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell in felons' cells* and treat them as prisoners convicted of infamous crimes were unanimously adopted with applause. Your lordship is aware that in retaliation for the treatment to which the crews of the captured Confederate privateers have been subjected President Davis has treated in the same manner an equal number of the prisoners of war who are in his hands.

A resolution was adopted tendering the thanks of Congress to Captain Wilkes for his brave, adroit and patriotic conduct in arresting

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: I have received your letters of the 30th ultimo and 2d instant relative to certain drafts of Messrs. Mason and Slidell on Europe.

In reply I have to inform you that as those gentlemen are confined on suspicion of treason against the Government of the United States it is deemed inexpedient to sanction any transfer of credits which they may have in Europe.

Mr. Eustis may be allowed to forward any letters previously submitted to your examination and which you may not disapprove.

I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

London, December 6, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The current of popular feeling is still running with resistless force throughout this Kingdom. The conflict of opinion heretofore existing with powers nearly equal in favor of and against the Government of the United States is now merged in an almost universal demand for satisfaction for the insult and injury thought to be endured by the action of Captain Wilkes.

The members of the Government as a whole are believed not to be desirous of pressing matters to a violent issue but they are powerless in the face of the opinion they have invited from the law officers of the Crown. In quick succession have been issued two proclamations forbidding the export of saltpeter and gunpowder and of arms and munitions of war. At the same time orders have been given to fit out at once a large number of war ships upon which great quantities of arms are placed, and officers and men are warned to hold themselves in readiness to embark on or after Christmas, being the time when the response to the dispatches sent out by the Europa on Monday last is expected to arrive. There can be not a shadow of a doubt that the passions of the country are up and that a collision is inevitable if the Government of the United States should before the news reaches the other side have assumed the position of Captain Wilkes in a manner to preclude the possibility of explanation.

Under such circumstances my situation is becoming very rapidly not merely one of little or no public use but also of some personal embarrassment. Even should this storm blow over without damage so completely has mutual confidence been destroyed by it that there is little prospect of a restoration of those relations upon which alone the intercommunication of governments can be made to yield beneficial results. Ministers and people now fully believe it is the intention of the Government to drive them into hostilities. The arrogance of past Administrations, with which the present has no sympathy, is yet made to rest on the latter as if that too were animated by the same spirit.

Much of this state of opinion has its source in persons imbued with a settled malignity to America, but it ought in justice to be added that it is also entertained in qualified form by many of its best friends. Of the causes of this misinterpretation it would be of little moment now to inquire. Of the effect I have been fully sensible ever since the first day of my arrival. It has most unfortunately undermined that confidence in the good intentions of an Administration which I firmly believe to have been the most in harmony with the policy of Great Britain of any that has been in power for many years until instead of being friendly it is regarded as among the most hostile. So far as it has been within my power I have combatted this impression in every form where I could meet it but the result has been rather to give me credit for good intentions than to inspire conviction of the Government's sincerity.

The end of it is that it seems really a matter of indifference whether I remain or not at this post. My present expectation is that by the middle of January at furthest diplomatic relations will have been sundered between the two countries without any act of mine. I am therefore endeavoring to complete all the ordinary business of the legation in advance of the moment when the proper instructions will arrive in regard to the final disposition of its affairs as well as to the course I am myself to pursue.

[LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,]

Paris, December 6, 1861.

His Excellency WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, &c.

SIR: I felt it a duty to call on M. Thouvenel to-day in reference to the views and position of France as respects our unfortunate difficulty with England. I had understood that the French Government had expressed its views to Lord Cowley and thought therefore that it would have no objections to doing the same to me.

M. Thouvenel said at once that the taking of Messrs. Slidell and Mason off a British ship was the affair of England, not theirs, but he had no hesitation in saying that it was the opinion of the French Government that the act was a clear breach of international law; that the French Government could not permit the application of such a principle to their ships. He added that all the foreign maritime powers with which he had conferred agreed that the act was a violation of public law. He said furthermore that he had at once communicated these views to M. Mercier.

In view of what had been the past conduct of the British and French Governments in our affairs and their joint action in the affairs of other nations, I thought it best to ask bluntly whether in the event of a war with England we were to expect France to go beyond the expression of her opinion; whether she would or would not be a neutral power, he said of course it was not their affair; they would be spectators only, though not indifferent spectators; the moral force of their opinions would be against us.

I told him that had I known he had communicated his views through M. Mercier I should not have troubled him with this interview.

With much respect, I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
WM. L. DAYTON.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] December 6, 1861.[Lord LYONS, &c., Washington.]

MY LORD: Count Flahault read to me to-day a dispatch addressed to him by M. Thouvenel covering one from M. Thouvenel to M. Mercier.* In this letter M. Thouvenel reviews with great ability the question of the captures on board the Trent.

He begins by saying that the transaction appeared to be so much at variance with the ordinary rules of international law that the impression on the public opinion in France was that the commander of the San Jacinto could alone be responsible for it. If, however, the Cabinet of Washington should be disposed to approve the conduct of that officer it could do so only on one or other of the grounds of Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell being enemies or being rebels; and in either case it would depart greatly from those principles on which hitherto France and the United States have been agreed. As regards the former case, that, namely, of the two gentlemen being considered enemies, the United States in their treaties with France had recognized that the freedom of the flag extended to all persons except military or naval officers actually in the service of the enemy found under it; and according to this principle Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell were free under the neutral flag of England. Neither could those gentlemen be deemed contraband of war; for although no general rule as to the contraband was universally admitted the character of persons liable to be considered as contraband was at all events clearly defined, and Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell did not bear that character.

Then again as regards the allegation that they were bearers of dispatches of the enemy the conduct of the U. S. cruiser was wholly unjustifiable. The Trent was not destined for a port of either of the belligerents; she was on her voyage to a neutral country with cargo and passengers which she had embarked in a neutral country; and if it were assumed that under such circumstances the neutral flag did not protect passengers and cargo the immunity of that flag would be an idle word, and restrictions wholly inadmissible according to the principles of modern times would thereby be imposed on the freedom of commerce and navigation. As regards the latter case, that, namely, of Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell being considered rebels, M. Thouvenel observes that neither in this case was the conduct of the commander of the San Jacinto justifiable for he will have disregarded the received principle that a vessel forms part of the territory of the State whose flag it bears and is therefore exempt from foreign jurisdiction.

Under these circumstances M. Thouvenel considers it impossible that the Cabinet of Washington should approve the conduct of the commander of the San Jacinto, and accordingly in his opinion it cannot hesitate as to the decision which it should adopt. It should acquiesce in the demands which Lord Lyons was instructed to make for the immediate liberation of the two gentlemen and for such explanation as may efface the offense done to the British flag. It is impossible to conceive what object or interest it could have in provoking by a different course a rupture with Great Britain. Such a rupture France would consider not only as lamentable with reference to the difficulties with which the Cabinet of Washington has already to contend but also as establishing a precedent calculated seriously to disquiet all powers who are standing aloof from the conflict now going on; and M. Thouvenel considers that he is now furnishing a fresh proof of the friendship of France for the United States by not allowing the Cabinet of Washington to remain in ignorance of her sentiments on the present crisis.

* See Thouvenel to Mercier, December 3, p. 1116.

Your lordship will perceive from this summary which I am enabled to give you of the instructions addressed by M. Thouvenel to M. Mercier that the French minister is directed to give the moral support of his Government to the representations and requirements which you are instructed to make.

MY LORD: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to Captain Wilkes dated the 30th of November,* which has been published in the newspapers. It is in substance the same as the paragraph on the subject of the seizure of Messrs. It expresses emphatic approval of the proceeding, but says that the forbearance shown in not capturing the vessel must not be permitted to constitute a precedent.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that American affairs absorb all other questions and are the chief subject of discussion both in diplomatic and commercial circles. The arrest of the Southern commissioners created great excitement in this quiet city. Count Manderstrom, minister of foreign affairs, kindly sent me the telegram as received by him with a note expressing strong doubts of its truth. The information we have received has come through an English medium.

All are waiting to hear what action will be taken by the Cabinet at Washington. The arrest is generally condemned as a violation of the law of nations and considered a casus belli unless disavowed. The strong and decided articles in the French press denouncing the act of Captain Wilkes as illegal have influenced public opinion to a great extent.

The account of the flattering reception of Count Piper by the President and Secretary of State has been received with great satisfaction by this Government. The address of welcome by the President was published by the entire press in Sweden and Norway.

SIR: * * * I presume the question involved in the case of the Trent will have been settled before this reaches you; but if it is not it may be as well to look up a case which has been mentioned to me here but which I have not the facilities to examine on this side of the water. It is that of Mr. Edward Wyer, bearer of dispatches to Mr. Adams at Saint Petersburg, believed to be in 1812, who was taken out of a Swedish vessel not far out of Boston by a British frigate. This fact could be easily verified by reference to the Boston newspapers of the period.

As not a single word has yet been communicated to me officially or otherwise respecting the views of the Government in regard to this most unfortunate affair I am placed in a predicament almost as awkward as if I had not been commissioned here at all. Indeed I perceive in some of the French newspapers that advantage has been taken of the fact to intimate that my conciliatory policy does not represent the true sentiments of the Government. Of course this absurd story makes no impression on me, but as everything that creates prejudice against the Government is greedily caught up here the effect is to impair the usefulness of any action I may take as its representative. I would therefore respectfully suggest the expediency of keeping me as early and as fully informed of the course of things, so far as it concerns the relations of the two Governments, at Washington as Lord Lyons does the Government here. The importance of this may be seen in the case of Mr. Bunch, when both Lord Palmerston and Earl Russell had a complete advantage over me in the knowledge of what had actually been done at home.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

SIR: I inclosed you by the dispatch bag yesterday a copy of The Constitutionnel* containing an article (marked) of a very obnoxious character. The article as you will observe if you have had time to look it over advocates the policy of France making common cause with England against us. It looks likewise to the early recognition by France and Great Britain of the South as an independent power. The Constitutionnel is understood here to have a semi-official character.

SIR: The difficulty growing out of the case of the Trent continues the uppermost subject in all minds. Although many of the leading presses indulge in loud boasts of the extreme facility with which the matter will be disposed of by arms, the great fall in the price of stocks and the rise in the rates of insurance are significant indications of the uneasiness of public opinion that lies beneath. The deprecation of war is quite general among the religious classes and especially the Dissenters. The subject was adverted to more or less broadly in many of the pulpits in this city last Sunday and a general meeting of members of all denominations has been called for this day at Exeter Hall to give expression to the feeling.

In the meantime all the preparations for warfare are going on at the different depots and magazines with great energy. The impression is very fixed that it is the policy both of the Administration and of the people of the United States to make unreasonable demands of this country in order to test the extent of its forbearance. As a consequence it is considered absolutely necessary by a vigorous demonstration to inspire a conviction among us that it will not be trifled with. I very much regret that this prejudice exists even among our best friends, for it leads to misconstruction of every act even the most trifling which is susceptible of a doubt, but such is the undeniable fact.

The answer from the United States to the messenger sent on the 2d instant is expected on or about the 1st of next month and much speculation is indulged in as to the policy that will be adopted in case it should be unfavorable. Some think it will be a declaration of war. The better opinion is that it will be a recognition of the Confederates and a refusal further to abide by the blockade as ineffective. This would without doubt be the most decisive course to bring around what an influential party in Great Britain have always looked to as the great end to be attained, a permanent disruption of the Union. It would also throw upon the United States the necessity of taking the initiative in a declaration of war.

The period is now so near when the result will be known to the world that I deem it superfluous to speculate on probabilities any further. I am making my own arrangements upon the expectation that my mission will in any event come to an end in a few weeks should no special instructions be received in regard to my future action. I have not yet determined whether to return home at once or to retire to the Continent for a few weeks until the opening of a more favorable season for the voyage with my family. I should feel it a duty to obey the wishes of the President in this respect if any particular course should be pointed out as the most likely to be for the public service. If on the other hand nothing should be said I shall infer that the matter is left to my judgment.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

MY LORD: * * * It is asserted in the report from Captain Wilkes that Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell "had been presented to the captain-general of Cuba by Her Britannic Majesty's consul-general." The same assertion had appeared previously in most of the American newspapers.

Having received yesterday a dispatch from Mr. Crawford, the consul-general, directly contradicting it I thought it desirable to inform the Government of the United States officially that it was erroneous. I accordingly addressed a note to Mr. Seward of which and of the dispatch from Mr. Crawford upon which it was founded I do myself the honor to inclose copies.

I have also the honor to inclose a copy of a note which I have just received from Mr. Seward in which he thanks me for contradicting the

It contains the following statement: "They (Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell) have been presented to the captain-general of Cuba by Her Britannic Majesty's consul-general." The writer of the letter appears to have been misinformed. I am able to contradict the statement on the authority of Mr. Crawford, the consul-general, himself. MY LORD: I have seen in the American papers a statement which as published by a press so infamous as that of the United States has become I consider wholly unworthy of my notice, but under present circumstances, as much importance appears to attach to the false information that has been given respecting me in connection with Messrs. Slidell and Mason, I think it necessary to state to your lordship that I neither presented nor accompanied those gentlemen to the captain-general in uniform or otherwise.

Mr. Slidell is an acquaintance of mine since 1825, and Mr. Mason's brother was my very intimate friend when he was secretary to the U. S. legation in Mexico under Mr. Poinsett long ago. I certainly did myself the pleasure of calling on those gentlemen as strangers and showed them such civilities as were in my power, but I never thought of rendering them any official services. I presume they were fully aware that had they needed any such assistance I could not have given it and none was ever applied for.

MY LORD: I thank your lordship for your note of the 12th instant contradicting on the authority of Mr. Crawford, Her Britannic Majesty's consul-general at Havana, the report that that gentleman had presented Messrs. your own is a new and gratifying proof of your lordship's desire for the preservation of harmonious relations between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and that of the United States.

I avail myself of this occasion to say that although I have received from our consulate at Havana some complaints founded on reports of conduct on the part of Mr. Crawford unjust toward the United States I have refrained from entertaining them in the absence of some authentic and reliable evidence.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Berlin, December 14, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * The principal topic of discussion at this time among the diplomats and others is the pending difficulty between the United States and Great Britain growing out of the seizure of Mason and Slidell and what will be its result.

I have had conversation upon that subject with a majority of the representatives of other governments residing at this capital and have found no one who does not appreciate the serious consequences to the commerce and business of the world that would occur in case of a war between the United States and England and who does not deprecate such a result, some of them on account of the present condition of the United States and others from a selfish motive connected with the mercantile and commercial interests of their respective countries.

The newspapers are filled with rumors and speculations as to the action of England, among them one as follows: That England has made two propositions to the parties to the Paris conference about American matters—first, that the blockade should be declared ineffectual and therefore raised; and second, that those powers should acknowledge the independence of the Confederate States; and it was further asserted that all the powers had assented to the first proposition, Russia with a declaration that it was not to be construed into a disposition to war with the United States.

I had an interview by appointment yesterday with Count Bernstorff, minister of foreign affairs. * * * He expressed regret at the threatened difficulties with England and hoped war might be avoided. I then said to him, "Why don't your Government keep the peace?" To which he replied by asking if the Government of the United States would not object to their interference. I told him that the friendly relations that had always existed between the Governments of the United States and Prussia would authorize any friendly act of that kind; that I had no advice or instruction from my Government upon the subject and that I was only expressing my own feelings.

I stated further that unless England had some ulterior object for war and only made the Trent affair a pretext there was no necessity for the hasty action that was threatened; that the honor of England was safe while she was listening to the voices of the powers that were represented at the treaty of Paris. He said that he did not think there was any ulterior motive, and when I expressed to him my views of the legality of the act when considered in the light of the British construction of international law he replied that there was sufficient ground for argument upon either side to cause the parties to hesitate before becoming involved in a war for that cause.

My conversation with him was very satisfactory and there is no doubt of the friendly feelings of the Prussian Government toward the Government of the United States and its desire that the rebellion should be subdued.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 16, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: In connection with the case of Messrs. Mason and Slidell the Department has recently been engaged in examining that of M. Fauchet, a minister from France during Washington's Administration, who while on his way to embark at Newport, R. I., on his return home probably escaped seizure by the commander of the British ship Africa near that port in consequence of the packet Peggy, in which he was proceeding from New York to Newport, being compelled by stress of weather to put into Stonington, Conn. Here M. Fauchet received intimation of the intention of the commander of the Africa which induced him to proceed to Newport by land and across the ferries. When the weather moderated the Peggy continued on her course and when she approached the Africa she was boarded from that vessel, the trunks of the passengers were searched and disappointment shown at the absence of M. Fauchet.

This act having been committed within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States and the British vice-consul at Newport having been implicated in it his exequatur was formally revoked by President Washington and explanations demanded of the British Government, first through their minister here and then through Mr. John Quincy Adams, acting chargé d'affaires at London. The correspondence which took place here on our records and files seems to be complete, with the exception of a note from Mr. Bond, acting British chargé d'affaires, to Mr. Pickering of the 17th of August, 1795. As it is desirable to obtain a copy of that note application has been made for one to the British legation here, but the answer is that they have no record or draft of it. A copy was undoubtedly sent to the foreign office at the time. I will consequently thank you to endeavor to obtain one there for the use of this Department.

No. 3 RIVER TERRACE, Hoboken, N. J., December 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: As the representative under the Constitution of the President of the United States in conducting our foreign relations I address you on a question of the greatest import to our country growing out of the recent news from England as regards the arrest of the rebel ambassadors.

That we had a perfect right under the law of nations to seize the British mail steamer Trent carrying the hostile ambassadors and dispatches and bring her in as a prize for condemnation by our courts I have never doubted. That the right to capture the vessel involved the subordinate privilege of seizing the rebel ministers seems to me an inevitable sequence although it would have been more regular to have brought in the Trent as a prize for judicial condemnation. This mere formal question the cabinet of England have seized on as a pretext for involving us in a war with them in the midst of the present rebellion.

They wish to force the export to them of our cotton; they wish permanently to divide our Union; they wish to annihilate our commercial and maritime supremacy and suppress the example of the success of our free institutions, so fatal to the permanency of the monarchy and aristocracy of England. In the midst of the present gigantic rebellion they have like dastards seized upon this as their opportunity for our destruction.

The question is what should we do under existing circumstances? I assume it as a fact that all who during the present crisis would precipitate us unnecessarily into a war with England are at heart allies of the Southern rebellion and traitors. With such a war with England at this period the Union by possibility may be dissolved and the separate Confederate Government of the South established. This is exactly what the rebels desire, and they are no doubt exulting now in the hope that we will be speedily involved in a war with England. They hope thus to be recognized as a nation by foreign powers, to establish free trade with them, whilst driving our own vessels and manufactures from their ports, and finally they expect to supply Europe with cotton whilst withholding it from American factories and subjecting us substantially to the dictation of the South and of their English allies. They contemplate our ruin and humiliation. Indeed the severance and downfall of this Union would not only consummate our disgrace and destruction but would seal for centuries the fate of liberty throughout the world.

These being the possible consequences of a war at present with England the question is can it be honorably avoided? If nothing will satisfy England but an apology and the delivery to her of the rebel ministers the war cannot be avoided, and we must meet it as best we may with the whole power of the nation. But if such a contest at this time can be avoided with honor our duty to the Union, to our country, to the cause of liberty and mankind demands that we should not precipitate the conflict.

The papers say that France has offered her mediation. If so, and it is confined to the single question of our right to seize and hold the rebel ministers unconnected with any interference between us and the Southern rebellion, it ought to be accepted although I would greatly prefer Russia as a mediator. If no such mediation has been offered and the demands of England are not insulting to our national honor we might suggest the submission of the single question of international law involved in this case to Russia and France—with a right in case of difference of opinion to select an umpire—or to either of these nations. Of course we ought to prefer Russia as the constant and uniform friend of this country. But France was our great and potent ally against England in the war of the Revolution, and she has never been our enemy. I think France is more jealous of England than of the United States, and that the memory of Cressy, Agincourt and Waterloo and of the battles of centuries on the ocean and land between France and England is still fraught with bitter recollections and inextinguishable popular hatred. The alliance of France and England against Russia was a necessity, and even in that contest France sought every opportunity to humiliate her ally, to tarnish her prestige and exalt her own military glory.

I speak not only from history but from my personal experience in Europe when I say that the people of France are not the cordial friends of the people of England, and that in this respect Louis Napoleon represents the people of France. I do not fear for the decision of the Emperor Napoleon on this question of international law. But suppose the legal question should be decided by France against us. Such a decision would be fraught with consequences of no permanent injury to our country.

In the wars of Europe, which are the great wars of the world, we have been heretofore and must most probably hereafter be neutrals only, and whatever decision enlarges the rights and privileges of neutrals must necessarily be permanently advantageous to our country. There is no humiliation in submitting this question of international law to the arbitrament of Russia and France or either of those powers. It is just such a question as properly can be submitted to such an umpirage, and especially in this case where by our own act by failing to bring in the vessel as a prize we have ourselves intercepted and prevented a judicial decision.

This Southern rebellion must be crushed or our country may be forever ruined; and those who unnecessarily wheel England into an alliance with the Southern rebellion are disunionists and traitors. In vain may they seize the present moment to escape the terrible responsibility by raising the war cry against England. If as the consequence the Southern Confederacy aided by the English alliance should establish their Government on the ruins of the Union and of our country, the statesmen who for want of firmness and courage shall have subjected us to such a calamity will meet the execrations of the American people and of the friends of liberty throughout the world and will join the wretched caravan of infamy of which Buchanan is at present the only leader. Having doomed our country to destruction they will meet whilst living the curses of a ruined people and history and posterity will doom them to eternal disgrace.

I am quite sure that the President and yourself and every member of the Cabinet are stimulated by the sole desire to suppress this rebellion and restore the Union, and therefore I cannot doubt that you will manfully and courageously resist any possible temporary popular clamor and redeem the country from the terrible dangers with which we are now environed. Rest assured that when a few weeks or months have passed away and reason, not even now dethroned, shall have fully resumed her empire the popular clamor will be infinitely more intense and universal against those who would destroy the Union by involving us at this time unnecessarily in war with England.

If we should propose that France or Russia should decide this question of international law England will not dare to reject the umpirage; for to do so would be most seriously to offend those countries, to subject herself to the reprobation of the whole civilized world, to overthrow her cabinet and perhaps her Government. Settle thus this question and the last hope of the Southern rebellion is extinguished, and we can then adopt such policy as regards all the forfeited property and rights of rebels (including slaves) as will be best calculated to bring the war to a speedy and successful conclusion.

You may read this letter to the President and Cabinet or publish it when you think proper, although I think its immediate publication would be unwise. The fact that the fate of our country may now be trembling in the balance must constitute my excuse for occupying now any portion of your valuable time.

With great regard, your obedient servant,

R. J. WALKER.

DETROIT, *December 18, 1861.*WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

Why not consider the English construction of the law of nations as a proposition for our acceptance and accept it, and thus terminate the Mason and Slidell controversy by discharging them?

I do not know precisely their construction but it undoubtedly increases the immunity of neutrals and diminishes the powers of belligerents, and whatever does that is of more advantage to us than to England because war is an exceptional state with us and a common one with her. We preserve our honor and promote our interests by this procedure. The power to arrest rebel agents on board neutrals is of very little practical importance to us.

For the views of this Government as to the dangers of belligerent pretensions see a letter from Department of State to Mr. Mason, minister at France, dated June 27, 1859.

EDINBURGH, November 29, 1861.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, Esq., 108 Broadway, New York.

MY DEAR UNCLE: Yours of the 10th and 12th of November have been duly received together with the copy of the paper announcing your patriotic subscription to the national loan.

Since my last there has been considerable excitement here in regard to the burning of the Harvey Birch by a Confederate steamer, and the matter afforded materials for a warm discussion. But the excitement consequent upon the insult to the British flag by the U. S. frigate San Jacinto has entirely monopolized the public mind. I have never seen so intense a feeling of indignation exhibited in my life. It pervades all classes and may make itself heard above the wiser theories of the cabinet officers. The press have generally discussed the matter with some show of calmness. The Morning Post of London (the organ of Palmerston) goes over the ground with dignified moderation and closes its article as follows:

The insult therefore in any case was most gratuitous, and if as we think unwarranted by the code of nations it will not only be deeply felt but deeply resented.

I inclose some extracts from the London journals and also a leader from The Morning Courant of Edinburgh.* I wish you to read these articles carefully or get Robert to read them to you, for I need not disguise the fact that I am seriously apprehensive of the result of the present complication. It is said that Great Britain will send out the Warrior and demand the return of Mason and Slidell to the British flag from under which they were taken, and if they are not restored war will be declared. Now I hope the American people will not allow themselves to be deluded with the idea that Great Britain dares not go to war. I know that that feeling finds daily expression in New York but notice the leader of the Courant:

Formerly a war with America meant deprivation of cotton; now it means immediate access to a supply of cotton. Formerly Britain could hardly muster a squadron; she could now send one across the Atlantic which in a few weeks would sweep the sea-board of the States as clean as a model housewife's floor.

All this is no doubt very true, and when we reflect that she could land forces in Canada and in the Southern States as well as she could blockade our ports, I think it is suitable that we should think twice before we throw down the gauntlet. I hope myself that the excitement which is now heard throughout the land will subside. I say heard—Doctor Simpson who was in this morning said, "Have you heard the British lion? He is roaring from the Highlands to the Land's End." The doctor thinks we will have war; I think not, although I am satisfied that with a good excuse for it in the eyes of the world the British people are quite prepared to take up arms against us. * * *

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, JR.

DETROIT, December 19, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Our telegraphic information yesterday led to the conclusion that the British demands arising out of the Mason and Slidell affair would reach you last evening and I therefore took the liberty of communicating with you by telegraph† some suggestions that had occurred to me, presuming they would reach you this morning during the Cabinet deliberations. You must find in my anxiety to avoid a war with England my reason for the liberty I have taken upon this occasion and I trust also an excuse for it.

* Newspaper extracts not found.

† See p. 1130 for Cass to Seward, December 18.

It seems to me that such a war, independent of any other consequences, would go far to prevent the restoration of the rebel States to the authority of the Constitution, a restoration so anxiously desired by every true citizen. My object in troubling you is to explain the motive of my telegraphic communication. I thought the suggestions were worth consideration, offering as they appeared to me to do an honorable means of terminating all difficulty with England as to the capture of Slidell and Mason.

Though I think it was justifiable upon grounds laid down and acted upon by England, yet I considered it a most useless and unfortunate affair—an affair which from its evident importance should never have been undertaken by Captain Wilkes without express orders from his Government, and his interference is the more inexcusable as he states in his report that in his search into the authorities upon the law of nations he could find no such case decided and was brought to consider the rebel commissioners as the “embodiment of dispatches”—I think is his phrase—in order to justify the arrest; a strange reason to be officially given for such a procedure. And what has amazed me more than anything else in this whole affair are the laudations bestowed upon Captain Wilkes for his courage in taking three or four unarmed men out of an unarmed vessel. No doubt the indignation justly felt against Slidell and Mason for their treasonable conduct has produced a decided effect upon the public mind in the views that have been expressed.

As to any injury which these rebel agents could do us in Europe it is all nonsense. The question of recognition will be decided by the governments there on views of their own interests and not from any representations which such men or any men indeed could make. They would have been perfectly harmless in Europe, but have been exalted into importance by this unlucky accident. So far as depends upon the political communication of the rebel States with Europe they can send just as many agents there as they please.

But the principle of capture is of very little political importance to us as is manifest on the slightest consideration.

Wishing you all success in the difficult circumstances in which the country is placed, I am, dear sir, truly, yours,

LEWIS CASS.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 19, 1861. (Received 20th.)

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have just this moment received a letter from a friend residing at Halifax, Nova Scotia, dated 11th or 15th instant, and which was written in the warehouse at the dock while the steamer was lying there on her way to Boston. He says:

I happened to be within hearing of the commander-in-chief (here) when he received his dispatches telegraphed to him from London to Queenstown. He told his officers that Lord Lyons was instructed to demand of President Lincoln the release of Mason and Slidell and to deliver them within six weeks on board a British ship in Boston Harbor in the presence of thirty British and thirty U. S. Navy officers.

If this is true you of course knew it before to-day, but I think it proper to communicate it even if the commander-in-chief alluded to was giving vent to his wishes instead of his instructions. My authority is entirely reliable.

* * * * *

Allow me for the first time to say one word in the way of counsel. Our discreet friends here expect the Government to hold on to Mason and Slidell or to refer the question to the French Emperor. If the British Government decline that reference it will not fail to offend France, and whatever decision France makes in such a case will be international law hereafter. Excuse me for making bold to say this much.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] December 19, 1861.

LORD LYONS, K. C. B., &c., [Washington.]

MY LORD: Mr. Adams came to me to-day at the foreign office at 3 o'clock. He said he came to ask two questions which concerned himself personally. I interrupted him to ask whether what he was going to say was by order of his Government or from his own sense of what he ought to do. Mr. Adams answered that the proceeding was entirely his own but that he had with him a dispatch from Mr. Seward* which he was authorized to read to me if he should think fit to do so. It appeared he said from that dispatch that the Government of Washington had not authorized the capture of the two insurgents, Mason and Slidell, and that the United States Government stood quite uncommitted at the time of sending the dispatch. I said that if the dispatch did not enter into any controversy with regard to the case of Messrs. Mason and Slidell I should be glad to hear it read. Mr. Adams then proceeded to read the dispatch.

It commenced by referring with approbation to a speech made by Mr. Adams at the Mansion House, and proceeded to notice with gratification the sentiments which had been expressed by Lord Palmerston in a conversation he had held with Mr. Adams in reference to the James Adger. Mr. Seward then proceeds to declare that the American Government value highly the friendship of Great Britain, and lament that certain causes of difference have arisen, owing as Mr. Seward imagines to the want of attention on the part of the British Government to the performance of the duties incumbent on a friendly power during the struggle in which the United States are engaged. Mr. Seward gives as instances the case of communication to the Confederate authorities by Mr. Bunch; the admission of the Sumter, privateer, to purchase coal and provisions at Trinidad in contradistinction as he said to the conduct that [sic] every European State, and the arrival in the Southern States of vessels laden with arms and ammunition from England.

Mr. Seward then proceeds to the case of the Trent, from which ship the two insurgents had been taken. He affirms that no instructions were given to Captain Wilkes which authorized him to act in the manner he had done. Neither had the United States Government committed itself with regard to any decision upon the character of that act. The Government would wait for any representation the British Government might make before coming to any positive decision. He desires that if Mr. Adams shall think it desirable this dispatch shall be read to me and also to Lord Palmerston.

In answer to Mr. Adams I touched upon most of the points treated of in the dispatch. I did not think it necessary, however, to recur to the case of Mr. Bunch. With regard to the Confederate privateer I said that I could not see that our conduct had been different from that of France and Holland or of Spain. The Sumter had been refused coal from the Government stores at Trinidad, but had been allowed to get coal and provisions from private merchants. The same thing had taken place at Martinique and at Curaçoa. I did not find that the rule of twenty-four hours had been observed in practice, but there would be little difficulty in coming to an agreement on this point.

* Seward to Adams, November 30, p. 1108.

In regard to the export of arms and ammunition to the Confederate States I had lately read the opinion of the attorney-general and believed it was in entire conformity with the provision of the foreign enlistment act: warlike equipment of the vessel was prohibited; the loading of a vessel with arms and ammunition was not prohibited. But in point of fact a much greater amount of arms and ammunition had been sent to the Federal States where there was no obstacle to the export or the import than to the ports of the Confederate States which were blockaded. Mr. Adams admitted this to be the fact, and said he had refrained from pressing a more rigorous compliance with the foreign enlistment act for this reason.

I then stated to Mr. Adams the substance of the two dispatches I had written to Lord Lyons on the subject of the Trent. I told him that in a private letter I had directed Lord Lyons to talk the matter over with Mr. Seward two days before reading to him the dispatch.

Mr. Adams asked whether the direction to Lord Lyons to leave Washington in seven days was in the dispatch to be read. I said it was not, and that in case Mr. Seward should ask what would be the consequence of a refusal on his part to comply with our conditions Lord Lyons was to decline to answer that question in order not to have the appearance of a threat.

I said that I thought the explanation that the Government had not authorized the seizure would stand in the place of an apology. But the essential condition was that Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell should be given up to Lord Lyons.

Mr. Adams said that if the matter was stated to Mr. Seward in the manner I had explained he hoped for an amicable termination of the difference; he thought that if the Government of the United States insisted on maintaining the act of Captain Wilkes the United States would be abandoning their doctrine and adopting ours.

Mr. Adams asked me further questions which he said I might decline to answer; it was whether if Lord Lyons came away a declaration of war would be the immediate consequence. I told him nothing was decided on that point; we should wait for the reply from America and then decide upon our course.

I stated to Mr. Adams the substance of M. Thouvenel's dispatch to M. Mercier as I had heard it from M. de Flahault. Mr. Adams said that the French Government had always been very consistent in their maintenance of the rights of neutrals. He added that he could not pay our Government the same compliment. I said I would dispense with compliments if this matter could be amicably arranged.

We parted on very friendly terms.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

WASHINGTON, December 19, 1861.

(Received January 1, 1862.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: The messenger Seymour delivered to me at 11.30 last night your lordship's dispatch of the 30th ultimo specifying the reparation required by Her Majesty's Government for the seizure of Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell and their secretaries on board the royal mail steamer Trent.

I waited on Mr. Seward this afternoon at the State Department and acquainted him in general terms with the tenor of that dispatch. I stated in particular—as nearly as possible in your lordship's words—that the only redress which could satisfy Her Majesty's Government and Her Majesty's people would be the immediate delivery of the prisoners to me in order that they might again be placed under British protection, and moreover a suitable apology for the aggression which had been committed. I added that Her Majesty's Government hoped that the Government of the United States would of its own accord offer this reparation; that it was in order to facilitate such an arrangement that I had come to him without any written demand or even any written paper at all in my hand; that if there was a prospect of attaining this object I was willing to be guided by him as to the conduct on my part which would render its attainment most easy.

Mr. Seward received my communication seriously and with dignity but without any manifestations of dissatisfaction. Some further conversation ensued in consequence of questions put by him with a view to ascertain the exact character of the dispatch. At the conclusion he asked me to give him to-morrow to consider the question and to communicate with the President. On the day after he should he said be ready to express an opinion with respect to the communication I had made. In the meantime he begged me to be assured that he was very sensible of the friendly and conciliatory manner in which I had made it.

I have, &c.

Dr. J. S. DASHIELL, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish I had time, as I have not, to write you a letter. But in lieu thereof I send you the accompanying slip cut from The London Times of the 30th of November. Being in the form of a communication it will be apt to escape the attention of Mr. Seward should he see the paper at all. I think he will be glad to see it and I therefore send it to you to be given to him or not as you may think best. The writing at the head of the article gives it an importance in my eyes which it would not possess otherwise, the memorandum being made by the gentleman who sends me the paper, who with me is very high authority for every opinion he expresses. He is connected with the English press and knows everybody and everything.

Yours, faithfully,

D. H. ADLEY.

This is important as to substance and authorship.

TEMPLE, November 29, [1861].

EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR: When so momentous a question as that of a war between England and the Northern States of America is in the balance I think you will be disposed to give publicity indifferently to every view in which the matter can possibly present itself. I venture therefore to request permission to offer a few observations on the critical question of the extent of the reparation which the English Government are entitled to demand at the hands of the Washington Cabinet.

That the American cruiser was guilty of an irregularity and in point of form of an illegal act in carrying off the Southern commissioners without a judicial sentence on the Trent must now be admitted even by those who are disposed to take the least inflammatory view of the subject. The practice of allowing the belligerent cruiser to constitute himself a judge in the matter is clearly so improper and inconvenient that it is impossible to permit such an act to pass into a precedent unquestioned.

On the other hand it does seem to me that the extent of the reparation we should demand depends in a great measure on the question whether the injury we have sustained was one of form only or of substance. Now whether the injury was one of form or of substance depends on the second question, whether if the American cruiser had acted in a regular manner, i. e., had carried the Trent into an American port in order to bring her before a prize court, there were not material on which to found a judicial condemnation? If the case is not so clearly in our favor that a decision in the American court condemning the vessel would have been liable to be questioned by us as manifestly contrary to the law of nations then the irregularity of the American captain in allowing the Trent to proceed to Southampton clearly redounded to the advantage of the British owners and the British passengers. Could we in such a case find a ground of international quarrel in an error of procedure which in effect told in our own favor?

Now were there not material from which the American prize court might and most probably would have arrived at such a condemnation? On a doubtful point, which at the least it must be admitted to be, the American decision would probably have been in their own favor. The prize court is judge not only of law but of the facts from which inferences are to be drawn. It might have fairly taken the confessions of Mr. Slidell and his friends that they were Southern commissioners coupled with the occupation in which it is notorious that the other Southern commissioners now in Europe are engaged as a sufficient proof of the hostile character of their mission. If the court had come to such a decision could the English Government have disputed their judgment as one in gross violation of law and justice? If not it would have been binding on us and the Trent would have been condemned as a lawful prize.

A distinction has been drawn between the dispatch and the messenger who carries the dispatch which seems to me wholly unsustainable. If a belligerent has power to seize the dispatch he must have the power to detain the messenger. For the messenger, who probably knows the message by heart, is neither more nor less than a living dispatch. Now I do not put forward these considerations as suggesting that we have sustained no injury at the hands of the Americans nor for the purpose of questioning our right to demand reparation. But I confess that it strikes me very strongly that the quality of the injury materially affects the nature of the amends which we are entitled to require if the Trent would probably have been legally condemned in case a regular course had been pursued by the captain of the San Jacinto, in form it is true she sustained an injury but in substance it is certain she had a fortunate escape.

The conclusion therefore at which I arrive is this: what we are entitled beyond all question to demand is an apology for the illegal and irregular proceeding on the part of the San Jacinto, which cannot be sustained on any possible view of the law of nations, and an undertaking from the American Government that the offense shall not be repeated. But unless it is perfectly demonstrable that if the captain of the San Jacinto had carried the Trent into New York she could not legally have been condemned I cannot think that we are entitled to push our demand to the extreme point of requiring the restitution of the commissioners. Such a demand would almost certainly be repelled.

And England before she can appeal to the arbitrament of arms must have a quarrel good not only in form but in substance.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

WEST ROXBURY, December 18, 1861.

EDITOR OF THE BOSTON JOURNAL:

Being a constant reader of your paper my attention was attracted yesterday by the following statement in your editorial columns:

It is curious to observe that nearly all of our jurists who have written upon the Mason and Slidell case passed over as entirely indefensible the position which the British Government is said to have finally assumed, viz, that the Trent ought to have been searched and carried in for judicial condemnation.

It may be of little importance, but will you permit me to state that before the English view was or could be known here Mr. G. S. Hilliard printed a communication in The Boston Courier and the writer of this letter printed another in which the omission to bring the Trent in for adjudication was pointed out as a great irregularity likely to lead to serious consequences. I ask your indulgence then while I endeavor to show to my fellow-citizens that this is not a mere matter of form but that it is a matter of very serious and important substance.

Every maritime nation has as part of its judicial system what is called a prize court, the special function of which is to adjudicate on the lawfulness of all seizures made at sea by the cruisers of that nation when it is at war. These courts are not only bound to administer the law of nations in cases involving the conflicting rights of different nations, but their adjudications in cases of capture are binding upon all parties interested unless they are tainted with fraud or gross mistake. Being thus interposed between the nation making a seizure and the nation aggrieved by that seizure, and proceeding always upon solemn truth and argument of the matter in controversy, their functions are essential to the preservation of peace. Accordingly it has always been a law of the world since maritime warfare has been governed by settled principles that every cruiser making a seizure whether of things belonging to an enemy or a neutral and whether on board of an enemy or a neutral vessel shall bring that vessel in and subject the lawfulness of the seizure to adjudication in a prize court. There is one excuse only that can be set up in justification of a failure to make an effort to bring in the vessel and that occurs when the captors have not sufficient force to put a proper prize crew on board the prize, for they have no authority to compel the crew of the prize to navigate for themselves.

In the case of the Trent this rule has not been complied with. By the act of our own officer we are without the means of showing the lawfulness of the seizure in the only mode known to the law of nations. If we had any cause for intercepting and seizing Mr. Mason and Mr. Sli-dell on board of a neutral vessel going from a neutral port to a neutral port it must have been because they were either enemies, ambassadors or fugitive traitors. Suppose they were both; the lawfulness of seizing them from a neutral vessel is the matter in dispute and we can justify it only because the public law gives us a right to do it. But we cannot take the benefit of one part of that law which we say gives us the right to make the capture and reject the other part which prescribes the mode of making the capture and the mode of establishing its lawfulness when made.

When therefore England says that she cannot consent to have the proper function of a prize court set aside by the seizure of a person or thing from one of her vessels, followed by no adjudication, she says a thing of the utmost importance to every maritime nation in the world. This is her real case, her whole case; and it is one which will place all Europe on her side if she presents it in the attitude properly belonging to it. If she says to the President, "I cannot discuss with you the lawfulness of this seizure for you cannot adjudicate it; and as there is now no possibility of a judicial determination, restitution of the men can alone repair the wrong of which I complain," what answer shall we make or compel the President to make? Not I trust to give Lord Lyons his passports, but rather to see if there is a reason sufficient in the eye of the law for having placed ourselves in a position where we cannot give to England what she has a clear right to demand—the judgment of the judicial tribunal on the lawfulness of the seizure.

So far as the case is at present understood there is but one valid reason suggested for not having brought in the Trent. If it can be shown that Captain Wilkes was unable to bring her in for want of a sufficient prize crew England may well be asked to admit that excuse. But the tenderness of Captain Wilkes toward the remaining passengers or toward Her Majesty's mails although fairly enough to be urged as grounds of consideration by the English Government seems to me not to be a legal excuse for the absence of a regular adjudication of the lawfulness of the seizure.

Our countrymen have not so little intelligence or so much false pride as not to be able or willing to see that a principle important to the peace of the world is involved in this case. Let me repeat that the right to have an adjudication of the lawfulness of every capture is indispensable to the safety and honor of all nations. Without it peace cannot be long maintained with neutral powers. Let us not then try to compel our Government to do the impossible. It is clear that they cannot determine between themselves and England the lawfulness of this capture. If we can show a valid excuse for the absence of an adjudication or can now make a voluntary tribunal by accepting or proposing an arbitrator our interest and honor and good name will all be saved.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

EDITOR OF THE BOSTON COURIER:

There is no room to doubt that the San Jacinto had a right to search the Trent. The refusal of its master to exhibit its passenger list was improper and would have been of considerable weight to say the least upon the question of condemnation if the Trent had been brought into port for condemnation. The English theory now is that Mason and Slidell were American citizens traveling for private purposes in no way connected with any hostile enterprise adverse to the United States; that the search of the ship failed to disclose any cause of seizure and therefore the commander of the San Jacinto had no authority to take Mason and Slidell from an English vessel.

Assume this to be a correct statement, which cannot be conceded, the course of Commander Wilkes is not without precedent. The Romeo, Cowan master, on the 29th of October, 1806, was before the admiralty court of Great Britain as a case of prize (6 Robinson's Reports, 351). In the course of the hearing a letter applicable to the Romeo was produced and received in evidence which was not found on board the Romeo.

This letter was taken out of an American vessel, the Mary, by Lieutenant Rigby of His Majesty's gun-boat Urgent who had stopped the Mary and had examined her papers and finding a letter which purported to disclose the real state of a transaction which had been fraudulently concealed had sent the paper in question to the King's proctor officially without detaining the ship in which it was found. This case shows that a captor may introduce proof not found on board a vessel seized and carried in as a prize.

It also shows that an armed ship of Great Britain took from an American ship a paper and did not carry the ship so arrested into port for adjudication.

PHILADELPHIA, December 20, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I suppose the terms of the Queen's proclamation made at the beginning of the Russian war could scarcely have failed to attract your attention in its bearing upon the question which now agitates the country, yet as it is possible that with your attention drawn to other views this one may not have been adverted to I take the liberty of inclosing the following allusions to it from a Nova Scotia paper.

I have the honor to be, with high respect, your obedient servant,
M. RUSSELL THAYER.

[Inclosure No. 1.—Extract from The Halifax (Nova Scotia) Sun, November 25.]

The public mind is seemingly much perplexed about the legality of the apprehension of Mason and Slidell, the ambassadors and bearers of dispatches on board the royal mail steamer Trent when attempting to escape to Europe. When we refer to the law of nations as laid down by the greatest of British international writers we find that the action of the United States Government in this apprehension has at least the sanction of ancient and modern law on this important point. Lord Stowell, one of the ablest of British jurists, says:

The carrying of the dispatches of the enemy is also a condemnation even if carried by neutrals. The ambassador of the enemy may be stopped on his passage, but when he arrives in the neutral country he becomes a sort of middleman, and is entitled to certain privileges.

Lord Stowell further declared and the doctrine was acted upon by the whole judges in the subsequent case, that of the Atlanta, that "the neutral ship carrying the dispatches was liable to be forfeited," and decided accordingly. And Sir William Scott in one of his celebrated judgments in a case of this kind says:

It appears to me on principle that the fact of a vessel carrying the ambassadors or dispatches of a belligerent power whether knowingly or not affords equal ground of forfeiture, if such vessel is seized by the opposing power.

That the foregoing is the true state of the law at the present time may be gathered from the fact that in Her Majesty's proclamation dated the 15th of April, 1854, during the Russian war the following highly important clause appears:

To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all obstruction Her Majesty is willing for the present to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the law of nations. But it is impossible for Her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war and specially preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's messengers or dispatches.

Under these circumstances it is evident that the apprehension of Mason and Slidell has the sanction of the laws of nations.

[Inclosure No. 2.—From The Halifax (Nova Scotia) Sun.]

THE MASON AND SLIDELL DISPATCHES.

Queen Victoria having issued her declaration of war against Russia on the 28th of March, 1854, she made proclamation on the 15th of April that "desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the powers with whom she remains at peace," she was—

Willing to waive a part of her belligerent rights. It is impossible for Her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war and of preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's dispatches, and she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force against the enemy's forts, harbors or coasts.

In her proclamation of May 13, 1861, it is announced:

And whereas hostilities have unhappily commenced between the Government of the United States of America and certain States styling themselves the Confederate States of America; and whereas we being at peace with the Government of the United States have declared our royal determination to maintain a strict and impartial neutrality in the contest between the said contending parties; and we do hereby strictly charge and command all our loving subjects to observe a strict neutrality in and during the aforesaid hostilities and to abstain from violating or contravening either the laws and statutes of the realm in this behalf, or the law of nations in relation thereto, as they will answer to the contrary at their peril.

This proclamation then recites at length a portion of the statute 59th of George III, wherein the offender is to be punished with fine and imprisonment or either at the discretion of the court, and continues:

And we do hereby further warn all our loving subjects and persons entitled to our protection that if any of them shall presume in contempt of this our royal proclamation and of our high displeasure to do any act in derogation of their duty as subjects of a neutral sovereign in the said contest, or in violation or in contravention of the law of nations in that behalf—as for example and more especially [here specifying offenses in the aforesaid statute], or by breaking or endeavoring to break any blockade lawfully and actually established by or on behalf of either of the contending parties; or by carrying officers, soldiers, dispatches, arms, military stores or materials or any article or articles considered and deemed to be contraband of war according to the law or modern usage of nations, for the use or service of either of the said contending parties, all persons so offending will incur and be liable to the several penalties and penal consequences by the said statute or by the law of nations in that behalf imposed or denounced. And we do hereby declare that all our subjects and persons entitled to our protection who may misconduct themselves in the premises will do so at their peril and of their own wrong, and that they will in no wise obtain any protection from us against any liabilities or penal consequences but will on the contrary incur our high displeasure by such misconduct.

Given at our court at the White Lodge, Richmond Park, &c.

The London Times commenting on this proclamation remarks:

Heretofore the proclamation has only reminded the subjects of the Queen of the penalties which the law of this country denounces against an infraction of neutrality, and points out the penalties with which such offenses may be visited by the law of the land or by the law of nations. But in the last paragraph the proclamation seems to go beyond this and to make an announcement of the policy which will be adopted in cases which are provided for neither by the law of the land nor by the law of nations, but which arise out of the peculiar conditions of the present unhappy conflict. It will be observed that in this place the word “such” is omitted. The liabilities and penal consequences are not confined to those under the act or under the law of nations but are left wide and indefinite, as if on purpose to embrace the very case we are supposing.

The captain of the steamer Trent, a British subject, does not hesitate to bear the dispatches of the rebels in the face of all this warning. His act is the more flagrant from his carrying the mails of his Government on a regular ocean mail line to and from England. How can the English Government screen him from public prosecution? Not only the captain but “all hands” have violated the spirit if not the letter of the law and both letter and spirit of the proclamation. And why should not the United States by the law of nations ask of Great Britain this example to be made of offended justice and right?

The steamship Arago from Havre, via Southampton on the 11th instant, passed Cape Race at 6 o'clock Saturday evening en route to New York. Her dates are three days later than those per the America. General Scott is passenger by the Arago. His health much improved.

The London Times' Paris correspondent says that the official opinion of the British minister on the outrage perpetrated by the San Jacinto on the Trent is most precise and positive, namely, first, that the violence committed by the captain of the San Jacinto is indefensible; second, that by regarding the commissioners, Messrs. Mason and Slidell, as contraband Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet contradict themselves for they refused to admit they were aware of their presence.

The various military stations in Ireland had been ordered to complete their strength of sixty-nine regiments of the line. The British Government is negotiating for steamers to transport troops to Canada. The London Times of the 10th instant says advices by the Niagara encourages hope of a disavowal by the Cabinet at Washington of the San Jacinto outrage and a surrender of the southern commissioners.

MY LORD: In conformity with the understanding to which I came with Mr. Seward on the 19th instant I waited upon him the day before yesterday for the purpose of reading to him your lordship's dispatch of the 30th ultimo on the subject of the seizure of Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell and their secretaries on board the Trent.

On my presenting myself Mr. Seward said that he had occupied himself as unremittingly as the great amount of business he had to transact allowed in studying the question. He would confess that he had not yet completely mastered it. He would not make me a formal request to postpone the communication of your lordship's dispatch, but he would say that it would be a great convenience to him personally and a great advantage in all respects if I would consent to do so. The next day was Sunday; could I not defer the communication till Monday. I answered that I would as he wished it put off reading the dispatch to him until Monday, provided he would fix an early hour for receiving me on that day. I should I said be obliged to send off my messenger with dispatches for your lordship on Monday afternoon. It was impossible that I could allow another packet to sail without reporting to your lordship that I had executed your orders. Mr. Seward promised to receive me as early as 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

I accordingly went to him soon after that hour this (Monday) morning, read the dispatch to him and at his request left with him a copy of it. He said that he would immediately lay it before the President and that I should without delay receive a communication with regard to it.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 27, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq.

SIR: You will receive herewith a copy of the correspondence* with Lord Lyons on the subject of the Trent. The great difficulty in all human enterprises consists in pursuing just and worthy objects persistently when the interests and passions of men avail themselves of accidents to embarrass our movements and divert us from our course.

Nothing could have happened so well calculated to electrify the loyal portion of the American people as the capture and confinement of the four persons who were taken from the Trent on their way to Europe to betray their country into the control of ambitious foreign States. But this is no time to be diverted from the cares of the Union into controversies with other powers even if just causes for them could be found. When the affair happened there was no time for the public mind to weigh against the apparent advantages of the capture the probable incompetency of the captured persons as individuals to do any considerable injury to our country abroad, much less to measure the dangers of collision between us and foreign powers resulting from an exchange of our own traditional positions in regard to neutral rights for the British one—one which we had so long and so consistently repudiated. The Government as you will already have learned has not yielded to any such excitement, but has held itself ready to meet and decide the question upon its merits and with reference only to the public welfare in its broadest and most enduring relations.

The President has adopted his decision with the unanimous assent of his Cabinet. We trust and believe that a change or at least a pause will come upon the mind of Europe when it is seen as it now must be that the United States have maintained calmness, composure and dignity during all the season which the British people have been so intensely excited, and that in this as in every other case they have vindicated not only their consistency but their principles and policy while measuring out to Great Britain the justice which they have always claimed at her hands. The Union is indeed the paramount interest of the day but the national prestige and character will not be unnecessarily compromised in our efforts to maintain it.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 27, 1861.

M. HENRI MERCIER, &c.

SIR: I have submitted to the President the copy you were so good as to give me of the dispatch addressed to you on the 3d of December instant† concerning the recent proceedings of Captain Wilkes in arresting certain persons on board of the British contract mail steamer Trent.

Before receiving the paper, however, the President had decided upon the disposition to be made of the subject which has caused so much anxiety in Europe. That disposition of the subject as I think renders unnecessary any discussion of it in reply to the comments of M. Thouvenel. I am permitted, however, to say that M. Thouvenel has not been in error in supposing first that the Government of the United States has not acted in any spirit of disregard of the rights or of the sensibilities of the British nation, and that he is equally just in assuming that the United States would consistently vindicate by their practice on this occasion the character they have so long maintained as an advocate of the most liberal principles concerning the rights of neutral States in maritime war.

When the French Government shall come to see at large the views of this Government and those of the Government of Great Britain on the subject now in question and to compare them with the views expressed by M. Thouvenel on the part of France it will probably perceive that while it must be admitted that those three powers are equally impressed with the same desire for the establishment of principles favorable to neutral rights there is at the same time not such an entire agreement concerning the application of those principles as is desirable to secure that important object.

The Government of the United States will be happy if the occasion which has elicited this correspondence can be improved so as to secure a more definite agreement upon the whole subject by all maritime powers.

You will assure M. Thouvenel that this Government appreciates as well the frankness of his explanations as the spirit of friendship and good will toward the United States in which they are expressed.

It is a sincere pleasure for the United States to exchange assurances of a friendship which had its origin in associations the most sacred in the history of both countries.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * The day before yesterday M. Mercier received the dispatch from M. Thouvenel which was read to your lordship by Count Flahault on the 6th instant. He immediately carried it to the State Department and on being informed that Mr. Seward was at a Cabinet council requested the Assistant Secretary to send it into the council room without delay.

M. Mercier has throughout displayed great alacrity and good will and (if I may be allowed to express an opinion on that point also) excellent judgment in giving the moral support of France to the demands of Her Majesty's Government.

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a note which I have this morning received from Mr. Seward in answer to your lordship's dispatch of the 30th of last month relative to the removal of Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis from the British mail-packet Trent. The note contains a very long and very elaborate dissertation on the questions of international law involved in the case.

I have not time before the departure of the messenger to weigh the arguments or to estimate precisely the force of the expressions used. But as Mr. Seward admits that reparation is due to Great Britain and consents to deliver the four prisoners to me I consider that the demands of Her Majesty's Government are so far substantially complied with that it is my duty in obedience to your lordship's commands to report the facts to Her Majesty's Government for their consideration and to remain at my post until I receive further orders.

I have the honor to inclose a copy of the answer which I have made to Mr. Seward's note. I have confined myself to stating that I will forward a copy of it to Her Majesty's Government, and that I will confer with Mr. Seward personally on the arrangements to be made for the delivery of the prisoners to me.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 26, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: Earl Russell's dispatch of November 30, a copy of which you have left with me at my request, is of the following effect, namely:

That a letter of Commander Williams dated "Royal Mail Contract Packet-boat Trent, at sea, November 9" states that that vessel left Havana on the 7th of November with Her Majesty's mails for England having on board numerous passengers. Shortly after noon on the 8th of November the U. S. war steamer San Jacinto, Captain Wilkes, not showing colors was observed ahead. That steamer on being neared by the Trent at 1.15 p. m. fired a round shot from a pivot gun across her bows and showed American colors. While the Trent was approaching slowly toward the San Jacinto she discharged a shell across the Trent's bows which exploded at half a cable's length before her. The Trent then stopped and an officer with a large armed guard of marines boarded her. The officer said he had orders to arrest Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis and had sure information that they were passengers on the Trent. While some parley was going on upon this matter Mr. Slidell stepped forward and said to the American officer that the four persons he had named were standing before him. The commander of the Trent and Commander Williams protested against the act of taking those four passengers out of the Trent they then being under the protection of the British flag. But the San Jacinto was at this time only 200 yards distant, her ship's company at quarters, her ports open and tompions out and so resistance was out of the question. The four persons before named were then forcibly taken out of the ship. A further demand was made that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto but he said he would not go unless forcibly compelled likewise and this demand was not insisted upon.

Upon this statement Earl Russell remarks that it thus appears that certain individuals have been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral power, while that vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage—an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

Earl Russell next says that Her Majesty's Government bearing in mind the friendly relations which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the United States are willing to believe that the naval officer who committed this aggression was not acting in compliance with any authority from his Government or that if he conceived himself to be so authorized he greatly misunderstood the instructions which he had received.

Earl Russell argues that the United States must be fully aware that the British Government could not allow such an affront to the national honor to pass without full reparation and they are willing to believe that it could not be the deliberate intention of the United States unnecessarily to force into discussion between the two Governments a question of so grave a character and with regard to which the whole British nation would be sure to entertain such unanimity of feeling.

Earl Russell resting upon the statement and the argument which I have thus recited closes with saying that her Majesty's Government trust that when this matter shall have been brought under the consideration of the Government of the United States it will of its own accord offer to the British Government such redress as alone could satisfy the British nation, namely, the liberation of the four prisoners taken from the Trent and their delivery to your lordship in order that they may again be placed under British protection and a suitable apology for the aggression which has been committed. Earl Russell finally instructs you to propose those terms to me if I should not first offer them on the part of the Government.

This dispatch has been submitted to the President.

The British Government has rightly conjectured what it is now my duty to state that Captain Wilkes in conceiving and executing the proceeding in question acted upon his own suggestions of duty without any direction or instruction or even foreknowledge of it on the part of this Government. No directions had been given to him or any other naval officer to arrest the four persons named or any of them on the Trent or on any other British vessel or on any other neutral vessel at the place where it occurred or elsewhere. The British Government will justly infer from these facts that the United States not only have had no purpose but even no thought of forcing into discussion the question which has arisen or any other which could affect in any way the sensibilities of the British nation.

It is true that a round shot was fired by the San Jacinto from her pivot gun when the Trent was distantly approaching. But as the facts have been reported to this Government the shot was nevertheless intentionally fired in a direction so obviously divergent from the course of the Trent as to be quite as harmless as a blank shot while it should be regarded as a signal.

So also we learn that the Trent was not approaching the San Jacinto slowly when the shell was fired across her bows, but on the contrary the Trent was or seemed to be moving under a full head of steam as if with a purpose to pass the San Jacinto.

We are informed also that the boarding officer (Lieutenant Fairfax) did not board the Trent with a large armed guard, but he left his marines in his boat when he entered the Trent. He stated his instructions from Captain Wilkes to search for the four persons named in a respectful and courteous though decided manner, and he asked the captain of the Trent to show his passenger list which was refused. The lieutenant as we are informed did not employ absolute force in transferring the passengers, but he used just so much as was necessary to satisfy the parties concerned that refusal or resistance would be unavailing.

So also we are informed that the captain of the Trent was not at any time or in any way required to go on board the San Jacinto.

These modifications of the case as presented by Commander Williams are based upon our official reports.

I have now to remind your lordship of some facts which doubtlessly were omitted by Earl Russell with the very proper and becoming motive of allowing them to be brought into the case on the part of the United States in the way most satisfactory to this Government. These facts are that at the time the transaction occurred an insurrection was existing in the United States which this Government was engaged in suppressing by the employment of land and naval forces; that in regard to this domestic strife the United States considered Great Britain as a friendly power, while she had assumed for herself the attitude of a neutral; and that Spain was considered in the same light and had assumed the same attitude as Great Britain.

It has been settled by correspondence that the United States and Great Britain mutually recognized as applicable to this local strife these two articles of the declaration made by the Congress of Paris in 1856, namely, that the neutral or friendly flag should cover enemy's goods not contraband of war, and that neutral goods not contraband of war are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag. These exceptions of contraband from favor were a negative acceptance by the parties of the rule hitherto everywhere recognized as a part of the law of nations that whatever is contraband is liable to capture and confiscation in all cases.

James M. Mason and J. E. Macfarland are citizens of the United States and residents of Virginia; John Slidell and George Eustis are citizens of the United States and residents of Louisiana. It was well known at Havana when these parties embarked in the Trent that James M. Mason was proceeding to England in the affected character of a minister plenipotentiary to the Court of Saint James under a pretended commission from Jefferson Davis, who had assumed to be president of the insurrectionary party in the United States, and J. E. Macfarland was going with him in a like unreal character of secretary of legation to the pretended mission. John Slidell in similar circumstances was going to Paris as a pretended minister to the Emperor of the French and George Eustis was the chosen secretary of legation for that simulated mission. The fact that these persons had assumed such characters has been since avowed by the same Jefferson Davis in a pretended message* to an unlawful and insurrectionary congress. It was as we think rightly presumed that these ministers bore pretended credentials and instructions and such papers are in the law known as dispatches. We are informed by our consul at Paris that these dispatches having escaped the search of the Trent were actually conveyed and delivered to emissaries of the insurrection in England. Although it is not essential yet it is proper to state as I do also upon information and belief that the owner and agent and all the officers of the Trent including Commander Williams had knowledge of the assumed characters and purposes of the persons before named when they embarked on that vessel.

Your lordship will now perceive that the case before us instead of presenting a merely flagrant act of violence on the part of Captain Wilkes, as might well be inferred from the incomplete statement of it that went up to the British Government, was undertaken as a simple legal and customary belligerent proceeding by Captain Wilkes to arrest and capture a neutral vessel engaged in carrying contraband of war for the use and benefit of the insurgents.

* See p. 1229 for this message.

The question before us is whether this proceeding was authorized by and conducted according to the law of nations. It involves the following inquiries:

First. Were the persons named and their supposed dispatches contraband of war?

Second. Might Captain Wilkes lawfully stop and search the Trent for these contraband persons and dispatches?

Third. Did he exercise that right in a proper and lawful manner?

Fourth. Having found the contraband persons on board and in presumed possession of the contraband dispatches had he a right to capture the persons?

Fifth. Did he exercise that right of capture in the manner allowed and recognized by the law of nations?

If all these inquiries shall be resolved in the affirmative the British Government will have no claim for reparation.

I address myself to the first inquiry, namely, were the four persons mentioned and their supposed dispatches contraband?

Maritime law so generally deals as its professors say in rem, that is, with property and so seldom with persons that it seems a straining of the word "contraband" to apply it to them. But persons as well as property may become contraband since the word means broadly "contrary to proclamation, prohibited, illegal, unlawful."

All writers and judges pronounce naval or military persons in the service of the enemy contraband. Vattel says war allows us to cut off from an enemy all his resources and to hinder him from sending ministers to solicit assistance. And Sir William Scott says you may stop the ambassador of your enemy on his passage. Dispatches are not less clearly contraband and the bearers or couriers who undertake to carry them fall under the same condemnation.

A subtlety might be raised whether pretended ministers of a usurping power not recognized as legal by either the belligerent or the neutral could be held to be contraband. But it would disappear on being subjected to what is the true test in all cases, namely, the spirit of the law. Sir William Scott speaking of civil magistrates who are arrested and detained as contraband says:

It appears to me on principle to be but reasonable that when it is of sufficient importance to the enemy that such persons shall be sent out on the public service at the public expense it should afford equal ground of forfeiture against the vessel that may be let out for a purpose so intimately connected with the hostile operations.

I trust that I have shown that the four persons who were taken from the Trent by Captain Wilkes and their dispatches were contraband of war.

The second inquiry is whether Captain Wilkes had a right by the law of nations to detain and search the Trent.

The Trent though she carried mails was a contract or merchant vessel—a common carrier for hire. Maritime law knows only three classes of vessels—vessels of war, revenue vessels and merchant vessels. The Trent falls within the latter class. Whatever disputes have existed concerning a right of visitation or search in time of peace none it is supposed has existed in modern times about the right of a belligerent in time of war to capture contraband in neutral and even friendly merchant vessels, and of the right of visitation and search in order to determine whether they are neutral and are documented as such according to the law of nations.

I assume in the present case—what as I read British authorities is regarded by Great Britain herself as true maritime law—that the circumstance that the Trent was proceeding from a neutral port to another neutral port does not modify the right of the belligerent captor.

The third question is whether Captain Wilkes exercised the right of search in a lawful and proper manner.

If any doubt hung over this point, as the case was presented in the statement of it adopted by the British Government, I think it must have already passed away before the modifications of that statement which I have already submitted.

I proceed to the fourth inquiry, namely, having found the suspected contraband on board the Trent, had Captain Wilkes a right to capture the same?

Such a capture is the chief if not the only recognized object of the permitted visitation and search. The principle of the law is that the belligerent exposed to danger may prevent the contraband persons or things from applying themselves or being applied to the hostile uses or purposes designed. The law is so very liberal in this respect that when contraband is found on board a neutral vessel not only is the contraband forfeited, but the vessel which is the vehicle of its passage or transportation being tainted also becomes contraband and is subject to capture and confiscation.

Only the fifth question remains, namely, did Captain Wilkes exercise the right of capturing the contraband in conformity with the law of nations?

It is just here that the difficulties of the case begin. What is the manner which the law of nations prescribes for disposing of the contraband when you have found and seized it on board of the neutral vessel? The answer would easily be found if the question were what you shall do with the contraband vessel. You must take or send her into a convenient port and subject her to a judicial prosecution there in admiralty, which will try and decide the questions of belligerency, neutrality, contraband and capture. So again you would promptly find the same answer if the question were what is the manner of proceeding prescribed by the law of nations in regard to the contraband, if it be property or things of material or pecuniary value.

But the question here concerns the mode of procedure in regard not to the vessel that was carrying the contraband nor yet to contraband things which worked the forfeiture of the vessel but to contraband persons.

The books of law are dumb. Yet the question is as important as it is difficult. First, the belligerent captor has a right to prevent the contraband officer, soldier, sailor, minister, messenger or courier from proceeding in his unlawful voyage and reaching the destined scene of his injurious service. But on the other hand the person captured may be innocent—that is he may not be contraband. He therefore had a right to a fair trial of the accusation against him. The neutral State that has taken him under its flag is bound to protect him if he is not contraband and is therefore entitled to be satisfied upon that important question. The faith of that State is pledged to his safety if innocent, as its justice is pledged to his surrender if he is really contraband. Here are conflicting claims involving personal liberty, life, honor and duty. Here are conflicting national claims involving welfare, safety, honor and empire. They require a tribunal and a trial. The captors and the captured are equals; the neutral and the belligerent state are equals.

While the law authorities were found silent it was suggested at an early day by this Government that you should take the captured persons into a convenient port and institute judicial proceedings there to try the controversy. But only courts of admiralty have jurisdiction in maritime cases and these courts have formulas to try only claims to contraband chattels but none to try claims concerning contraband persons. The courts can entertain no proceedings and render no judgment in favor of or against the alleged contraband men.

It was replied all this was true, but you can reach in those courts a decision which will have the moral weight of a judicial one by a circuitous proceeding. Convey the suspected men together with the suspected vessel into port and try there the question whether the vessel is contraband. You can prove it to be so by proving the suspected men to be contraband and the court must then determine the vessel to be contraband. If the men are not contraband the vessel will escape condemnation. Still there is no judgment for or against the captured persons. But it was assumed that there would result from the determination of the court concerning the vessel a legal certainty concerning the character of the men. This course of proceeding seemed open to many objections. It elevates the incidental inferior private interest into the proper place of the main paramount public one and possibly it may make the fortunes, the safety or the existence of a nation depend on the accidents of a merely personal and pecuniary litigation. Moreover when the judgment of the prize court upon the lawfulness of the capture of the vessel is rendered it really concludes nothing and binds neither the belligerent State nor the neutral upon the great question of the disposition to be made of the captured contraband persons. That question is still to be really determined if at all by diplomatic arrangement or by war.

One may well express his surprise when told that the law of nations has furnished no more reasonable, practicable and perfect mode than this of determining questions of such grave import between sovereign powers. The regret we may feel on the occasion is nevertheless modified by the reflection that the difficulty is not altogether anomalous. Similar and equal deficiencies are found in every system of municipal law, especially in the system which exists in the greater portions of Great Britain and the United States. The title to personal property can hardly ever be resolved by a court without resorting to the fiction that the claimant has lost and the possessor has found it, and the title to real estate is disputed by real litigants under the names of imaginary persons. It must be confessed, however, that while all aggrieved nations demand and all impartial nations concede the need of some form of judicial process in determining the character of contraband persons no other form than the illogical and circuitous one thus described exists, nor has any other yet been suggested. Practically therefore the choice is between that judicial remedy or no judicial remedy whatever.

If there be no judicial remedy the result is that the question must be determined by the captor himself on the deck of the prize vessel. Very grave objections arise against such a course. The captor is armed and the neutral is unarmed. The captor is interested, prejudiced and perhaps violent; the neutral if truly neutral is disinterested, subdued and helpless. The tribunal is irresponsible while its judgment is carried into instant execution. The captured party is compelled to submit though bound by no legal, moral or treaty obligation to acquiesce. Reparation is distant and problematical and depends at last on the justice, magnanimity or weakness of the State in whose behalf and by whose authority the capture was made. Out of these disputes reprisals and wars necessarily arise, and these are so frequent and destructive that it may well be doubted whether this form of remedy is not a greater social evil than all that could follow if the belligerent right of search were universally renounced and abolished forever.

But carry the case one step further. What if the State that has made the capture unreasonably refuse to hear the complaint of the neutral or to redress it? In that case the very act of capture would be an act of war—of war begun without notice and possibly entirely without provocation.

I think that all unprejudiced minds will agree that imperfect as the existing judicial remedy may be supposed to be it would be as a general practice better to follow it than to adopt the summary one of leaving the decision with the captor and relying upon diplomatic debates to review his decision. Practically it is a question of choice between law with its imperfections and delays and war with its evils and desolations. Nor is it ever to be forgotten that neutrality honestly and justly preserved is always the harbinger of peace and therefore is the common interest of nations, which is only saying that it is the interest of humanity itself.

At the same time it is not denied that it may sometimes happen that the judicial remedy will become impossible as by the shipwreck of the prize vessel or other circumstances which excuse the captor from sending or taking her into port for confiscation. In such a case the right of the captor to the custody of the captured persons and to dispose of them if they are really contraband so as to defeat their unlawful purposes cannot reasonably be denied. What rule shall be applied in such a case? Clearly the captor ought to be required to show that the failure of the judicial remedy results from circumstances beyond his control and without his fault. Otherwise he would be allowed to derive advantage from a wrongful act of his own.

In the present case Captain Wilkes, after capturing contraband persons and making prize of the Trent in what seems to be a perfectly lawful manner, instead of sending her into port released her from the capture and permitted her to proceed with her whole cargo upon her voyage. He thus effectually prevented the judicial examination which might otherwise have occurred.

If now the capture of the contraband persons and the capture of the contraband vessel are to be regarded not as two separate or distinct transactions under the law of nations but as one transaction—one capture only—then it follows that the capture in this case was left unfinished or was abandoned. Whether the United States have a right to retain the chief public benefits of it, namely, the custody of the captured persons on proving them to be contraband, will depend upon the preliminary question whether the leaving of the transaction unfinished was necessary or whether it was unnecessary and therefore voluntary. If it was necessary Great Britain as we suppose must of course waive the defect and the consequent failure of the judicial remedy. On the other hand it is not seen how the United States can insist upon her waiver of that judicial remedy if the defect of the capture resulted from an act of Captain Wilkes which would be a fault on their own side.

Captain Wilkes has presented to this Government his reasons for releasing the Trent:

I forbore to seize her [says he] in consequence of my being so reduced in officers and crew and the derangement it would cause innocent persons, there being a large number of passengers who would have been put to great loss and inconvenience as well as disappointment from the interruption it would have caused them in not being able to join the steamer from Saint Thomas to Europe. I therefore concluded to sacrifice the interest of my officers and crew in the prize and suffer her to proceed after the detention necessary to effect the transfer of those commissioners, considering I had obtained the important end I had in view, and which affected the interest of our country and interrupted the action of that of the Confederates.

I shall consider first how these reasons ought to affect the action of this Government; and secondly how they ought to be expected to affect the action of Great Britain.

The reasons are satisfactory to this Government so far as Captain Wilkes is concerned. It could not desire that the San Jacinto, her officers and crew should be exposed to danger and loss by weakening their number to detach a prize crew to go on board the Trent. Still less could it disavow the humane motive of preventing inconveniences, losses and perhaps disasters to the several hundred innocent passengers found on board the prize vessel. Nor could this Government perceive any ground for questioning the fact that these reasons though apparently incongruous did operate in the mind of Captain Wilkes and determine him to release the Trent. Human actions generally proceed upon mingled and sometimes conflicting motives. He measured the sacrifices which this decision would cost. It manifestly did not occur to him, however, that beyond the sacrifice of the private interests (as he calls them) of his officers and crew there might also possibly be a sacrifice even of the chief and public object of his capture, namely, the right of his Government to the custody and disposition of the captured persons. The Government cannot censure him for this oversight. It confesses that the whole subject came unforeseen upon the Government as doubtless it did upon him. Its present convictions upon the point in question are the result of deliberate examination and deduction now made and not of any impressions previously formed.

Nevertheless the question now is not whether Captain Wilkes is justified to his Government in what he did, but what is the present view of the Government as to the effect of what he has done? Assuming now for argument's sake only that the release of the Trent if voluntary involved a waiver of the claim of the Government to hold the captured persons, the United States in that case could have no hesitation in saying that the act which has thus already been approved by the Government must be allowed to draw its legal consequence after it. It is of the very nature of a gift or a charity that the giver cannot after the exercise of his benevolence is past recall or modify its benefits.

We are thus brought directly to the question whether we are entitled to regard the release of the Trent as involuntary or whether we are obliged to consider that it was voluntary. Clearly the release would have been involuntary had it been made solely upon the first ground assigned for it by Captain Wilkes, namely, the want of a sufficient force to send the prize vessel into port for adjudication. It is not the duty of a captor to hazard his own vessel in order to secure a judicial examination to the captured party. No large prize crew, however, is legally necessary for it is the duty of the captured party to acquiesce and go willingly before the tribunal to whose jurisdiction it appeals. If the captured party indicate purposes to employ means of resistance which the captor cannot with probable safety to himself overcome he may properly leave the vessel to go forward and neither she nor the State she represents can ever afterward justly object that the captor deprived her of the judicial remedy to which she was entitled.

But the second reason assigned by Captain Wilkes for releasing the Trent differs from the first. At best therefore it must be held that Captain Wilkes as he explains himself acted from combined sentiments of prudence and generosity, and so that the release of the prize vessel was not strictly necessary or involuntary. Secondly, how ought we to expect these explanations from Captain Wilkes of his reasons for leaving the capture incomplete to affect the action of the British Government?

The observation upon this point which first occurs is that Captain Wilkes' explanations were not made to the authorities of the captured vessel. If made known to them they might have approved and taken the release upon the condition of waiving a judicial investigation of the whole transaction or they might have refused to accept the release upon that condition.

But the case is one not with them but with the British Government. If we claim that Great Britain ought not to insist that a judicial trial has been lost because we voluntarily released the offending vessel out of consideration for her innocent passengers I do not see how she is to be bound to acquiesce in the decision which was thus made by us without necessity on our part and without knowledge of conditions or consent on her own. The question between Great Britain and ourselves thus stated would be a question not of right and of law but of favor to be conceded by her to us in return for favors shown by us to her, of the value of which favors on both sides we ourselves shall be the judge. Of course the United States could have no thought of raising such a question in any case.

I trust that I have shown to the satisfaction of the British Government by a very simple and natural statement of the facts and analysis of the law applicable to them that this Government had neither meditated nor practiced nor approved any deliberate wrong in the transaction to which they have called its attention; and on the contrary that what has happened has been simply an inadvertency, consisting in a departure by the naval officer free from any wrongful motive from a rule uncertainly established and probably by the several parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. For this error the British Government has a right to expect the same reparation that we as an independent State should expect from Great Britain or from any other friendly nation in a similar case.

I have not been unaware that in examining this question I have fallen into an argument for what seems to be the British side of it against my own country. But I am relieved from all embarrassment on that subject. I had hardly fallen into that line of argument when I discovered that I was really defending and maintaining not an exclusively British interest but an old, honored and cherished American cause, not upon British authorities but upon principles that constitute a large portion of the distinctive policy by which the United States have developed the resources of a continent, and thus becoming a considerable maritime power have won the respect and confidence of many nations. These principles were laid down for us in 1804 by James Madison when Secretary of State in the Administration of Thomas Jefferson in instructions given to James Monroe, our minister to England. Although the case before him concerned a description of persons different from those who are incidentally the subject of the present discussion the ground he assumed then was the same I now occupy, and the arguments by which he sustained himself upon it have been an inspiration to me in preparing this reply.

Whenever [he says] property found in a neutral vessel is supposed to be liable on any ground to capture and condemnation the rule in all cases is that the question shall not be decided by the captor but be carried before a legal tribunal where a regular trial may be had, and where the captor himself is liable for damages for an abuse of his power. Can it be reasonable then or just that a belligerent commander who is thus restricted and thus responsible in a case of mere property of trivial amount should be permitted without recurring to any tribunal whatever to examine the crew of a neutral vessel, to decide the important question of their respective allegiances and to carry that decision into execution by forcing every individual he may choose into a service abhorrent to his feelings, cutting him off from his most tender connections, exposing his mind and his person to the most humiliating discipline and his life itself to the greatest danger? Reason, justice and humanity unite in protesting against so extravagant a proceeding.

If I decide this case in favor of my own Government I must disavow its most cherished principles and reverse and forever abandon its essential policy. The country cannot afford the sacrifice. If I maintain those principles and adhere to that policy I must surrender the case itself. It will be seen therefore that this Government could not deny the justice of the claim presented to us in this respect upon its merits. We are asked to do to the British nation just what we have always insisted all nations ought to do to us.

The claim of the British Government is not made in a discourteous manner. This Government since its first organization has never used more guarded language in a similar case.

In coming to my conclusion I have not forgotten that if the safety of this Union required the detention of the captured persons it would be the right and duty of this Government to detain them. But the effectual check and waning proportions of the existing insurrection as well as the comparative unimportance of the captured persons themselves when dispassionately weighed happily forbid me from resorting to that defense.

Nor am I unaware that American citizens are not in any case to be unnecessarily surrendered for any purpose into the keeping of a foreign State. Only the captured persons, however, or others who are interested in them could justly raise a question on that ground.

Nor have I tempted at all by suggestions that cases might be found in history where Great Britain refused to yield to other nations and even to ourselves claims like that which is now before us. Those cases occurred when Great Britain as well as the United States was the home of generations which with all their peculiar interests and passions have passed away. She could in no other way so effectually disavow any such injury as we think she does by assuming now as her own the ground upon which we then stood. It would tell little for our own claims to the character of a just and magnanimous people if we should so far consent to be guided by the law of retaliation as to lift up buried injuries from their graves against what national consistency and the national conscience compel us to regard as a claim intrinsically right.

Putting behind me all suggestions of this kind I prefer to express my satisfaction that by the adjustment of the present case upon principles confessedly American and yet as I trust mutually satisfactory to both of the nations concerned a question is finally and rightly settled between them which heretofore exhausting not only all forms of peaceful discussion but also the arbitrament of war itself for more than half a century alienated the two countries from each other and perplexed with fears and apprehensions all other nations.

The four persons in question are now held in military custody at Fort Warren, in the State of Massachusetts. They will be cheerfully liberated. Your lordship will please indicate a time and place for receiving them.

I avail myself of this occasion to offer to your lordship a renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have this morning received the note which you did me the honor to address to me yesterday in answer to Earl Russell's dispatch of the 30th of November last relative to the removal of Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis from the British mail packet Trent.

I will without any loss of time forward to Her Majesty's Government a copy of the important communication which you have made to me.

I will also without delay do myself the honor to confer with you personally on the arrangements to be made for delivering the four gentlemen to me in order that they may be again placed under the protection of the British flag.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1861.

(Received January 9, 1862.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * Before transmitting to me the note of which a copy is inclosed in my immediately preceding dispatch of to-day's date Mr. Seward sent for me to come to the State Department and said with some emotion that he thought it was due to the great kindness and consideration which I had manifested throughout in dealing with the affair of the Trent that he should tell me with his own lips that he had been able to effect a satisfactory settlement of it. He had, however, now been authorized to address to me a note which would be satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government.

In answer to inquiries from me Mr. Seward said that of course he understood Her Majesty's Government [willing] to leave it open to the Government of Washington to present the case in the form which would be most acceptable to the American people, but that the note was intended to be and was a compliance with the terms proposed by Her Majesty's Government. He would add that the friendly spirit and the discretion which I had manifested in the whole matter from the day on which the intelligence of the seizure reached Washington up to the present moment had more than anything else contributed to the satisfactory settlement of the question.

I asked Mr. Seward what arrangements he would wish me to make for receiving the prisoners. He begged me to speak to him on the subject to-morrow for he was at the moment overwhelmed with business and particularly with the labor of preparing dispatches for the European mail.

[Mr. HAMMOND.]

SIR: I am commanded by my lords commissioners of the admiralty to transmit herewith for the information of Earl Russell a copy of the protest made by the master of the royal mail steamer Trent before Her Majesty's consul at Saint Thomas on the 14th ultimo against the proceedings of the captain of the U. S. ship of war San Jacinto in forcibly removing Messrs. Mason and Slidell, the commissioners from the so-called Confederate States, with their secretaries from on board the Trent.

PROTEST.

HER BRITANNIC MAJESTY'S CONSULATE, Saint Thomas, West Indies.

Be it known that on this 14th of November, 1861, before me, Robert Boyd Lamb, esq., Her Britannic Majesty's consul in the Island of Saint Thomas, personally appeared James Moir, master of the steamship Trent, of London, of the burden of 1,856 tons or thereabouts, and entered a protest declaring as follows:

That he sailed in the said steamship Trent from Havana under contract with Her Britannic Majesty's Government as a mail packet bound for Saint Thomas with Her Majesty's mails under charge of Commander Richard Williams, of Her Majesty's navy, sixty-odd passengers, $1,500,000 in specie and a valuable cargo, on the 7th instant, at 8 a. m.; that nothing particular occurred till the succeeding day, 8th instant, at about meridian, when the ship was in the narrow part of the Bahama Channel approaching the Paredon Grande Light-House, the coast of Cuba distant about 4 miles, a steamer having the appearance of a man-of-war but not showing any colors was observed ahead hove to; that the British ensign was immediately hoisted on board the Trent with the Royal Mail Company's distinguishing flag at the main, and on approaching the vessel ahead, which still showed no colors, at 1.05 p. m. she fired a round shot across the Trent's bows and then hoisted American colors, when the Trent's engines were immediately slowed, and while she was approaching the American vessel a shell was discharged from the latter's pivot gun across the Trent's bows which burst half a cable's length ahead of her. The Trent's engines were then stopped, when she was hailed by an officer from the American vessel and ordered to heave to.

A boat from her then came on board with armed boat's crew and an armed guard of marines accompanied by an officer in uniform of the U. S. Navy, who stated that the ship was the U. S. war steamer the San Jacinto, commanded by Captain Wilkes, and demanded a list of the passengers on board, which demand the master of the Trent refused to comply with, on which refusal a further force was sent for from the San Jacinto and two more boats with armed marines and armed boat's crews came on board the Trent; that the same officer then stated that he had orders whatever might be the consequence to arrest Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Macfarland and Eustis whom he knew were on board the ship. He was then asked by the master of the Trent what would be his course in case of a refusal to give up these parties, to which he replied that his orders were to take the ship in case of necessity. He was then informed by the master of the Trent that the passengers would not be given up unless such force was used as could not be resisted, on which Mr. Slidell stepped forward and informed the officer of the San Jacinto that the parties he demanded were before him under the protection of the British flag, and claiming same they would not consent to be taken out of the ship except by force of arms. They were then seized by order of the U. S. officers and after being allowed a short time to collect some necessaries and separate themselves from their families they were forcibly dragged out of the ship by the armed force, notwithstanding the strong and repeated protest by master of the Trent and Commander Williams against an act of hostility and violence committed on a vessel carrying the British flag by a ship of war of a nation on terms of peace and amity with Her Britannic Majesty's Government, to which protest the officer of the San Jacinto replied that he was obeying his orders to effect the arrest at all hazards.

That from the time the first boat was sent to the Trent the San Jacinto lay on the port beam about 200 yards off with her ports open, her guns (seven broadside iron-pivot) run out, tompons out and crew at quarters; that the American officer before leaving the Trent made a further demand that the commander of the Trent should proceed on board the San Jacinto, to which the reply was made that he would not leave the ship unless taken out by force of arms. Against all of which illegal, hostile and piratical acts as before detailed the said James Moir, on his own behalf as a British subject commanding a British ship engaged in the postal service of Her Majesty and on behalf of all others whom it may concern, did declare to protest as by these presents he doth solemnly protest against all and every person and persons, officers and governments directly or indirectly concerned in said illegal and hostile acts, holding them liable for all losses, damages and consequences of the same. And I, the said consul, at the request of the said James Moir, master of the said ship Trent, do hereby solemnly protest against the same, manner and form aforesaid.

This done, &c., at the port of Saint Thomas.

JAMES MOIR,
Master of H. M. S. Trent.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq.

SIR: Your dispatches of December 3 and December 6 have been received. They relate generally to the affair of the Trent and the condition of the public mind on that subject. I send you ten copies of the correspondence which has taken place between Lord Lyons and myself on the subject, which I trust will satisfy the Government of Great Britain that the United States are as incapable of doing a wrong or offering an affront to the British nation as they are careful of their own rights and honor.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Madrid, December 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * The anxiety felt at this capital concerning the grave question pending between the United States and England as the time draws near when the reply of our Government to the demands of England may be expected is quite evident.

I do not hesitate to say that public opinion is decidedly against us in the question of right, and the proceeding of the commander of the San Jacinto with the Trent is considered by Spanish juriconsults as unsanctioned by the law of nations. It is considered therefore that the United States ought not to hesitate to make reparation for the fault committed by their officer.

Whilst this is so there is at the same time a good deal of satisfaction manifest that the act condemned should have been committed with an English ship and not that of any other nation. The skirts of England are not clean and Spanish statesmen willingly allow that she is the last of all the powers in her right to complain of such treatment.

But though England may have been guilty in times past of acts in regard to neutral ships even more indefensible than that of which she now complains this is not thought to justify the United States in the commission of like faults, and there is no hesitation here upon the point that the interests of all nations would be served by the United States yielding in this matter and allowing the question involved in the affair of the San Jacinto and Trent to be decided against them upon principle.

I give you thus a summary of the opinions of various personages with whom I have conversed freely and which may be taken as those of the most enlightened and most competent of this country. Yesterday I had an informal interview with the minister of state at his department in which the conversation turned upon the declaration made to me in June last by Mr. Calderon to the effect that he would not see nor receive any commissioners or other negotiators from the so-called Confederate States as reported by me in dispatch No. 4, of June 13, published in The London Times of December 19.

Mr. Calderon renewed to me yesterday the same declaration, saying that the policy of Spain in regard to our civil contest was fixed by the royal decree of June 17, which appeared a few days subsequent to the interview referred to, and that Her Majesty's Government had no intention to depart from its provisions in any respect. Mr. Calderon said himself that to hold conferences with or receive the agents of the so-called Confederate States in any official capacity would be tantamount to recognizing the separate existence of those States as a body politic, and thus the Government of Spain had no intention to do, but holds to the line of conduct and policy embodied in the royal decree of June 17.

As to the question between the United States and England, growing out of the affairs of the San Jacinto, Mr. Calderon said in substance in reply to my observations that we were wrong and that England could not help making her energetic reclamation against that proceeding; that the subject of the attitude of Spain in the case of war between the two powers had not been treated in the council of ministers as there had been no formal instance on my part in regard to the matter; but he quite agreed with me that the interests of Spain indicated a complete neutrality and there was no motive why Spain should take any part in the contest on either side.

His manner was frank and kind and his language such as to completely reassure me in my conviction that his country has no idea of being itself drawn into the dispute in any event. I did not myself think proper to give to this rather informal conversation any more important character nor attempt to press the minister to any distinct declaration of an official nature at the present moment. When we know the reply of the President to the pretensions of the English cabinet I shall endeavor to shape my course here in accordance with what our interests will then seem to demand, hoping to receive your instructions as to any positive step which it may be proper to take.

Meantime everything confirms the opinion * * * that a complete neutrality of Spain in any and all circumstances of the threatening conflict with England can be maintained.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, sir, your obedient servant,

HORATIO J. PERRY.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit to Congress a correspondence* which has taken place between the Secretary of State and authorities of Great Britain and France on the subject of the recent removal of certain citizens of the United States from the British mail steamer Trent by order of Captain Wilkes, in command of the U. S. war steamer San Jacinto.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 30, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq.

SIR: Your dispatch bearing date of December 6 was duly received. It treats chiefly of the Trent affair, and of the case of the British consul at Charleston. Those subjects having been for the present at least disposed of by this Government I need only now thank you for the diligence and sagacity you have practiced in conducting the proceedings concerning them so far as they fell within the province of your mission.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 30, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq.

SIR: Your dispatch of December 12 has been received. While the information it furnishes and the suggestions it presents are highly appreciated the disposition of the Trent case which has been made seems to remove the necessity for reply.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

* Omitted here. The correspondence transmitted is that which appears herein in its chronological order with other matter relating to the same subject.—COMPILER.

WASHINGTON, December 31, 1861.

(Received January 15, 1862.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: After some consultation with Mr. Seward I have fixed noon to-morrow as the time and Provincetown as the place at which Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis are to be restored to the protection of the British flag. I have accordingly requested Commander Hewett, of Her Majesty's ship Rinaldo, to go at once with that ship to Provincetown to receive the four gentlemen. The United States Government will convey them hither from Fort Warren in an American steam vessel. Mr. Seward assures me that this arrangement is acceptable to the Government of the United States and well calculated to secure the gentlemen themselves from inconvenience and annoyance.

I have the honor to transmit to your lordship a copy of the dispatch which I have written to Commander Hewett. Your lordship will perceive that I have requested him to proceed with his passengers in the first instance to Halifax. This will no doubt be in conformity with their own wishes. I consider that as the four gentlemen lost their passage on board the Trent, in consequence of their not obtaining from the British flag the protection which it ought to have afforded them, we are now bound to facilitate the prosecution of their voyage to Europe if they request us to do so. They will no doubt on their arrival at Halifax confer with the lieutenant-governor respecting their future proceedings.

It may perhaps be desirable after all that has occurred that whatever may be the place to which Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell and their companions may desire to proceed they should pursue their voyage in a Government vessel; for it would be most unfortunate if the whole question should be reopened by any attempt to capture a vessel with these gentlemen on board and bring her in for adjudication before an American prize court. I do not believe that the Government of the United States would countenance such a proceeding, but an officer of the U. S. Navy who had not been recently in communication with his superiors might form a misconception of their wishes and of his own duty and deem it right to capture a private vessel on the same grounds on which Captain Wilkes seized the four passengers on board the Trent.

WASHINGTON, December 30, 1861.

[Commander HEWETT,

Her Britannic Majesty's Ship Rinaldo.]

SIR: You are no doubt aware that the Government of the United States has declared that it will cheerfully liberate Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis, and has requested me to appoint a time and place for receiving those gentlemen. I have agreed with the Secretary of State of the United States that the four gentlemen shall be replaced under the protection of the British flag in the harbor of Provincetown, Cape Cod, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. I consider it to be of very great importance that every facility should be afforded by Her Majesty's officers for effecting this without delay.

I therefore deem it to be my duty to request you to proceed as soon as possible in Her Majesty's ship under your command to Provincetown Harbor and there take the four gentlemen on board. They will be brought from Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, to Provincetown in an American steam vessel. Should they not be already there when you arrive it will be proper that you wait for them. As soon as you have them on board it will be desirable that you proceed with them direct to Halifax. This will no doubt be in conformity with their own wishes.

You are further at liberty to assure them that they will find every disposition on our part to repair as far as is now possible any inconvenience or disadvantage which they have sustained in consequence of their removal from the protection of the British flag. We shall be willing to place them as nearly as possible in the position which they occupied when that removal took place, but we cannot do more than this. We shall be desirous to facilitate their passing from Halifax to any neutral port, but we cannot undertake to convey them to any part of the coast of the States which have seceded from the Republic. The whole of the coasts of those States is under blockade, and Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell and their companions were excluded from it by the blockade when they were under the British flag on board the Trent.

It is hardly necessary that I should remind you that these gentlemen have no official character. It will be right for you to receive them with all the courtesy and respect as private gentlemen of distinction, but it would be very improper to pay to them any of those honors which are paid to official persons. It is desirable that the transfer of them from the American steam vessel to Her Majesty's ship under your command shall be effected unostentatiously, and that when you have them on board you should go on to Halifax without the smallest delay.

I request you to inform me by telegraph as soon as possible after you receive this dispatch of the hour at which you intend to leave New York and of the hour at which you expect to arrive at Provincetown.

(Received January 15, 1862.)

[Earl RUSSELL, London.]

MY LORD: * * * I was myself perfectly willing to dispatch H. M. S. Rinaldo to Boston Harbor to receive Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell and their companions from Fort Warren. I told Mr. Seward that I desired to consult his wishes as far as possible; that I was as unwilling as he could be that the transfer of the four gentlemen should cause any popular excitement or be made the occasion for anything like a display of exultation on the part of Great Britain. The only points on which I desired to insist were that the transfer should be made by daylight and that the gentlemen should either be received on board a British ship of war in the United States or be conveyed to a British port in an American ship. Provincetown was suggested as the best place by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. It is I believe a small, quiet town. It is situated near Cape Cod and the harbor is a very good one. It is about forty miles from Boston. It is not on the direct route from Boston to Halifax but it is nearer to Halifax than Boston is. Time did not admit of the Rinaldo's reaching it before to-morrow at noon.

J. DIMICK,
Colonel First Artillery, Commanding Post.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 2, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt last evening of dispatches from 141 to 146, both inclusive.

Under the continued suspense as to the issue of the difficulty respecting the Trent I know not that there is much necessity for adverting to topics of minor importance. I shall therefore content myself with transmitting copies of the further correspondence* that has taken place between Lord Russell and myself on the subject of the Nashville. I have reason to believe that the supervision of the outfit of that vessel on the part of the Government has been faithful and thorough.

The temper of the people of Great Britain has been undergoing a sensible amelioration during the past week. Great efforts have been made to induce the Government to consent to a proposal of submitting the difference to arbitration in case it should be offered by the United States. The obstacle to it is, however, that almost every Government in Europe has already committed itself. If it were not for this so confident have ministers become in the correctness of their position that I think they would not object to that course could they gracefully retreat from their somewhat precipitate demands. There is growing distrust of the appropriateness of the mode adopted to obtain a remedy. The prevailing idea that they have heretofore submitted too often to indignities and that there is an absolute necessity to adopt summary measures in order to deter the United States from a repetition of them has somewhat faded under the growing conviction that at least in this case nothing of the kind had been intended. At present there is a lull in opinion which the news by the Africa has done much to bring about. Should the later news confirm the impression now received I am very much inclined to doubt whether a declaration of war would ensue even though the men should not be at once surrendered.

Yet should it come to this I cannot give much encouragement in regard to the state in which affairs will be left between the two countries for the future. That there is a party desiring war here can scarcely admit of a doubt. That the Confederate emissaries failing in their hope from this last difficulty will in their utter desperation do all in their power to give that party full activity upon other questions is equally certain. To counteract this policy requires great prudence as well as energy on both sides of the water. In this connection it may be held as one good result of an otherwise unfortunate incident that the friends of peace and of the restoration of order in America have been roused to a sense of the motives which impel this hostility. I am constantly in the receipt of letters and communications from people of all classes who express their earnest desire not to have their country enlisted even in the most indirect mode in a war which will sustain the slave-holding system in the Southern States. A conviction of the danger of this will keep them sensibly alive to the movement of parties interested in bringing about that end. But in this policy they must be aided by some corresponding adaptation of opinion among us.

I am in hopes that we may by co-operation be enabled to meet with more force the efforts that will undoubtedly be set in motion before long to procure a withdrawal of the blockade and perhaps a recognition of the insurgents. Should Parliament be assembled in a few days I shall have an opportunity to watch and to expose the operations that will follow. I say this always reserving the contingency wherein I may be required to vacate my position at this court, which at this moment I think less likely than I did.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

MY LORD: On Thursday last Count Brandenburg called upon me at the Foreign Office and read to me a dispatch of Count Bernstorff on the subject of the Trent affair.

The Prussian Government unequivocally condemn the conduct of Captain Wilkes, and express a hope that the President of the United States will comply with the proposals of Her Majesty's Government. I will send you by the next mail a copy of this dispatch.

At a later hour Baron Brunnov called upon me and read me an extract of a letter from Prince Gortchakoff equally positive in condemnation of Captain Wilkes and equally confident of the justice of our request for reparation.

LYONS.

U. S. LEGATION, The Hague, January 9, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * The telegraph of to-day announces the settlement of the Trent affair in the interest of peace. I can hardly express to you the feeling of relief afforded to Europe by this news.

It may seem to some a paradox but it is nevertheless true that the act of surrendering Mason and Slidell will vastly elevate and improve the position of the United States Government at every court in Europe. It paves the way for a genuine sympathy in its efforts to subdue the rebellion.

It has been only the friends of the United States abroad who for more than a month of gloomy forebodings have steadily and alone maintained that our Government had the strength and the virtue to treat a momentous crisis in the national life with wisdom and self-denial. Everywhere it has been believed and avowed by ruling classes that at such a crisis a headlong democracy was sure to drive the Government into the broad road to national ruin. That it should act upon the counsels of discretion in such a delicate and critical emergency is a surprise that will extort their involuntary respect and admiration.

Whether England is right or wrong in her late demands the universal conviction among wise men of all shades of political opinion so far as my experience goes has been that the only true course open to our Government under existing circumstances was to yield to them. It was and is believed that the decision of the question of their justice could be safely left to the future, and that whatever that decision might be under no circumstances could we be the loser.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

JAMES S. PIKE.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Brussels, January 9, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * A dispatch from the English Government to its representative here, Lord Howard De Walden, states that Messrs. Mason and Slidell have been given up.

Should this prove to be the case the effect will be highly favorable to us in continental Europe. The eagerness with which the different powers have hastened to put us in the wrong and England in the right—the desire evinced that we should not defend English law, but yield—shows if not a lively interest in the preservation of the Union as a counterpoise at least a lively jealousy at the increase of British influence, the augmentation of whose power they wish to thwart.

I observe that in all their notes they make a point of avoiding an expression of opinion on the legal question because they know the seizure was in conformity with the principle of law as declared and practiced by Great Britain and submitted to by all others, though the principle has always been opposed or reluctantly yielded by the continental powers and ourselves.

They now unanimously reassert the true doctrine, which as said before puts England in the right and us in the wrong in this case, and I cannot doubt that the result will be valuable as forcing England to abandon definitely her old position touching belligerent rights; and the evidence of jealousy and feeling of other powers as ready to profit of her exigencies as she is to take advantage of ours is also not without value.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
H. S. SANFORD.

WASHINGTON, January 10, 1862.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit to Congress a translation of an instruction to the minister of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria accredited to this Government, and a copy of a note to that minister from the Secretary of State relative to the questions involved in the taking from the British steamer Trent of certain citizens of the United States by order of Captain Wilkes, of the U. S. Navy. This correspondence may be considered as a sequel to that previously communicated to Congress relating to the same subject.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Inclosure No. 1.—Translation.]

VIENNA, December 18, 1861.

Chevalier DE HULSEMANN, Washington.

SIR: The difference which has supervened between the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain in consequence of the arrest of Messrs. Mason and Slidell—made by the captain of the American ship of war San Jacinto on board of the English mail packet Trent—has not failed to fix the most serious attention of the Imperial cabinet.

The more importance we attach to the maintenance of friendly relations between the United States and England the more must we regret an incident which has come to add so grave a complication to a situation already bristling with so many difficulties.

Without having the intention to enter here upon an examination into the question of right we nevertheless cannot but acknowledge that according to the notions of international law adopted by all the powers and which the American Government itself has often taken as the rule of its conduct England could not in anywise in the present case refrain from reclamation against the affront given to her flag and from asking proper reparation for it.

It seems to us moreover that the requests reduced to form in this respect by the cabinet of Saint James have in them nothing offensive to the Cabinet of Washington, and that it will be able to do an act of equity and moderation without the least sacrifice of its dignity.

In taking counsel from the rules which guide international relations as well as from considerations of enlightened policy rather than from manifestations produced by an overexcitement of national feeling the Government of the United States we are gratified to hope will bring into its appreciation of the case all the calmness which its importance demands, and will deem proper to take a position which whilst preserving from rupture the relations between two great powers to which Austria is equally bound in friendship will be such as to prevent the grave disturbances which the eventuality of a war could not fail to bring not only upon each one of the contending parties but upon the affairs of the world generally.

You will please, sir, to bring the preceding reflections to Mr. Seward's notice and make report to us of the manner in which the minister shall receive your communication.

Accept, sir, the assurances of my distinguished consideration.
RECHBERG.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 9, 1862.

Chevalier HULSEMANN, &c.

SIR: I have submitted to the President the note you left with me which was addressed to you on the 18th of December last by Count Rechberg touching the affair of the capture and detention of the British contract steamer Trent by Captain Wilkes, of the San Jacinto.

I send you a copy of the correspondence which has passed on that exciting subject between this Government and the Governments of Great Britain and France, and I have to request that you will transmit these papers to Count Rechberg.

The Imperial Royal Government will learn from them two important facts, namely, first, that the United States are not only incapable for a moment of seeking to disturb the peace of the world but are deliberately just and friendly in their intercourse with all foreign nations; and secondly, that they will not be unfaithful to their traditions and policy as an advocate of the broadest liberality in the application of the principles of international law to the conduct of maritime warfare.

The United States thus faithful to their sentiments and while at the same time careful of their political constitution will sincerely rejoice if the occasion which has given rise to this correspondence shall be improved so as to obtain a revision of the law of nations which will render more definite and certain the rights and obligations of States in time of war.

I shall esteem it a favor, sir, if you will charge yourself with the care of expressing these sentiments to your Government, and will at the same time assure Count Rechberg that the President appreciates very highly the frankness and cordiality which the Government of Austria has practiced on an occasion of such great interest to the welfare of the United States.

I avail myself of the circumstance to offer to you, sir, renewed assurances of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 10, 1862.

J. LOTHROP MOTLEY, Esq., &c., Vienna.

SIR: Your dispatch of November,* no day named, has been received. The account you give of your reception by Count Rechberg and also of your audience with the Emperor is exceedingly gratifying. The observations made by you on those occasions were in the main very just and apposite and we cannot doubt that they will produce good effects. Events crowd each other and the question raised in a dispatch gives place to a more urgent if not more grave one before the reply can be received.

I have directed a copy of the general diplomatic correspondence of a year, a copy of the correspondence on the Trent affair, and finally a copy of the correspondence between Count Rechberg, Mr. Hulsemann and myself relating to the same subject to be transmitted to you. These papers will give you all that is understood here of our relations with foreign powers at the present moment, and will enable you perhaps to anticipate the future as well as we can.

* Omitted, containing nothing relative to this case.

Our arms continue to be steadily successful, and when we shall have completed our financial relations I trust that the cause of the Union will become as hopeful as it is just.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 10, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Though not yet favored with any information from the Department respecting the course of the proceedings between the two Governments in regard to the case of the Trent at Washington I am bound to believe from what I see in the newspapers that the difference has been settled by the release of the captives.

It is with great satisfaction that I gather from the abstract of the correspondence which has been communicated by telegraph that the Government has adhered to the principle for which it has so long contended and in the recognition of which the whole civilized world will now concur. Considering the remarkable unanimity which has been shown in the judgment of the merits of this case throughout Europe the step that has been taken will meet with very general approbation. The satisfaction expressed in this city everywhere, excepting among the small society of the Confederate emissaries and the party which habitually looks to war as an attractive pastime, stands in remarkable contrast with the feelings which animated almost everybody only six weeks ago. Not many, however, have yet opened their eyes to the conviction of the fact that the apparent victory of Great Britain involves in reality the necessary surrender of one of her most odious assumptions of power over the ocean. In this light it is not difficult to comprehend the policy of France which sacrifices no consistency whilst it more surely places a new ligature around the maritime supremacy of its great rival.

A consequence of this result is probably a continuance of the mission with which the Government has honored me for some time longer. But the questions immediately arise how long and under what promise of future usefulness? In order to answer these it is necessary to take a brief survey of the ground we occupy. Parliament is summoned to assemble for the dispatch of business on the 6th of February. I have reason to believe that arrangements predicated upon a particular contingency had been made to bring on an early discussion of the American difficulty with a view to press a direct interference with the blockade and a recognition of the Confederate States. I regret to learn that the first of these measures has found favor in some quarters from which I had hoped better things. The only question to consider is whether the settlement of the case of the Trent will have much effect in altering the presentation of the programme or in preventing its adoption.

It is too early to determine what may be the degree of the reaction in popular opinion but there is no reason to doubt it will be considerable. Besides which the position of the ministry has been so much fortified by its success as to place its continuance at least for another year almost beyond doubt. It will therefore be in a situation to act with firmness and independence should it be inclined to resist any hasty movements. Whether that inclination does or does not exist is the problem. If I were to judge from the temper shown in certain presses believed to be prompted by the prime minister I should augur a very unfavorable result. On the other hand I think I had a right to infer from the language of Lord Russell in our very latest conference that there was no disposition to embarrass us so long as there was a reasonable prospect of our success. Besides this so marked has been the late development of a disinclination to a war with the United States among the quiet and religious citizens of the middle classes, and particularly when its practical effect would be the establishment of a slave-holding oligarchy with which they have no sympathy whatever, that any policy entered into with an apparent desire to revive that measure for the benefit of the latter would scarcely meet with a second response like the last. From all these considerations I am inclined to conclude that without the occurrence of any new disturbing matter the probabilities are rather in favor of the continuance of diplomatic relations for some time to come.

Yet so doubtful do I regard it that I cannot help wishing for the occurrence of some decisive event in the war which would completely turn the current of opinion in our favor. It is not for me to interfere in any manner with the course of the operations in the field. I am well aware of the difficulties in the way of action and entertain too lively a recollection of the consequences of the disaster at Bull Run to favor precipitation anywhere. At the same time I cannot fail to perceive the force of the argument constantly pressed here in a community which measures military results by the sole standard of success of the apparent inability to command it. I feel that one clear victory at home might perhaps save us a foreign war, and so feeling it can scarcely be wondered at if I look forward to it with more than ordinary anxiety. An advance into the rebellious States would be as productive of sensible results in Parliament here as on the spot itself, whilst a decided triumph would put a more effective stop to Confederate operations in England than all the labors of orators and statesmen and philosophers of both countries combined.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Stockholm, January 10, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that we have received by telegram intelligence of the peaceable settlement of our difficulty with England. The news has been received with great satisfaction. I have been congratulated by several legations. The press of Sweden is free; the American side of the question was taken by one of the most influential papers and discussed with great vigor and ability. * * *

I remain, your obedient servant,

J. S. HALDEMAN.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] January 10, 1862.[Lord LYONS, Washington.]

MY LORD: In my dispatch to you of the 30th of November after informing you of the circumstances which had occurred in relation to the capture of the four persons taken from on board the Trent I stated to you that it thus appeared that certain individuals had been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel—the ship of a neutral power—while such vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage; an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

I concluded by directing you in case the reparation which Her Majesty's Government expected to receive should not be offered by Mr. Seward to propose to that minister to make such redress as alone would satisfy the British nation, namely, first, the liberation of the four gentlemen taken from on board the Trent and their delivery to your lordship in order that they might again be placed under British protection; and secondly, a suitable apology for the aggression which had been committed.

I received yesterday your dispatch of the 27th ultimo inclosing a note to you from Mr. Seward which is in substance the answer to my dispatch of the 30th of November. Proceeding at once to the main points in discussion between us Her Majesty's Government have carefully examined how far Mr. Seward's note and the conduct it announces complies substantially with the two proposals I have recited. With regard to the first, viz, the liberation of the prisoners with a view to their being again placed under British protection I find that the note concludes by stating that the prisoners will be cheerfully liberated, and by calling upon your lordship to indicate a time and place for receiving them. No condition of any kind is coupled with the liberation of the prisoners.

With regard to the suitable apology which the British Government had a right to expect I find that the Government of the United States distinctly and unequivocally declares that no directions had been given to Captain Wilkes or to any other naval officer to arrest the four persons named or any of them on the Trent or on any other British vessel, or on any other neutral vessel at the place where it occurred or elsewhere.

I find further that the Secretary of State expressly forbears to justify the particular act of which Her Majesty's Government complained. If the United States Government had alleged that although Captain Wilkes had no previous instruction for that purpose he was right in capturing the persons of the four prisoners and in removing them from the Trent on board his own vessel to be afterward carried into a port of the United States, the Government which had thus sanctioned the proceeding of Captain Wilkes would have become responsible for the original violence and insult of the act.

But Mr. Seward contents himself with stating that what has happened has been simply an inadvertence, consisting in a departure by a naval officer free from any wrongful motive from a rule uncertainly established and probably by the several parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. The Secretary of State goes on to affirm that for this error the British Government has a right to expect the same reparation which the United States as an independent State should expect from Great Britain or from any other friendly nation in a similar case.

Her Majesty's Government having carefully taken into their consideration the liberation of the prisoners, the delivery of them into your hands and the explanations to which I have just referred have arrived at the conclusion that they constitute the reparation which Her Majesty and the British nation had a right to expect. It gives Her Majesty's Government great satisfaction to be enabled to arrive at a conclusion favorable to the maintenance of the most friendly relations between the two nations.

I need not discuss the modifications in my statement of facts which Mr. Seward says he has derived from the reports of officers of his Government. I cannot conclude however without adverting shortly to the discussions which Mr. Seward has raised upon points not prominently brought into question in my dispatch of the 30th of November. I there objected on the part of Her Majesty's Government to that which Captain Wilkes had done. Mr. Seward in his answer points out what he conceives Captain Wilkes might have done without violating the law of nations.

It is not necessary that I should here discuss in detail the five questions ably argued by the Secretary of State; but it is necessary that I should say that Her Majesty's Government differ from Mr. Seward in some of the conclusions at which he has arrived, and it may lead to a better understanding between the two nations on several points of international law which may during the present contest or at some future time be brought into question that I should state to you for communication to the Secretary of State wherein those differences consist. I hope to do so in a few days.

In the meantime it will be desirable that the commanders of the U. S. cruisers should be instructed not to repeat acts for which the British Government will have to ask redress and which the United States Government cannot undertake to justify.

You will read and give a copy of this dispatch to the Secretary of State.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] January 10, 1862.

[Lord NAPIER.]

MY LORD: * * * Her Majesty's Government have every reason to be satisfied with the opinions and the acts of the European powers in regard to the matter of the Trent. The Emperor of the French without delay instructed his minister at Washington to support by argument and by counsel the proposals for reparation made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government at Washington. The Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia as soon as they were acquainted with the facts threw the moral weight of their judgment into the scale of Great Britain. While Her Majesty's Government have been much gratified by these spontaneous marks of adherence and approval they have no reason to be dissatisfied with the conduct of Russia. Baron Brunnow wrote at once from London to his colleague at Washington condemning in strong terms the conduct of the commander of the San Jacinto and advising due reparation to Her Majesty's Government by the President of the United States. Prince Gortchakoff wrote also to Washington and to London private letters entirely approving the step taken by Baron Brunnow. Other powers have expressed similar sentiments. * * *

I have, &c.,

RUSSELL.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] January 11, 1862.[Lord LYONS, Washington.]

MY LORD: In transmitting to your lordship my preceding dispatch of yesterday's date I have to state that I read a copy of it this day to Mr. Adams. When I had done Mr. Adams said that he considered it as a dispatch which would be very satisfactory to his Government.

I said that the paragraph in the dispatch was meant as a reference to the case of the Eugenia Smith which seemed to be as similar as possible to that of the Trent. I concluded that in that case the prisoners would be at once liberated, a conclusion in which Mr. Adams seemed to agree, but he declared that he knew nothing of the case except from the newspapers.

I spoke to him of the report that a number of Federal cruisers were coming to the British Channel and I expressed a hope that interruption of British trade would as far as possible be avoided. Mr. Adams explained that according to rumor a complete squadron of Confederate vessels were about to cruise in the British Channel. The Nashville, the Sumter and the Pacific were to form a part of this squadron. He had been informed that both at Liverpool and at Havre many merchant vessels of the United States were detained—afraid to put to sea in the face of the expected squadron. The object of his Government was therefore to protect their own trade and not to harass ours. I said I expected that such would be his answer.

I alluded to the case of the men landed in Southampton and found in the docks being part of the crew of the Tuscarora. He told me that he had warned the captain of the Tuscarora with regard to any use of force on the land of a neutral. I then informed him that the captain of the Tuscarora had received notice in respect to the rule that a belligerent leaving a neutral port should not be pursued by the belligerent vessel of the opposite power till after the expiration of twenty-four hours. (I inclose a correspondence with the Board of Admiralty and Mr. Adams on this subject.*)

I then stated that I thought it might be useful to both Governments if several points in regard to neutrality raised by Mr. Seward's dispatch were to be calmly discussed between us. Some passages in Mr. Seward's dispatch might lead to the inference that almost every packet passing between Dover and Calais might be liable to be taken and carried into New York on the pretext that it carried some emissary of the secessionists. But such I was convinced was not the meaning of Mr. Seward.

I sincerely congratulated him on the termination of this affair, and said that if Mr. Hume was right in saying that the reparation of injustice is the second honor of a nation that honor undoubtedly belonged to the Government of the United States.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] January 11, 1862.[Lord LYONS, Washington.]

MY LORD: Your conduct in this important matter of the Trent is entirely approved by Her Majesty. The discretion and the good temper you have shown have contributed greatly to the success of our representations.

* Omitted as irrelevant.

In order to give your lordship by a public document a proof that you have acted strictly according to the instructions you have received I inclose an extract annexed to this dispatch* of a private letter I addressed to you on the 1st of December last.

I am, &c.,

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Turin, January 13, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: * * * The news of the settlement of the difficulty between the United States and England on the affair of the Trent has been received in Italy with lively satisfaction, and although on the question of the legal right the opinion of lawyers and statesmen was nearly unanimous against the seizure yet I believe that both here and elsewhere in Europe the conduct of the American Government as now understood is thought to have been not only more dignified but at least not less honorable than that of England. The violent and mendacious language of the British press now receives the condemnation it deserves, and I have no doubt that the cause of the Union will be essentially advanced in European estimation by an event which the President and his Cabinet have with such wisdom and skill converted from an apparently unlucky accident into an instrument of good.

The result will serve I think to do something toward dispelling an error almost universal among European statesmen and which I have seldom passed a day on this side of the Atlantic without having occasion to combat—the assumption namely that the American Union is less a Republic than an unbridled democracy, of which the Federal Government is but a blind instrument. The illumination in some of the great cities on the receipt of the intelligence of the capture of the commissioners, the compliments to Captain Wilkes, the various spirited resolutions proposed in the House of Representatives, were cited as evidences of a popular feeling which an Executive elected by the people would be powerless to resist, and nothing short of the actual result of the affair could have convinced Europe that in this as in most other important crises the Government is left free to initiate the national policy.

* * * * *

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

GEORGE P. MARSH.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Brussels, January 14, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The news of the settlement of the Trent affair has given universal satisfaction here. As influencing public opinion it has caused a very considerable reaction in our favor which I doubt not will gather strength.

The surrender by England when they are applied to herself of her own cherished principles of international law—principles which she has ever enforced and practiced upon unwilling Europe—is considered a great gain. I hope she will not prove apostate to her new faith; and the eagerness and unanimity with which the great powers have, while avoiding discussion of an act in conformity with her established usages, urged us to yield in favor of neutral rights and thus secure Great Britain in her new position are significant in my view of it of anything rather than sympathy for England or hostility to ourselves.

* See Russell to Lyons, "Extract from a private letter," p. 1113.

England can hardly congratulate herself upon this intervention, which indicates not alone a desire to secure a recognition of the more liberal extension of neutral rights, but a jealousy of an attempt to cripple a power recognized as a necessary counterpoise in the world's affairs. The eagerness of the Government which ignoring its own precepts and belying its own practices seeks a pretext to fasten a war and disaster upon us is now exposed, and it is to be hoped will meet fitting retribution at home and abroad.

The sentiment is universal here that she will now failing in this pretext seek one upon the question of the inefficiency of our blockade. I look to Parliament, public opinion and the success which I confidently expect we shall in the next thirty days have tidings of to squelch out this further attempt of a selfish and jealous governing class to destroy our power and check our development. The cry now sought to be raised about the vandalism of shutting up a port with hulks instead of bombarding and destroying it and its inhabitants is in keeping with the whole transaction.

My opinion is our cause is at this day stronger in Europe than at any time before since the Bull Run affair.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

H. S. SANFORD.

U. S. LEGATION, The Hague, January 15, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose you a few extracts from the French newspapers from which you may gather the general drift of public discussion on the Continent in relation to the settlement of the Trent affair.

The Débats discusses at some length the probable consequence of the settlement of the American difference and arrives at the conclusion that England has lost rather than gained by the Trent incident:

Messrs. Mason and Slidell will be given up. That is the naked fact which is all to the advantage of the English. But nevertheless what consequences will there not be turning against them? We will not discuss the incident of the Trent in itself since it is now settled; but it constitutes as we said from the first day a very debatable case, and we are not astonished that when discussed at a meeting of lawyers the right of belligerents found as many advocates as that of neutrals. In fact it is the interpretation in favor of neutrals which thanks to England has gained the day. The first naval power in the world—that which ruling without dispute on the seas will always have the most frequent opportunities of profiting by the abuses of the right of search and which for that reason has almost always the most warmly opposed the privileges of neutrals—has just placed an important restriction on the maritime prerogatives of belligerents. We are therefore authorized in saying that it is more particularly her own power and her facilities of action which England by an energetic effort has forever limited. If she has done it knowingly we admire her generosity. She could not have sacrificed wantonly a finer opportunity for creating a decisive precedent in favor of her oldest and most cherished pretensions. The first advantage which England will reap from the extradition of Messrs. Mason and Slidell is a striking self-condemnation.

The Temps expresses itself in these terms:

Honor to the Government of the United States as well as to public opinion in America! To admit the necessities of a situation and to conform to it with a manly resignation is a proof of wisdom which is not yet very common among nations and governments. The American Government in releasing the prisoners has doubtless done nothing more than apply the doctrines which it has constantly professed, and at the same time it wards off a great danger. To do so has not the less required great strength of mind, great moderation and great command over itself. We have faith in that strength, in that moderation and in that self-command. If moreover President Lincoln wishes to crown his work and restore to the incident of the Trent its true and general signification he has only to solemnly consider the remonstrances of England as an abandonment of the old maritime policy of England. The satisfaction of the moment is for England; the real triumph is in every way for the United States and for the cause of the freedom of the seas. This precedent is destined to be deeply engraved in the memory of nations. It has been said that England and the English Government hold in reserve other motives and other pretexts for war. That may be possible, but she can now be defied to make use of them as public opinion would forbid it. Already divided before the victory which the Cabinet of Washington has just gained over itself public feeling will become unanimous. If we are not mistaken a great change in favor of the United States is about to take place, not only in England but in every country. This incident was perhaps necessary to make the Old World feel by what bonds the United States were connected with it. The South had considered the capture of its plenipotentiaries as equivalent to a victory; it will not be mistaken in regarding their release as an omen of its defeat.

From The Débats:

The outburst of joy which has taken place in London on the receipt of the news and the testimony of which is brought us by the English journals shows to what a degree England dreaded war after having adopted—perhaps too precipitately—the very system of conduct calculated to render it inevitable. England not only uses the language of satisfied national pride but breathes freely like a man who finds a heavy weight removed from his breast. The Post affects a little coldness and diplomatic haughtiness. "We hope," it says, "that this tardy reparation has been accompanied by the apologies demanded;" but The Times, that echo of public opinion, treats the question of excuses as one of little value, and being content to see the nightmare of a maritime war dispelled is disposed to pass over them.

The Opinion Nationale employs the following language:

The affair is now settled and we may henceforth sleep in peace. John Bull and Brother Jonathan are at last reconciled, and we might perhaps give way to enthusiasm on the subject if the insidious question, Is the reconciliation sincere? did not suddenly present itself to our mind. We should hesitate to answer in the affirmative. The Federal Cabinet has made a concession for which it must have felt great repugnance, but it saw all the danger of plunging into a war with England under present circumstances. It has therefore swallowed the affront, but feels it too keenly to pardon England for inflicting it. The fire smolders; some day or other we shall see the flames burst forth. But is England which has obtained so great a triumph for her self-love satisfied with it after all? The fact is open to doubt. The British cabinet is suspected not without some plausible grounds of wishing to force a war upon the United States, and the language of the principal English journals would almost induce us to suppose that the liberation of Messrs. Mason and Slidell has in reality caused disappointment rather than pleasure.

The following is from The Siecle:

The dispatches which announce the favorable solution of the conflict between England and the United States have produced general satisfaction in Paris. The prospect of war which would necessarily lead to the most serious complications would fill with mourning all those who like us would wish to see all nations proceed regularly and unshackled toward liberty and prosperity. In accepting the consequences of the act of Captain Wilkes the Cabinet of Washington would have uselessly compromised the future of the two hemispheres and the cause of the American Union. To yield under such circumstances is on its part a proof of strength rather than of weakness. It renders homage to the principles which it has itself defended for so many years and yields to the wishes expressed so unanimously by the European Governments.

All had adopted the arguments so clearly developed by M. Thouvenel; all condemned the conduct of the commandant of the San Jacinto as contrary to the law of nations; but what is remarkable is that no power in presenting considerations on an isolated fact called in question the good faith, the intelligence and the patriotism of the Government of the American Republic. It has rallied round its sympathies which were about departing; and Messrs. Mason and Slidell, set at liberty by its orders, may without danger to it resume their voyage to Europe.

The Constitutionnel:

The restitution of Messrs. Mason and Slidell is a victory of right, moderation and good sense. The Débats is afflicted at it and does not believe in the right. In vain has M. Thouvenel, Count de Rechberg and Count de Bernstorff recognized in the capture of the Southern envoys a violation of international law; our contemporary is not of their opinion.

For the moment we have a party on our side strong and influential. But friendly sentiments toward [us], as you are well aware, will not however withstand any great adverse pressure under the circumstances of our existing relations to foreign countries. We have in the present instance done well and are approved. So far so good. But the currents may change to-morrow with or without good reason. The only things we can really rely on are our principles and our power. Our daily acts must be necessarily of a quite secondary importance except as they illustrate one or the other of these forces.

It is only as the consistent defender of the rights of man that we can have any efficient standing at this juncture in Europe. The late event by giving us a party here reopened the question of African slavery in both British and foreign circles. The beginning of this discussion is already manifest. Therein we are having an advantage.

I had the honor to report to you my opinion long ago that the leading Governments would give us a fair allowance of time to show what we could do with the rebellion before interfering in any way whatever. In endeavoring to conjecture what that limit would be I have felt that it would be coincident with the period of the near expiration of the cotton supply. This exhaustion I have supposed and so expressed myself to you would be postponed to about September next, when it will be likely to manifest itself in force.

My inference has been and now is (corroborated by constantly transpiring circumstances) that unless we can get possession of the leading cotton ports by midsummer that we shall have the great maritime and manufacturing powers taking measures to carry their merchantmen into those ports. And if I am not mistaken in my judgment it will be France that will lead in that movement.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

JAMES S. PIKE.

WASHINGTON, January 17, 1862.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit to Congress a translation of an instruction to the minister of His Majesty the King of Prussia accredited to this Government, and a copy of a note to that minister from the Secretary of State relating to the capture and detention of certain citizens of the United States, passengers on board the British steamer Trent, by order of Captain Wilkes, of the U. S. Navy.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

BERLIN, December 25, 1861.

Baron VON GEROLT, &c. [Washington.]

MONSIEUR LE BARON: The warlike measures which President Lincoln has taken at sea against the States of the South which separated themselves from the Union could not fail from their beginning to impress the Royal Government with apprehension that they might give occasion to some injury to the legitimate interests of neutral States.

This apprehension has unfortunately been realized by the subsequent forcible arrest and abduction of Messrs. Mason and Slidell from on board the neutral mail packet Trent by the commander of the North American ship of war San Jacinto.

This occurrence has as you will readily conclude aroused the greatest attention in England as well as throughout Europe, and caused great sensations not only in cabinets but also in public opinion. Although by that act beyond all England has been affected, still at the same time one of the most essential and generally recognized rights of the neutral flag is placed in question by it.

I may forbear entering into discussion of the principle of right under consideration. In Europe public opinion has spoken out with extraordinary unanimity and in the most decided manner in behalf of the aggrieved party. We have ourselves hesitated until now to express to you our views upon the occurrence because through want of exact information we fostered a doubt as to whether the captain of the San Jacinto in his procedure was or was not acting under instructions communicated to him by his Government. We still at this hour incline to admit the latter supposition. Should, however, the first prove to be the correct version of the affair we should find ourselves under the necessity of considering the occurrence of a more serious significance, and to our very great regret regard it not as an isolated fact but much more as a public menace to all existing neutral rights.

The English demands which were addressed to the Cabinet of Washington and upon the acceptance of which the maintenance of peace depends are not exactly known to us, but so far as we are informed we are convinced that no conditions have been made by England by which the dignity of President Lincoln could have reasonably been hurt.

His Majesty the King animated by the most sincere wishes for the welfare of the United States of America has ordered me to advocate energetically with President Lincoln the cause of peace through your mediation, and we would deem ourselves happy if by such means we could contribute to a peaceful solution of a conflict out of which the greatest dangers may spring. It is possible that by this time the President may have decided on and made public his determination. But whatever be its nature, at all events the Royal Government in view of the very intimate relations of genuine friendship which have existed between Prussia and the United States from their foundation desire to minister to a peaceful issue and to place before the Cabinet of Washington with the most unreserved frankness their opinion of the pending affair as well as their inmost wishes respecting it.

I request you to read the preceding dispatch without delay to the Secretary of State and at his request furnish him with a copy of it. In respect to the discharge of this commission I look forward to your report on the subject.

Accept, Monsieur le Baron, the renewed assurances of my most distinguished esteem.

BERNSTORFF.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 14, 1862.

Baron VON GEROLT, &c.

SIR: I have now the honor of explaining to you the sentiments of the President touching the matter brought to his notice by an instruction addressed to you by Count Bernstorff under the date of December 25, which paper you read to me at our last interview and of which you have furnished me a copy.

First, I perform a pleasant duty in assuring you that this Government fully and unreservedly accepts the communication thus made by Count Bernstorff as an earnest of the sincere and cordial friendship of His Majesty the King of Prussia toward the United States, and the President is equally satisfied that in making it His Majesty is animated also by a benevolent and noble desire for the preservation of peace among the nations. Counsel given with such motives will never be undervalued by the United States.

Accepting the paper in this spirit it is my duty to submit to you for the information of His Majesty a full copy of the correspondence which has taken place between the British Government and the Government of the United States upon the subject now discussed by Count Bernstorff, namely the capture and detention of certain citizens of this country on board the British mail steamer Trent.

I trust, sir, that these papers will completely satisfy the Government of Prussia that if the general peace of the world is to be broken the fault will not lie in anything that the United States have done to produce such a disaster, or in their omission to do everything which a just and generous power could do to prevent it.

It is very certain, sir, that the rights of belligerents in war generally recognized in international law are as yet very imperfectly defined, while there is scarcely any accord among States concerning the proper peaceful remedies necessary for the redress of injuries committed by or against neutral powers.

The United States at a very early day addressed themselves to the then unappreciated task of securing the incorporation of just, equal and humane principles into the code of maritime war. They have energetically persisted in this great enterprise through all changing events equally when acting as a neutral and when themselves engaged as a belligerent.

Will you allow me the liberty of suggesting for the consideration of your Government the expediency of improving the occasion which has justly excited so many apprehensions to recommend the general policy of this country thus described to the earnest consideration of the European States? It is only in a spirit of the utmost respect and deference that I take leave to remark that the periods when the United States will have occasion to act the part of a belligerent will probably be few and brief; while judging from past experience we cannot yet hope for so constant a preservation of peace among all the nations of the eastern continent.

Believe me, sir, that in so emphatically submitting this great subject to the consideration of Prussia I am moved by a profound conviction that the Government of that State is eminently distinguished by a generous and just ambition to meliorate the condition of mankind.

I pray you, sir, to accept renewed assurances of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 17, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have now received copies of all the papers connected with the affair of the Trent.

The result is in the highest degree satisfactory. I need not add my testimony to the general tribute of admiration of the skillful manner in which the various difficulties and complications attending this unfortunate business have been met or avoided. Thus far in spite of all efforts sedulously made to the contrary the effect on the public opinion has been favorable. The publication of the foreign correspondence during the past season as well as of the latest dispatches has materially corrected the old notion of determined hostility on your part to Great Britain which has been used so mischievously for months past. On the whole I think I may say with confidence that matters look better.

Last Saturday I called at the request of Lord Russell at the foreign office, when his lordship read to me the dispatch which he was then on the point of sending off to Lord Lyons. We thereupon exchanged congratulations on the complete restoration of friendly relations between the two countries. Since that time not only the correspondence already published in America has been printed by authority in the London Gazette, but the later papers written on this side including the very last being that which was read to me.

You will doubtless notice with some curiosity the earlier one, being Lord Russell's note* of the substance of the conversation held with me on the 19th ultimo at the time I read to him your confidential dispatch to me of the 30th of November.† The circumstances attending that affair have given rise to so much speculation both here and on the continent, and have led to such sharp controversy in the London newspapers that it may be advisable that the Government should understand them correctly.

Considering the paper as confidential of course I took good care that no knowledge of its substance or of the substance of the conference should be extended beyond the limits of this legation. Yet the fact is certain that on the strength of an impression of the occurrence of some such event the funds rose 1 per cent. on the very next day. So general was the idea that the Morning Post, a paper considered here and not without reason as deriving information from high sources, thought proper to notice the rumor on the 21st of December and deliberately to affirm that though a dispatch had indeed been communicated yet that it had reference to other unimportant matters and in no way related to the difficulty about the Trent. Some days later, however, in a summary of the events relating to that case published in the Observer, a weekly paper published on Sunday morning, supposed also to be now and then supplied with authentic information, I noticed at the conclusion a tolerably correct version of the substance of that dispatch. After the appearance of that I had no hesitation in disclosing to persons with whom I conversed my knowledge of its correctness.

It was then with no little surprise that they perceived last week when intelligence was received from America of the existence of such a paper a formal denial in the Post that any such paper had ever been communicated to the British Government. No longer able to deny the existence of it the next step was to affirm that I must have suppressed it. And not satisfied with that the same press went on to supply a motive for doing so in the fact that certain American parties had about the same time appeared in the market buying up stock, which was the cause of the rise in the funds already alluded to. Of course the insinuation was that I was engaged in a heavy stock-jobbing operation for my own benefit and that of my friends. The motive for this concoction of a series of falsehoods which were inevitably to be exposed in a very short space of time seemed difficult to divine. The explanation came almost on the heels of the charge. Lord Russell's note to Lord Lyons of the 19th of December gave his version of the conversation held on that day. The case was clear to all eyes. But to this day the Post has made no retraction of its statement, has not assigned the smallest justification for making them, neither has it disclaimed the authority upon which they are imputed to have been made.

* See Russell to Lyons, December 19, p. 1133.

† See Seward to Adams, November 30, p. 1108.

So great has been the effect of these disclosures in inspiring a belief that there was an intention somewhere to bring on a war that it is not impossible it may be made the basis of some proceedings at the approaching session of Parliament. You will doubtless also perceive that Lord Russell's note of our conversation on the 19th differs in some particulars from that which I had the honor to submit to you in my dispatch of the 20th of December, No. 93. The reason for this is to be traced to the distinction which his lordship voluntarily drew between my official and unofficial character at the outset. I understood him as intending to answer my two questions only in my private capacity as a person desirous of making my own arrangements in certain contingencies. For that reason I did not consider the part of the conversation relating to them as needing to be reported.

The other portion of his note touching the substance of your dispatch substantially agrees with mine. The casual opinions expressed about the policy of the respective countries were not regarded by me as part of the official language though I have not the least objection to their publication. Whilst his lordship was about it he might as well have inserted his reply to my reference to the part taken by the Government of Great Britain in the negotiation of 1804-9, which was in substance that there were many things said and done by them fifty or sixty years ago which he might not undertake to enter into a defense of now—all which was said pleasantly on both sides without an idea that the official conference was not closed. Yet so difficult is it to retain in the memory a distinct line between formal and casual conversation that I have no disposition in any way to call in question his report which so far as it goes is undeniably more accurate than my own.

What I have here written about it is to account to you for what might otherwise appear an omission of duty on my part.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

London, January 17, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * I have reason to believe that the removal of the casus belli in the Trent affair has proved a most serious obstacle in the way of all the calculations made by the party disposed to sow dissension between the two countries.

The expectations that have been raised of a pressure from the manufacturing classes to break the blockade in order to obtain cotton are likewise declining. The stock is yet quite large, and taken in conjunction with what is known to be coming it is believed to be sufficient to keep the mills going at the present rate for six months longer. The large manufacturers have become pretty well reconciled to the reduction of their product, from a conviction that the business had already been overdone and must have ceased to yield any returns had it been continued longer on the former scale.

Such being the ruined condition of the old programme it has been found necessary to direct attention to the preparation of something new. The chief support of the latest schemes is to be traced to the supposed policy of the Emperor of the French. It is believed here that he has already made overtures to the British Government to enter a protest against the blockade as in manner and substance too cruelly effective in some respects and very ineffective in others. It is also affirmed that he begins to consider it time to agitate the subject of recognition of the Confederate States. I cannot say that the evidence that has been furnished to me on these points is entirely satisfactory, but it is sufficiently so to make it my duty to mention it. Doubtless your sources of information in Paris will give you more precise knowledge of the truth than I can do here.

My main purpose in alluding to it is to call your attention to a singular development made of the policy adopted by the Confederate emissaries here with a view to fortify the movement of their allies in this country. The substance of it has been disclosed by a publication in the Edinburg Scotsman, a well-conducted paper whose sources of information I have heretofore found to be good. I take from its issue on Saturday last, the 11th of January, the following extract:

There exists in London an active and growing party including many members of Parliament having for its object an immediate recognition of the Southern Confederacy on certain understood terms. This party is in communication with the quasi representatives of the South in London and gives out that it sees its way to a desirable arrangement. Our information is that the South acting through its London agents is at least willing to have it understood that in consideration of immediate recognition and the disregard of the paper blockade it would engage for these three things: A treaty of free trade, the prohibition of all import of slaves, and the freedom of all blacks born hereafter. It will easily be seen that if any such terms were offered (but we hesitate to believe the last of them) a pressure in favor of the South will come upon the British Government from more than one formidable section of our public.

I have reason for believing that some such project as this has been actually entertained by the Confederate emissaries. The pressure of the popular feeling against slavery is so great here that their friends feel it impossible to hope to stem it without some such plea in extenuation as can be made out of an offer to do something for ultimate emancipation.

Of course no man acquainted with the true state of things in America can believe for an instant the existence of one particle of good faith in any professions of this kind that may be countenanced by the rebel emissaries here. But I have thought it might not be without its use to recommend that the fact of their sanction of such an agitation should be made known pretty generally in the United States especially among the large class of the friends of the Union in the border States.

If the issue of this contest is to be emancipation with the aid of Great Britain surely the object for which the rebellion against our Government was initiated—the protection and perpetuation of slavery—ceases to be a motive for resisting it further.

If the course of the emissaries here be unauthorized it ought to be exposed here to destroy all further confidence in them. If on the contrary it be authorized it should be equally exposed to the people in the slave-holding States. In either event the eyes of the people both in Europe and America will be more effectually opened to a conviction of the nature and certain consequences of this great struggle.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
*Paris, January 19, 1862.*M. HENRI MERCIER, Minister of France at Washington.

SIR: I have received the dispatch * * * which confirms the news of the restitution of Messrs. Mason and Slidell. You already know what has been the satisfaction which the Government of the Emperor has derived from this.

I now do myself the pleasure of attesting that the communication which you were instructed to present to the cabinet of Washington was received in the same spirit of cordial frankness that inspired it and that the Government of the Emperor was not mistaken in its expectation of finding the United States maintaining that position upon which they had been a long time in accord with France in defense of the same principles.

Receive, sir, the assurances of my high consideration.

THOUVENEL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
*Vienna, January 20, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: No dispatches have been received from the Department of State at this legation since my last. The purpose of this brief communication is simply to express my sincere congratulations upon the able and honorable manner in which the dangers created by the Trent affair have been averted.

I have not thought it a part of my duty to obtrude my reflections or my advice upon the Government whilst this matter was pending. Even had the administration required assistance from abroad—which as the event has proved it did not—there were not wanting able heads and hands at London and Paris to communicate everything of importance in the way of counsel or information. Nor do I desire now that this momentous affair is so fortunately terminated to occupy the time of the Department with any reflections of my own.

I will merely state therefore that during this anxious period of suspense—during the six weeks which have elapsed between the arrival of the news of the arrest of the commissioners and that of their liberation—I have held without wavering one language in all my communications with the members of the Government here and with the representatives of foreign powers—that our Government would do all that was possible in honor and in consistency with international law to avoid a rupture with England. I have always taken the ground that our whole history showed us to have been uniformly the champions of the rights of neutrals and of the largest liberty of the seas, and that I could not imagine under so trivial a temptation that we were now likely to abandon our most cherished principles in exchange for the violent and lawless practice too often pursued by England when belligerent to ourselves and other powers when neutral. I knew that the administration of our affairs was in the hands of upright and sagacious statesmen and I constantly expressed the hope that their treatment of this untoward event would signally put to shame the unjust and venomous spirit by which the English press with a few most honorable exceptions has been characterized.

I take pleasure in saying that the English ambassador here, Lord Bloomfield, was as unaffectedly sincere in his desire for an amicable settlement of the affair and as magnanimous and courteous in his attitude as the best friend of either country could desire. I may add that all my colleagues manifested the greatest anxiety that peace should be preserved, although it was very difficult for me to inspire many of them with much of my confidence that this fortunate result would be secured.

In regard to the Imperial Government of Austria you have already been informed of their views by the letters of Count Rechberg to His Majesty's representative at Washington of December 18. I had one or two interviews with the minister during the interval of suspense and took occasion to express with much energy my confidence in the pacific intentions of our Government. Count Rechberg while enlarging with fervor on the calamitous results to the world of a rupture and a war between the United States and Great Britain stated his doubts whether our Government was strong enough to resist the popular pressure or bold enough to confront the popular passion by firmly maintaining the law even at the risk of what might seem like concession.

I told him that the Americans were a reasonable and law-abiding people; that if they were convinced the demands of England were founded in justice and reason and were not accompanied by menace they would sustain their Government in every honorable concession. The picture of the United States Government overborne by a tumultuous, violent, uneducated and unreasoning mob had been painted by hostile and foreign pencils and the model did not exist in nature.

So soon as the result had so amply justified the predictions I had ventured I had another interview with Count Rechberg. The minister in very warm language expressed his satisfaction at the pacific termination to this affair and begged me to convey to the President and to yourself his most sincere congratulations and thanks for the able, temperate, courageous and statesmanlike manner in which the Government had borne itself throughout these trying circumstances. Especially he commended the concluding dispatch of the Secretary of State to Lord Lyons.

Lord Bloomfield too expressed to me his deep satisfaction that the danger of war between the two nations had been averted and his hope that more amicable relations than ever might succeed to this mutual misunderstanding. Nearly every one of my colleagues here have expressed themselves to the same effect and in the strongest terms, and all compliment and congratulate the United States Government upon the prudent and honorable course which it has adopted. These expressions have been so spontaneous and energetic that there can be no doubt of the feeling of relief which is experienced in this part of the continent by the removal of the impending danger.

The reasons why the Government here should deprecate a great maritime conflict between the United States and Great Britain with its inevitable results in Europe are too obvious to need comment. Moreover the consequence of this affair has been to draw from the great powers strong vindications of the rights of neutrals and of the freedom of the seas, always cherished by the United States when neutral, and it is the general feeling that a victory has been gained for humanity and civilization by the issue of the Trent affair. It may be confidently asserted that there is no true friend to America nor to humanity that does not sincerely rejoice in the decision of the President.

You are too well acquainted through your able representatives in England and France with the state of public feeling in those countries to require any allusion to it on my part. Nevertheless, as I maintain a constant private correspondence with influential persons of various parties in England I may take the liberty of stating that the cause of our Government is strengthened in public opinion by the recent events. The idea which has been so carefully planted and nurtured in England that our Government desired to force that country into a war in order to escape from a dilemma at home and to cover our incapacity to deal with the Southern insurrection—this idea which to our minds seems like the weak delusion of a sick man's brain—has taken possession of a considerable portion of the English population. Profligate and unscrupulous writers and speakers have done their best to perpetuate the delusion until it has become almost an article of the national creed. The conduct of the United States Government in the Trent affair has as I am assured by eminent persons in England done much to dispel the fiction.

In regard to the British public no doubt there is a considerable and influential portion which cordially detests the United States, its institutions, its government, its people, and earnestly desires its downfall. Among this portion there is a less numerous but a noisy and ferocious faction which is anxious for a war with us and will make the most of every pretext as they have already done of the Trent affair to precipitate hostilities and to throw the weight of the English nation on the side of the slave Confederacy. These are not theories but facts within my knowledge. The slave-holders have many warm partisans in England and in France. On the other hand there are many in England who do not love us but who for selfish reasons would deprecate hostilities if they can be honorably avoided. And again there is a large, powerful mass who warmly sympathize with our cause. The anti-slavery feeling in England is so strong that it has been necessary for the Southern partisans to persuade the British public that slavery has nothing to do with the American civil war, and this ridiculous notion has found many believers in Europe. It is gravely asserted by many who pass in the world for reasonable beings that the secession was brought about by Southern opposition to tariffs and by the love of free trade! It is superfluous to say that the victims of this delusion see in the recognition of the slave-holders' Confederacy an additional expansion for English markets combined with the weakening of a hated rival.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

J. LOTHROP MOTLEY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 23, 1862.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: * * * We are embarrassed by the attitude of the British Government in regard to the entertainment it gives in its ports to pirates engaged without advantage to any loyal or humane interest in the world in destroying our national commerce—a commerce only less important to Great Britain than it is to the American people. The President cannot but regard this misfortune as a consequence of precipitancy on the part of the British Government which might well have been avoided. I await, however, before giving you instructions upon the subject for the advices which are expected to indicate if not determine the future course of the British Government in regard to our domestic affairs.

Judging from present appearances just what was required of us by foreign nations with unreasonable impatience is now in good time being accomplished. Federal forces, strong, well appointed and superior in numbers, with all the needful material and means for effective action, confront the insurrection on every side. Its resources and strength are inadequate to resist the pressure, and it is expected soon to give way. * * *

We hear continually of purposes entertained by portions of the British people to induce their Government to lend itself to the aid of the insurrection. Our arguments against such an injurious proceeding have been already made known. We have moreover put ourselves upon the practice of justice and liberality toward the British nation and people in all our intercourse with them.

I do not know therefore that we can do more than wait for the threatened development and meet it as we best can, if it must come. Happily every day that passes finds us a people more united and determined in maintaining and preserving the integrity of the Republic.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] January 23, 1862.

[LORD LYONS, Washington.]

MY LORD: I mentioned in my dispatch of the 10th instant* that Her Majesty's Government differed from Mr. Seward in some of the conclusions at which he had arrived, and that I should state to you on a future occasion wherein these differences consisted. I now proceed to do so. It is necessary to observe that I propose to discuss the questions involved in this correspondence solely on the principles of international law.

Mr. Seward himself speaking of the capture of the four gentlemen taken from on board the Trent says: "The question before us is whether this proceeding was authorized by and conducted according to the law of nations." This is in fact the nature of the question which has been but happily is no longer at issue. It concerned the respective rights of belligerents and of neutrals. We must therefore discard entirely from our minds the allegation that the captured persons were rebels and we must consider them only as enemies of the United States at war with its Government, for that is the ground on which Mr. Seward ultimately places the discussion. It is the only ground upon which foreign governments can treat it.

The first inquiry that arises therefore is as Mr. Seward states it, "Were the persons named and their supposed dispatches contraband of war?" Upon this question Her Majesty's Government differ entirely from Mr. Seward. The general right and duty of a neutral power to maintain its own communications and friendly relations with both belligerents cannot be disputed.

A neutral nation [says Vattel] continues with the two parties at war in the several relations nature has placed between nations. It is ready to perform toward both of them all the duties of humanity reciprocally due from nation to nation.

In the performance of these duties on both sides the neutral nation has itself a most direct and material interest; especially when it has numerous citizens resident in the territories of both belligerents; and when its citizens resident both there and at home have property of great value in the territories of the belligerents which may be exposed to danger from acts of confiscation and violence if the protection of their own Government should be withheld.

* See Russell to Lyons, p. 1170.

This is the case with respect to British subjects during the present civil war in North America. Acting upon these principles, Sir William Scott in the case of the Caroline during the war between Great Britain and France decided that the carrying of dispatches from the French ambassador resident in the United States to the Government of France by an U. S. merchant ship was no violation of the neutrality of the United States in the war between Great Britain and France, and that such dispatches could not be treated as contraband of war.

The neutral country [he said] has a right to preserve its relations with the enemy, and you are not at liberty to conclude that any communication between them can partake in any degree of the nature of hostility against you. The enemy may have his hostile projects to be attempted with the neutral State, but your reliance is on the integrity of that neutral State, that it will not favor nor participate in such designs but as far as its own councils and actions are concerned will oppose them. And if there should be private reasons to suppose that this confidence in the good faith of the neutral State has a doubtful foundation that is matter for the caution of the government to be counteracted by just measures of preventive policy; but it is no ground on which this court can pronounce that the neutral carrier has violated his duty by bearing dispatches which as far as he can know may be presumed to be of an innocent nature and in the maintenance of a pacific connection.

And he continues shortly afterward :

It is to be considered also with regard to this question what may be due to the convenience of the neutral State; for its interests may require that the intercourse of correspondence with the enemy's country should not be altogether interdicted. It might be thought to amount almost to a declaration that an ambassador from an enemy shall not reside in the neutral State if he is declared to be debarred from the only means of communicating with his own. For to what useful purpose can he reside there without the opportunities of such a communication? It is too much to say that all the business of the two States shall be transacted by the minister of the neutral State resident in the enemy's country. The practice of nations has allowed to neutral States the privilege of receiving ministers from the belligerent States, and the use and convenience of an immediate negotiation with them.

That these principles must necessarily extend to every kind of diplomatic communication between government and government, whether by sending or receiving ambassadors or commissioners personally or by sending or receiving dispatches from or to such ambassadors or commissioners, or from or to the respective governments, is too plain to need argument; and it seems no less clear that such communications must be as legitimate and innocent in their first commencement as afterward, and that the rule cannot be restricted to the case in which diplomatic relations are already formally established by the residence of an accredited minister of the belligerent power in the neutral country. It is the neutrality of the one party to the communications and not either the mode of the communication or the time when it first takes place which furnishes the test of the true application of the principle.

The only distinction arising out of the peculiar circumstances of a civil war and of the non-recognition of the independence of the de facto government of one of the belligerents either by the other belligerent or by the neutral power is this, that—

For the purpose of avoiding the difficulties which might arise from a formal and positive solution of these questions diplomatic agents are frequently substituted who are clothed with the powers and enjoy the immunities of ministers, though they are not invested with the representative character nor entitled to diplomatic honors.*

* Wheaton: "Elements," Part III, Chap. I, sec. 5.

Upon this footing Messrs. Mason and Slidell who are expressly stated by Mr. Seward to have been sent as pretended ministers plenipotentiary from the Southern States to the courts of Saint James and of Paris must have been sent, and would have been if at all received; and the reception of these gentlemen upon this footing could not have been justly regarded according to the law of nations as a hostile or unfriendly act toward the United States.

Nor indeed is it clear that these gentlemen would have been clothed with any powers or have enjoyed any immunities beyond those accorded to diplomatic agents not officially recognized. It appears to Her Majesty's Government to be a necessary and certain deduction from these principles that the conveyance of public agents of this character from Havana to Saint Thomas on their way to Great Britain and France and of their credentials or dispatches (if any) on board the Trent was not and could not be a violation of the duties of neutrality on the part of that vessel, and both for that reason and also because the destination of these persons and of their dispatches was bona fide neutral it is in the judgment of Her Majesty's Government clear and certain that they were not contraband.

The doctrine of contraband has its whole foundation and origin in the principle which is nowhere more accurately explained than in the following passage of Bynkershoek. After stating in general terms the duty of impartial neutrality he adds:

Et sane id, quod modo dicebam, non tantum ratio docet, sed et usus, inter omnes fere gentes receptus. Quamvis enim libera sint cum amicorum nostrorum hostibus commercia, usu tamen placuit, ne alterutrum his rebus juvemus, quibus bellum contra amicos nostros instruat et foveatur. Non licet igitur alterutri advelere ea, quibus in bello gerendo opus habet; ut sunt tormenta, arma, et quorum præcipuus in bello usus, milites. * * * Optimo jure interdictum est, ne quid eorum hostibus subministremus; quia his rebus nos ipsi quodammodo videremur amicis nostris bellum facere.

The principle of contraband of war is here clearly explained and it is impossible that men or dispatches which do not come within that principle can in this sense be contraband. The penalty of knowingly carrying contraband of war is as Mr. Seward states nothing less than the confiscation of the ship; but it is impossible that this penalty can be incurred when the neutral has done no more than employ means usual among nations for maintaining his own proper relations with one of the belligerents. It is of the very essence of the definition of contraband that the articles should have a hostile and not a neutral destination.

Goods [says Lord Stowell] going to a neutral port cannot come under the description of contraband, all goods going there being equally lawful. * * * The rule respecting contraband as I have always understood it is that articles must be taken in delicto—in the actual prosecution of the voyage to an enemy's port.

On what just principle can it be contended that a hostile destination is less necessary or a neutral destination more noxious for constituting a contraband character in the case of public agents or dispatches than in the case of arms and ammunition?

Mr. Seward seeks to support his conclusion on this point by a reference to the well-known dictum of Sir William Scott in the case of the Caroline that "you may stop the ambassador of your enemy on his passage;" and to another dictum of the same judge in the case of the Orozembo that evil functionaries "if sent for a purpose intimately connected with the hostile operations" may fall under the same rule with persons whose employment is directly military. These quotations are as it seems to Her Majesty's Government irrelevant. The words of Sir W. Scott are in both cases applied by Mr. Seward in a sense different from that in which they are used. Sir William Scott does not say that an ambassador sent from a belligerent to a neutral State may be stopped as contraband while on his passage on board a neutral vessel belonging to that or any other neutral State; nor that if he be not contraband the other belligerent would have any right to stop him on such a voyage. The sole object Sir William Scott had in view was to explain the extent of the limits of the doctrine of the inviolability of ambassadors in virtue of that character, for he says:

The limits that are assigned to the operations of war against them by Vattel and other writers upon the subject are that you may exercise your right of war against them wherever the character of hostility exists. You may stop the ambassador of your enemy on his passage, but when he has arrived and has taken upon him the functions of his office and has been admitted in his representative character he becomes a sort of middle man entitled to peculiar privileges, as set apart for the protection of the relations of amity and peace, in maintaining which all nations are in some degree interested.

There is certainly nothing in this passage from which an inference can be drawn so totally opposed to the general tenure of the whole judgment as that an ambassador proceeding to the country to which he is sent and on board a neutral vessel belonging to that country can be stopped on the ground that the conveyance of such an ambassador is a breach of neutrality, which it must be if he be contraband of war. Sir William Scott is here expressing not his own opinion merely but the doctrine which he considers to have been laid down by writers of authority upon the subject. No writer of authority has ever suggested that an ambassador proceeding to a neutral State on board one of its merchant ships is contraband of war. The only writer named by Sir William Scott is Vattel, whose words are these:

On peut encore attaquer et arrêter ses gens (i. e., gens de l'ennemi) partout où on a la liberté d'exercer des actes d'hostilité. Non seulement donc on peut justement refuser le passage aux ministres qu'un ennemi envoyé à d'autres souverains; on les arrête même, s'ils entreprennent de passer secrètement et sans permission dans les lieux dont on est maître.

And he adds as an example, the seizure of the French ambassador when passing through the dominions of Hanover during war between England and France by the King of England, who was also Sovereign of Hanover. The rule therefore to be collected from these authorities is that you may stop an enemy's ambassador in any place of which you are yourself the master or in any other place where you have a right to exercise acts of hostility. Your own territory or ships of your own country are places of which you are yourself the master. The enemy's territory or the enemy's ships are places in which you have a right to exercise acts of hostility. Neutral vessels guilty of no violation of the laws of neutrality are places where you have no right to exercise acts of hostility. It would be a perversion of the doctrine that ambassadors have peculiar privileges to argue that they are less protected than other men. The right conclusion is that an ambassador sent to a neutral power is inviolable on the high seas as well as in neutral waters while under the protection of the neutral flag.

The other dictum of Sir William Scott in the case of the Orozembo is even less pertinent to the present question. That related to the case of a neutral ship which upon the effect of the evidence given on the trial was held by the court to have been engaged as an enemy's transport to convey the enemy's military officers and some of his civil officers, whose duties were intimately connected with military operations, from the enemy's country to one of the enemy's colonies which was about to be the theater of those operations—the whole being done under color of a simulated neutral destination. But as long as a neutral government within whose territory no military operations are carried on adheres to its profession of neutrality the duties of civil officers on a mission to that government and within its territory cannot possibly be “connected with” any “military operations” in the sense in which these words were used by Sir William Scott, as indeed is rendered quite clear by the passages already cited from his own judgment in the case of the Caroline. In connection with this part of the subject it is necessary to notice a remarkable passage in Mr. Seward’s note in which he says :

I assume in the present case—what as I read British authorities is regarded by Great Britain herself as true maritime law—that the circumstances that the Trent was proceeding from a neutral port to another neutral port does not modify the right of the belligerent capture.

If indeed the immediate and ostensible voyage of the Trent had been to a neutral port but her ultimate and real destination to some port of the enemy her Majesty’s Government might have been better able to understand the reference to British authorities contained in this passage. It is undoubtedly the law as laid down by British authorities, that if the real destination of the vessel be hostile (that is, to the enemy or the enemy’s country) it cannot be covered and rendered innocent by a fictitious destination to a neutral port. But if the real terminus of the voyage be bona fide in a neutral territory no English nor indeed as her Majesty’s Government believe any American authority can be found which has ever given countenance to the doctrine that either men or dispatches can be subject during such a voyage and on board such a neutral vessel to belligerent capture as contraband of war.

Her Majesty’s Government regard such a doctrine as wholly irreconcilable with the true principles of maritime law, and certainly with those principles as they have been understood in the courts of this country. It is to be further observed that packets engaged in the postal service and keeping up the regular and periodical communications between the different countries of Europe and America and other parts of the world though in the absence of treaty stipulations they may not be exempted from visit and search in time of war, nor from the penalties of any violation of neutrality if proved to have been knowingly committed, are still when sailing in the ordinary and innocent course of their legitimate employment which consists in the conveyance of mails and passengers entitled to peculiar favor and protection from all Governments in whose service they are engaged. To detain, disturb or interfere with them without the very gravest cause would be an act of the most noxious and injurious character not only to a vast number and variety of individual and private interests but to the public interests of neutral and friendly Governments.

It has been necessary to dwell upon these points in some detail because they involve principles of the highest importance and because if Mr. Seward’s arguments were acted upon as sound the most injurious consequences might follow. For instance in the present war according to Mr. Seward’s doctrine any packet-ship carrying a Confederate agent from Dover to Calais or from Calais to Dover might be captured and carried to New York. In case of a war between Austria and Italy the conveyance of an Italian minister or agent might cause the capture of a neutral packet plying between Malta and Marseilles or between Malta and Gibraltar, the condemnation of the ship at Trieste and the confinement of the minister or agent in an Austrian prison. So in the late war between Great Britain and France on the one hand and Russia on the other a Russian minister going from Hamburg to Washington in an American ship might have been brought to Portsmouth, the ship might have been condemned and the minister sent to the Tower of London. So also a Confederate vessel of war might capture a Cunard steamer on its way from Halifax to Liverpool on the ground of its carrying dispatches from Mr. Seward to Mr. Adams.

In view therefore of the erroneous principles asserted by Mr. Seward and the consequences they involve Her Majesty's Government think it necessary to declare that they would not acquiesce in the capture of any British merchant ship in circumstances similar to those of the Trent and that the fact of its being brought before a prize court though it would not alter the character would not diminish the gravity of the offense against the law of nations which would thereby be committed.

Having disposed of the question whether the persons named and their supposed dispatches were contraband of war I am relieved from the necessity of discussing the other questions raised by Mr. Seward, namely, whether Captain Wilkes had lawfully a right to stop and search the Trent for these persons and their supposed dispatches; whether that right assuming that he possessed it was exercised by him in a lawful and proper manner, and whether he had a right to capture the persons found on board.

The fifth question put by Mr. Seward, namely whether Captain Wilkes exercised the alleged right of capture in the manner allowed and recognized by the law of nations is resolved by Mr. Seward himself in the negative.

I [will not] conclude, however, without noticing one very singular passage in Mr. Seward's dispatch. Mr. Seward asserts that—

If the safety of this Union required the detention of the captured persons it would be the right and duty of this Government to detain them.

He proceeds to say that the waning proportions of the insurrection and the comparative unimportance of the captured persons themselves forbid him from resorting to that defense. Mr. Seward does not here assert any right founded on international law however inconvenient or irritating to neutral nations. He entirely loses sight of the vast difference which exists between the exercise of an extreme right and the commission of unquestionable wrong. His frankness compels me to be equally open and to inform him that Great Britain could not have submitted to the perpetration of that wrong however flourishing might have been the insurrection in the South and however important the persons captured might have been.

Happily all danger of hostile collision on this subject has been avoided. It is the earnest hope of Her Majesty's Government that similar dangers if they should arise may be averted by peaceful negotiations conducted in the spirit which befits the organs of two great nations.

I request you to read this dispatch to Mr. Seward and give him a copy of it.

I am, &c.,

RUSSELL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 24, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I am glad to perceive * * * that the Government is fully alive to a sense of the growing danger of European interference in American affairs. The indications of this disposition have become far more decided since the expectations formed from the case of the Trent have been disappointed. The first pretext seized on in France and eagerly caught up here has been the alleged destruction of the harbor of Charleston, and so impressible is the popular mind in both countries to any unfavorable representation of our action that many of those really well disposed joined in the clamor even before they were possessed of any of the facts. The next will be the inefficiency of the blockade or else its excessive severity. And so it will go on until the public opinion shall be worked up to the proper pitch to sanction a positive interference. Already the Observer, one of the newspapers occasionally used as an organ of the minister, has distinctly alluded to the necessity of another Navarino, whilst another, the Globe, in a more subdued tone hints with equal significance at the expediency of an armed intervention to put a stop to the war.

* * * * *

I regret to say that the favorable indications developed for a few days after the reception of the answer in the case of the Trent are not brightening. We are now preparing for the meeting of Parliament when the course of the ministry will be more clearly defined and the temper of the House of Commons be tested. I shall do all in my power to fortify the action of our friends, but in order to do so effectually it will be necessary for me to be kept continually informed of the views of the Government on any and all the questions that are likely to come into controversy. I have already been asked to give some light about the policy in filling up the [Charleston] harbor of which I have no information. Yet I am well convinced that nothing will long avail to prevent a recognition if not positive intervention unless it be success in the field at home. The latest accounts of the state of things in the insurgent country as shown from their own newspapers have done something to check confidence heretofore felt in the solidity of their situation. Any information of an authentic character touching the efficiency of the blockade, or their resources, their domestic condition, the disposition of the slaves and their political objects which could be supplied to me might be used to some advantage. The impression has been that they embody all the wisdom, all the military skill and all the propriety of deportment to be found in America. We who know the truth may smile at this singular hallucination, but the fact if not corrected will be not the less an element in the formation of an ultimate policy in Europe.

In conclusion I will venture to say that the course of events in America during the next six weeks must in a great measure determine the future of the Government of the United States. For it is they and they only which can control the manner in which foreign nations will make up their minds hereafter to consider them. And in this sense the absence of action will be almost equally decisive.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Saint Petersburg, January 24, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, &c.

SIR: I called on Prince Gortchakoff to-day at his own request when he read me the letter which he had already dispatched to Baron de Stoeckl congratulating our Government upon its late adjustment of the Trent affair. The letter you will perceive is well written and very favorable in its tone to our Government.

He asked what I thought of its publication here within a week. I said it was somewhat unusual, but the British Government had published diplomatic correspondence before it was complete by arrival at its destination. He added if I thought it would aid us in this crisis of public formation of opinion in Europe that he would have it then put in the official paper, being the Saint Petersburg Journal. I told him I liked the style and spirit of the letter and believed it would greatly forward our interests by its immediate publication. He responded that he was anxious to do us all the good offices possible (without interfering directly in our home troubles) as the great American nation and that he would then publish it at once.

He then repeated to me his wishes for the restoration of the Union. He expressed his fears if any reverse should happen to us that England would at once make common cause with the South, acknowledge her independence and finally break down the power of the Republic. He said in addition that if we should succeed in conquering the South that we would have a sore and discontented population upon our hands which would ever prove a source of weakness, and that he felt that we ought to make a generous offer of reconciliation to the South. I responded that I agreed with him; that we were always and were now ready to deal justly and generously with the South should she be willing to listen to reason, but failing to hear our appeals that we would war it out to the bitter end before we would allow our natural boundaries to be broken by them.

I must confess that I very much fear England's interference. My first impressions in Europe are not changed nor weakened but rather strengthened. Nothing but quick and effective success will save us from foreign enemies. If slavery could be rooted out of our system I think any sacrifice of life and money now would not be too much to pay for such consummation.

But as it seems now to be determined to stand by slaveholders' rights though all others may perish I confess I think that urgent appeals ought to be made at once to the South to save itself by accepting anew the Constitution and the Union with all guaranties of slavery as of old unequivocally expressed. This should, however, be a secret and confidential proffer of the administration without making its publication demoralize the troops and the country. For my part I venture to suggest that the President send one of his most able diplomatists to Jeff. Davis' government in an unofficial way with the olive branch, ready upon the gaining of any victory of importance on our part to win him back to allegiance.

You think you can trust England. I do not. So I would prepare at once for a war with that power as an inevitable result of any reverses which would prevent a subjection of the South before the 1st of April next. But you may have sources of forming an opinion which are not open to me. I tell you simply how I look at this issue. One thing is certain: war or no war Portland Harbor ought to be at once fortified in the most permanent and effective manner.

The tones of European Governments are greatly changed since the rendition of Mason and Slidell. If England now seeks a quarrel with us we will have all liberal Europe on our side. But she never cares what people think when she sees her way open to success. Upon our own strong right arm we must rest.

I trust you will pardon me for so often venturing to make suggestions in reference to our home affairs. My anxiety about the issue must plead my apology.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

C. M. CLAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 31, 1862.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c. [London.]

SIR: Your dispatch of January 10 has been received. If it be true as you seem to think possible that we have only averted an occasion for the hostilities which the British Government indicated, and have not at all removed the cause of those hostilities, we still have every reason to be satisfied with our course in the Trent affair.

The American people could not have been united in a war which being waged to maintain Captain Wilkes' act of force would have practically been a voluntary war against Great Britain. At the same time it would have been a war in 1861 against Great Britain for a cause directly the opposite of the cause for which we waged war against the same power in 1812. We shall practice toward Great Britain not only justice but moderation and even liberality in all the exciting transactions which this unhappy domestic contest of ours shall produce.

We have not left Great Britain in doubt of our own confidence in our ability to maintain the integrity of the Union or of our grounds for it notwithstanding the embarrassment which we experienced in the indirect support which the insurgents derive from nations whose rights we have invariably respected.

We are not unaware nor do we complain of the impatience in Europe which exacts from us quick and conclusive victories. We can excuse it because even among ourselves at home there is a failure to apprehend that the insurrection has disclosed itself over an area of vast extent, and that military operations to be successful must be on a scale heretofore practically unknown in the art of war. At the same time we are not unaware of the fact that the impatience of European nations is due chiefly to the inconveniences which they suffer from the contest and not to a careful consideration of the strength and energies of the parties engaged in it. We have every motive they can have and many other infinitely stronger motives for bringing the war to the speediest possible successful conclusion.

We expect that Great Britain will realize not only this truth but another important one, namely, that any solution of this controversy by a division of the Union would be detrimental to British commerce and to British prestige. Believing this we expect that Great Britain will not become a party in the contest against the United States. If insensible to these considerations the British Government shall intervene then we must meet the emergency with the spirit and resolution which become a great people.

The tone of the public virtue is becoming sounder and stronger every day. Military and naval operations go on with success hindered only by the weather which for almost a month has rendered the coasts unsafe and the roads impassable.

I have observed that the British people were satisfied with the vigor and energy of the preparations which their Government made for the war which they expected to occur between them and ourselves. It may be profitable for us all to reflect that the military and naval preparations which have been made by this Government to put down the insurrection have every day since the 1st day of May last equaled if not surpassed the daily proportion of those war preparations which were regarded as so demonstrative in Great Britain.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 31, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The expectations of a declaration of some kind from the Emperor of the French on the subject of the American difficulty which might be made the basis of an agitation here have been disappointed. Whatever is to be done must be originated in Parliament by the avowed friends of the rebels.

All the particular grounds of complaint against the United States have been successively removed from under them. The parties seized in the Trent are now safe on this side of the Atlantic. The blocking up of Charleston Harbor is shown to be no real grievance. The inefficiency of the blockade is the only remaining proposition which it is attempted to support by evidence. Even that would be met by proof drawn from the admissions made by the insurgents at home if it could have been supplied in a tolerably authentic form. I regret that I have not at my command any official tabular statement of the number of vessels turned off or taken during the period of the blockade or evidence of the price of the various commodities of foreign growth or manufacture rendered scarce by the operations of the blockading force. But inasmuch as the Government is obviously disinclined to sustain an objection of this kind just now the probability is that nothing will be made out of it.

There is then not a particle of solid material for the dissatisfaction with the Government of the United States based on its own policy to make a quarrel out of. Resort must then be had to the simple objection that the rebellion has not been suppressed. This will be urged as justifiable cause for early recognition; and upon that issue the sense of the House of Commons will probably be sooner or later taken. At this moment it is impossible to estimate the strength of parties or the character of the division. The impression is that the conservatives generally favor such a measure of which thus far I see no evidence beyond the general tendency of one or two newspapers in that interest which I have had occasion to suspect not to be trustworthy organs.

I am rather inclined to the belief that this subject has not yet become a party question in the eyes of the members of either side. Each individual therefore indulges in his particular opinion. There is no knowing how soon it may become so. That will depend upon the chances of making anything out of it in case of a conflict. The ministry are notoriously feeble in Parliament whilst the conservatives are strong only whilst confining themselves strictly within a negative position. Hence the situation of both parties rests equally upon an avoidance at least for the present of test questions. Lord Palmerston is sufficiently popular to make it hazardous to attempt to dislodge him by a coup de main in Parliament which would inevitably be followed by a formidable opposition headed by him. The more eligible course has thus far been thought to be to await the moment which can not be long delayed of his retreat, when Lord Derby is expected to be summoned to take his place with the consent of all but the radical section of the people. This will be an era for the reconstruction of parties.

Such has been the programme down to the assembling of Parliament. What shape things will take afterward it is impossible to predict. That the American question is to be a serious element in any calculation of its action everything conspires to make us believe. I shall endeavor so far as it may be within my power to keep you informed of the movements as they occur.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: There is a good deal of feeling among the workmen in this country on the subject of America and the treatment experienced by the Government of the United States at the hands of the leading newspapers. I have already received an official copy of the proceedings of one public meeting held in London, which being addressed only to me I have thought it sufficient to notice simply by a letter of acknowledgment.

This day I have received a visit from Mr. Beal who has placed in my hands a copy of the resolutions passed at another meeting in a different part of the town and herewith transmitted with a request that I would forward them. I told Mr. Beal that it was not the desire of the Government through me to attempt to influence the public opinion of Great Britain or its policy by any action whatsoever, but that I should cheerfully accede to his request to forward the resolutions to my Government as a simple expression of good will which I did not doubt would be received by it with the greatest pleasure.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

[Inclosure.]

9 CHARLES STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE,
January 29, 1862.

His Excellency THE AMERICAN MINISTER.

HONORABLE SIR: I have the honor to present you with the inclosed resolutions passed at a meeting of workmen at the New Hall, Edgware road, on Monday evening, January 27, 1862.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

H. BEAL.

[Sub-inclosure.]

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT:

The following resolutions passed at a meeting of workmen, held at the New Hall, Edgware road, on Monday evening, January 27, 1862:

That this meeting is of opinion that the rebel agents, Mason and Slidell, now on their way from America to England are utterly unworthy the moral sympathies of the working classes of this country inasmuch as they hold property in slaves and are the avowed agents of a tyrannical faction now in rebellion against the Republic in America, and are the sworn enemies against the social and political rights of the working classes of all countries.

That in the opinion of this meeting, considering the ill-disguised efforts of the Times and other misleading journals to misrepresent public opinion here on all American questions to embroil us on any pretext in war with millions of our kinsmen, to decry democratic institutions under the trials to which the Republic is exposed, it is the duty of workingmen especially as unrepresented in the national Senate to express their sympathy with the United States in their gigantic struggle for the preservation of the Union; to denounce the flagrant dishonesty and slave-holding advocacy of the Times and kindred journals of the aristocracy and to exercise an emphatic expression of public opinion in favor of the strictest interpretation of the doctrine of non-intervention in the affairs of the United States; in favor of the reference of all disputes which may arise to arbitration or to the settlement by commissioners specially appointed by each State; to denounce the war policy of the stockjobbing journals, and to give expression to the warmest sympathy with the Abolitionists of America in their efforts to convert the struggle to an ultimate settlement of the slavery question.

Signed in behalf of the committee.

THOMAS STEDMAN,
Chairman.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: Your dispatch of the 17th ultimo was received on the 1st instant by the same mail which brought to Lord Lyons the reply of Earl Russell to the note of the British minister which conveyed my answer on the subject of the capture of the Trent. A copy of that reply was delivered to me by Lord Lyons.

This paper and other official communications from London authorized us to suppose that the friendly relations between Great Britain and the United States are now established on a permanent foundation. A note addressed by M. Thouvenel to Mr. Mercier has been submitted by him to me, which is regarded as assuring us that France too entertains no designs injurious or unfriendly to the United States. I need not say that this information was received by the President with very sincere pleasure. * * *

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 5, 1862.

JAMES S. PIKE, Esq., &c., The Hague.

SIR: * * * I thank you sincerely for your attention and diligence in giving me information of the action of opinion on the continent in regard to the disposition of the question concerning the Trent, and also for your speculations concerning the probable future course of European opinion upon the contest in which we are engaged.

Incidents and even accidents, domestic and foreign, enter much into all the estimates which can be formed on either side of the ocean. There will be incidents and accidents in the future as there have been in the past and these cannot now be foreknown. I think I have heretofore said to you that I had perceived any opinion discovered in Europe is only a later appearance there of an opinion which had already manifested itself among ourselves.

Practically the American people were dismayed by the outbreak of the rebellion. Europe accepted it as already completed. The American people rallied and Europe considered. The American people recoiled after the battle of Bull Run. Europe pronounced the question ended. The American people were confident of success and Europe admitted the hopefulness of their affairs until the Trent question came up. The American people thought that war waged by Great Britain against us when we were divided would be calamitous. Europe decided that it would be ruinous.

Just now the tide of success is with us; the strength of our position is seen and felt by ourselves and acknowledged by the insurgents. If we go on as we have begun making progress against the insurrection, and if at the same time we practice justice in all our dealings with foreign nations I feel assured that European States will consider well before they engage in a war against us in violation of all moral right and with such questionable prospects of benefits to themselves.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 7, 1862.

M. HENRI MERCIER, &c.

SIR: I cannot deny myself the pleasure of expressing to you my gratification with which the President has received the cordial assurances of good will and satisfaction in the disposition of the affair of the Trent conveyed to this Government in M. Thouvenel's dispatch to you of the 19th of January which you in so obliging a manner read to me, and a copy of which at my request you delivered to me on Saturday last.

I trust, sir, that the European States will on no occasion more than on the one which has just passed have reason to doubt that the United States while acting loyally to themselves will at the same time prove loyal also to the best principles and traditions of their history.

It shall not be a fault on their part if emerging from their present troubles they do not retain the respect, good will and fraternal sympathy of all enlightened nations. Have the goodness in your own way to make these sentiments known to M. Thouvenel.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: * * * I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of Her Majesty's speech to both Houses of Parliament together with the Morning Post newspaper of this morning giving a report of the debate in the two Houses yesterday on the address.*

It will be perceived that both Lord Russell and Lord Palmerston announce quite distinctly the intention of the Government to maintain its present position. The position of Lord Derby on the other hand is somewhat equivocal and would seem to imply an organized movement if it were not for the firmer tone of Mr. D'Israeli in the other House. On the whole the expression of sentiment so far as it goes is favorable. The debate will however take quite a different shape when it comes to the questions presented in detail. There is no reason to doubt that a movement will then be made in whatever direction may be thought most likely at the moment to be favorable to the insurgents. The earnestness with which it will be pressed will largely depend on the nature of the intelligence received from the United States.

* * * * *

I see by the newspapers that Mr. Yancey has embarked in a steamer to the West Indies on his way home. He has labored indefatigably upon the newspaper press and not without a good deal of success. It is said though I know not with what truth that large sums have been expended in this direction. The condition of the press is now so peculiar in this country that it is unusually open to such influences. I have not time to explain the reasons for this statement for they run deeply into the moral and political condition of the people. At some future moment I may make it the subject of a particular communication.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: The Jura which arrived at Portland last night with foreign news to the 31st gives the following as an extract from the French Emperor's speech:

The civil war which desolates America has greatly compromised our commercial interests; so long, however, as the rights of neutrals are respected we must confine ourselves to expressing wishes for an early termination of these dissensions.

The steamer La Plata with Messrs. Mason and Slidell on board arrived at Southampton on the 29th. They were courteously received but no demonstration was made. Mr. Mason at latest dates remained in London but Slidell has proceeded to Paris.

Very respectfully,

E. S. SANFORD,
American Telegraph Company.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 17, 1862.

J. LOTHROP MOTLEY, Esq., &c., Vienna.

SIR: Your dispatch of January 20* has been received. I am very glad to learn that our disposition of the Trent affair is regarded with so much favor by the Austrian Government and in the diplomatic circle at Vienna.

We have not been insensible to the impatience which you describe as existing in Europe for a speedy termination of our unhappy civil war and to the possible danger of foreign intervention if it should be unreasonably protracted. It has seemed very obvious to me that this foreign impatience is most unreasoning and most unjust. Yet I have felt no disposition to complain of it. It was only a reflex of the same popular impatience exhibited in our own country. In Europe it is naturally enough aggravated by the absence of those weighty political interests which have at home so unavailingly counseled prudence and patience in a conflict in which not merely partial or temporary interests are involved but in which the national integrity and even the national existence are at stake.

* See p. 1182.

Military and naval successes, however, are in good time rewarding the careful and elaborate measures of the Government. Popular apprehension and distrust have already vanished before these triumphs so signally indicative of the complete restoration of the national authority, and we may therefore justly expect similar results in Europe. The toleration that could not be allowed there to a republic that seemed unfortunate will perhaps not be denied when it is seen that it can when it becomes necessary defend itself with powers surpassing those of a limited monarchy or despotism.

Under no other form of constitution could any nation have encountered with so much resolution and vigor a revolution so formidably instituted for the extension of human slavery. Perhaps just now in the light of our more cheering prospects this extraordinary feature of our cause may again be recognized in Europe.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * Your reply* to the Prussian note on the Trent affair which the newspapers have published has been very well received everywhere, and the Union success in Kentucky is causing universal rejoicing as the harbinger of the speedy overthrow of the rebellion. May the ardent hopes it has given rise to not again be disappointed.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

N. B. JUDD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 21, 1862.
Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have submitted to the President the copy of the instruction from Earl Russell† which you left with me and which bears the date of January 23.

In this paper Earl Russell sets forth certain points upon which the British Government differs from some of the conclusions which I presented to you in my note‡ upon the Trent affair of the 26th of December last. It is perceived that these differences do not disturb the conclusion contained in that paper upon which the case of the Trent was disposed of by this Government. The differences stated by Earl Russell involve questions of neutral rights in maritime warfare which though of confessed importance are not practically presented in any case of conflict now existing between the United States and Great Britain.

It is very desirable, however, that these questions shall be settled if possible by an early understanding between the two Governments. Nevertheless Earl Russell I think will agree with me that they relate only to a part of the international law of maritime war, while there are other and kindred questions equally important and equally likely to arise in the disturbed condition of affairs which exists on this continent and in any conflict which may happen in Europe. All such questions moreover affect not only these two nations but all the other maritime powers.

* Seward to Von Gerolt, January 14, p. 1177.

† Russell to Lyons, p. 1185.

‡ Seward to Lyons, p. 1145.

Earl Russell need not be reminded that the necessity which has existed for meliorations of the law of maritime war in regard to neutrals has been a subject of debates and even of conventions of such powers. The friendly relations which this Government holds to such powers require that all that it does in this connection shall be done with their full knowledge and with an expressed desire for their co-operation. This Government has taken an active part in seeking to promote such meliorations through such conventions. Its views on this subject have undergone no change. It will cheerfully second any negotiations to that end which Great Britain or any other maritime power will inaugurate. If it shall seem preferable it will itself initiate such proceedings. Our ministers accredited to such powers will at an early day receive full instructions to this effect.

In the meantime your lordship may assure Earl Russell that while the United States will justly claim as their own the belligerent rights which the customary practice allows to nations engaged in war according to our present convictions there is no melioration of the maritime law or of the actual practice of maritime war that the leading maritime States including Great Britain shall think desirable which will not be cheerfully assented to by the United States, even to the most liberal asylum for persons and the extreme point of exemption of private property from confiscation in maritime war.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, February 21, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I will without any loss of time communicate to her Majesty's Government the note which you have to-day done me the honor to write to me with regard to Earl Russell's dispatch to me of the 23d of last month, on certain questions of international law connected with the case of the Trent.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

LYONS.

WASHINGTON, February 25, 1862.

To the SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit to Congress a copy of an instruction from Prince Gortchakoff to M. de Stoeckl, the minister of his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia accredited to this Government, and of a note of the Secretary of State to the latter relative to the adjustment of the question between the United States and Great Britain growing out of the removal of certain of our citizens from the British mail steamer Trent by order of the commander of the United States war steamer San Jacinto.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

SAINT PETERSBURG, January 9, 1862.

M. DE STOECKL, &c.

SIR: The Federal Government cannot doubt the lively interest with which we have followed the diverse phases of the incident which has lately held in suspense the anxious attention of both worlds.

His Majesty the Emperor has not presumed too much upon the wisdom of the cabinet of Washington in resting convinced that it would consult only in these grave conjunctures sentiments of justice and of conciliation and the important interests of the country.

It is with the highest satisfaction that his Imperial Majesty has found his foresight confirmed by the determination which the Federal Government has just taken.

Although it has not yet come to our knowledge except through the channel of the newspapers our august master has been unwilling to delay transmitting to the President the sentiments with which his Imperial Majesty has appreciated this proof of moderation and equity so much the more meritorious because it was rendered the more difficult by national impulses.

I have no need to add, sir, that by remaining faithful to the political principles which she has always maintained even when those principles were turned against her and by abstaining from invoking in her turn the benefit of doctrines which she has always repudiated the American nation has given a proof of political integrity which gives her incontestable titles to the esteem and gratitude of all governments interested in seeing the peace of the seas maintained, and the principles of right pervading over those of force in international relations, for the repose of the world, the progress of civilization and the welfare of humanity.

His Majesty the Emperor is gratified in the hope that the same wisdom and the same moderation which dictated to the Federal Government its late decision will alike preside over its steps amid the internal difficulties with which it finds itself at this moment striving.

The event must have shown to it how much these difficulties affect its political standing; how much they are of a nature to encourage aspirations connected with a diminution of the power of the United States, and how much consequently it is for its interest to get through with them at the earliest day.

The Emperor is persuaded that the statesmen who have understood how to appreciate from a point of view so exalted the external political interests of their country will understand equally well how to ground their internal policy above popular passions.

Please to convey to the Federal Government these hopes of our august master; and reiterate the assurance of the satisfaction with which his Imperial Majesty would see the American Union again regain strength through measures of conciliation which may regulate the present without bequeathing to the future any seeds of discord, and again enter upon the condition of power and prosperity which we desire for it not only because of the cordial sympathy which unites the two countries but moreover because the maintenance of its power interests in the highest degree the general political equilibrium.

Receive, sir, the assurance of my very distinguished consideration.
GORTCHAKOFF.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 18, 1862.

M. EDWARD DE STOECKL, &c.

SIR: I am directed by the President to express to you his sentiments upon the dispatch concerning the adjustment of the Trent affair addressed to you by Prince Gortchakoff which you submitted to me yesterday.

76 R R—SERIES II, VOL II

That paper is marked by views comprehensive equally of the interests of two continents and prospects of civilization for many ages, while its wise and prudent counsels are expressed with all the sincerity of a friendship for the United States that have become the more earnest as the danger of the situation seems to multiply and become more imminent. I am sure, sir, that when this unhappy civil war shall have ended in the complete and permanent restoration of the Federal Union upon its ancient and well-tried constitutional foundation then the fidelity, constancy, and wisdom with which the Emperor of Russia lent his counsels and his influence to this great end will be regarded by everybody with deep interest and admiration.

The relations of mutual confidence and friendship between a republican power in the west and a great and enterprising and beneficent monarchy in the east will afford new and important guaranties of peace, order and freedom to the nations.

Will you, M. de Stoeckl, add to our many obligations by conveying these sentiments to the Emperor? In doing so you will be at liberty to assure him that I shall take an early opportunity to submit the paper which has elicited them to the consideration of the American people. Meanwhile the passions in which our unhappy domestic strife originated are subsiding. I cannot doubt that the fraternal counsels of an early, impartial and constant friend will reach the inmost heart of a divided but yet generous people.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurances of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, February 28, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The Parliamentary document containing the papers relating to the blockade has been issued. It may give rise to some interrogations of ministers, but at present there is little probability of the matter going further. Indeed I have nothing to report that is material on American affairs. There is a truce between the parties on all exciting subjects occasioned by a general desire to respect the affliction of the Queen. Apart from this I think I perceive a considerable degree of reaction in favor of the United States, partly owing to the natural subsidence of the exaggerated sentiment at the time of the Trent case and partly to the favorable reports concerning the military operations in America.

I am confirmed in the opinion I have heretofore expressed that nothing else [military success] is necessary here to maintain intact the friendly relations between the two countries.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1862.

To the SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I transmit to Congress a translation of an instruction to the minister of His Majesty the King of Italy accredited to this Government and a copy of a note to that minister from the Secretary of State relating to the settlement of the question arising out of the capture and detention of certain citizens of the United States, passengers on board the British steamer Trent, by order of Captain Wilkes, of the U. S. Navy.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

TURIN, January 21, 1862.

Chevalier BERTINATTI, Minister of Italy at Washington.

M. MINISTER: I have just received your dispatch of the 30th of December and thank you for the intelligence you give on the affair of the Trent.

I need not tell you with what satisfaction the Government and people of Italy have received the news of the happy solution of a question which for a moment put in doubt the peace of the world.

Attached by the closest ties of sympathy to the two nations which have so highly exalted in the two hemispheres the glory of the Anglo-Saxon race the royal Government was justly apprehensive of the consequences of the strife which might have arisen between England and North America.

Such strife in effect whatever the issue could have had only results adverse to civilization and to the general prosperity; it would have shaken confidence in the principle of self-government which serves as a common basis for the political institutions of the Anglo-Saxon race and have brought on if protracted complications from which the whole world would have suffered.

Moreover although we should in preference fix our attention on the questions which touch upon the accomplishment of the great work of Italian unity we were far from being indifferent to the discussion which had sprung up between America and England.

You are not ignorant, M. Minister, that the royal Government has always been attached to the principle of the freedom of the seas. At the congress of Paris it united with eagerness in the declaration of 30th of April, 1856, and hoped that that declaration as soon as it could have the assent of the United States of America would in time become the point of departure for fresh progress in the practical operation of international law. Knowing the bold and persevering efforts which the Government at Washington had made for fifty years past to defend the rights of neutrals we hesitated to believe that it desired to change its character all at once and become the champion of theories which history has shown to be calamitous and which public opinion has condemned forever.

By continuing to remain attached to principles whose defense has constituted one of the causes of the glory of North America Mr. Lincoln and his ministry have given an example of wisdom and moderation which will have the best results for America as well as for the European nations.

Be pleased then earnestly to felicitate in the name of the King's government the President and his ministry by giving if requested a copy of this dispatch.

Accept, M. Minister, the assurance of my very distinguished consideration,

RICASOLI.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 19, 1862.

Chevalier J. BERTINATTI, &c.

SIR: I have the President's directions to express to you the satisfaction he has derived from the dispatch which was addressed to you by Baron Ricasoli on the subject of the Trent affair a copy of which you so kindly put into my hands.

This Government after a full examination of the subject decided that it could not detain the persons taken from the Trent by Captain Wilkes without disavowing its own liberal interpretations of the law of maritime war. It rejoiced therefore in the accidental circumstance that had given it an opportunity to show the same devotion to the freedom of commerce as a belligerent that it has always before manifested as an interested neutral power. If at any time the Government had entertained doubts of the wisdom of its proceeding in the case they would all now disappear at once before the congratulations which it is receiving from the most generous and enlightened nations that have been passionless observers of the transaction. Among those nations while all have spoken with cordiality and without reserve none has spoken with truer magnanimity or more manifest sincerity and earnest sympathy than the Kingdom of Italy, the newest and most free of those nations founded upon the principle of the sovereignty of the people. Her utterance comes evidently from the very heart of a people who yet remember the sad experience how liberty is certainly lost through the loss of their national unity. Have the goodness, M. Bertinatti, to assure the Baron Ricasoli and through him the great and chivalrous Prince who reigns over Italy that their persuasions to the restoration of the American Union in its amplest constitutional proportions shall be early submitted to the American people. They will have more than ordinary prophetic weight as the voice of a nation that is risen from among the dead.

The American Government and people are unanimous in their wishes for the peace, prosperity and happiness of Italy.

Be pleased to accept, sir, the renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, March 4, 1862.*J. LOTHROP MOTLEY, Esq., &c., Vienna.

SIR: Your private and unofficial note of February 1* has been received though not until this very late day. In regard to the condition of our affairs in Europe it may perhaps upon the whole be considered fortunate that the Trent affair occurred, even with all its exasperations.

Passion is as natural a condition for nations as for individuals. Secession is a popular excitement, disturbance, passion. It must needs have occurred here, for this country has submitted itself to the counsels of prudence and reason in regard to the disputed points of administration as long as even so very practical a country as this is could submit. Human nature it is now seen could be content no longer. It was needful that the new popular passion should culminate before it could be expected to subside and to do this it must have time. As no one could tell how high the passion must rise so no one could tell how long it would require for culminating. The culmination would be the point of danger, the crisis. All other nations being in some sort related to us must be affected by the passion which disturbed us. The more intimately related the more profoundly they must be disturbed. Great Britain and France, most intimately related, must be the two States most vehemently excited. Excitement would rise later in those countries than here and would subside more rapidly. The culmination at home or abroad could be hastened or delayed by accidents.

The Trent affair was such an accident. It has served to bring on the crisis. The crisis has been reached and passed at home and of course abroad. Reason is beginning to regain its control here and with it the Government is beginning to recover its authority. We are having and we shall continue to have successes at home and so we may reckon on peace abroad.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, March 20, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: * * * I take it for granted that even in the midst of your engrossing occupations you find sufficient time to glance at the report of the debates in Parliament on subjects of interest to the United States, and more especially on international questions of rights on the ocean and blockade in time of war.

The most marked indication to be observed is the general sense of uneasiness at the change operated in the position of Great Britain as a maritime power by the enlargement gradually making of the privileges of neutral nations. Whilst on the opposition side you perceive a distinct disapproval of the agreement made in 1856 at Paris, there is equally perceptible among the ministers a disposition to seize the first opportunity to annul the obligations which it has been thought to impose. The remarks of Sir George Cornwall Lewis upon the effects of war upon the measure regarded merely as a treaty and not as new rules incorporated into the international law are full of significance. Lord Palmerston has been not inappropriately reminded of the difference between the tone of his speech at Liverpool in 1856 and of that in the late debate, whilst even Lord Russell is quoted as having expressed the opinion that some modification of the declaration of Paris would seem to be almost indispensable.

Such are the immediate effects of that which at first blush appeared to these enlightened gentlemen a great triumph in the case of the Trent. Such are the consequences of refusing to accept the adhesion of the United States to the declaration of Paris from an overzealous desire to escape the effects of a precipitate admission of belligerent rights. Both these events have brought vividly to their observation the consideration of the position of Great Britain in the contingency of a war on the ocean. Like the dog in the fable in snatching at the shadow they find they have lost the solid meat.

A conflict with the United States would as things are now at once transfer the whole carrying trade of Great Britain into the hands of the neutral nations of the continent of Europe. It is now becoming plain that without the additional provision first suggested by Mr. Marcy English interests on the sea are in great jeopardy in time of war, and yet that with the admission of it the control of the ocean is forever lost. Whichever way they look there is difficulty. Self-interest being the cardinal point of the policy they seek to pursue it is plain that the adoption of the declaration of Paris is a sacrifice of which they are beginning to repent.

Not the least remarkable among the admissions made in this debate is that which specifies the danger of a war with the United States in the event of a persistence in their former doctrine respecting the cargoes of neutral ships at the time of the contest with Russia as having been the main cause that prompted the concessions in that declaration. Thus it would seem that the idea of the growing power of the United States as one nation is everywhere present to their imagination as the great obstacle in the way of their continued domination of the sea. Can it be wondered at if under these circumstances the notion of a permanent separation of this power into two parts one of which can be played off against the other were not altogether unwelcome to their hearts?

To considerations of a similar kind are we indebted for the security that has been afforded to us in our present contest against interference with the blockade. That there has been and still is a very strong inclination in the country to get rid of it is unquestionable. That but for its unavoidable connection with possibilities of consequences in other and not very remote complications an attempt of the kind would have been made I am strongly inclined to believe. The argument that has overborne all these tendencies is drawn from the fear that such a step would only lead in the same direction with the preceding ones taken at Paris. It would ultimately deprive Britannia of her power longer to rule the waves. The entente cordiale with France is not yet hearty enough to make such a result altogether acceptable even to the fancy. Neither are the relations with Russia so friendly as to render a voluntary release of the main instrument to keep her in check a proposition to be entertained with favor. For these reasons no countenance will be given to any remonstrance against our blockade, neither will the general reasoning of Mr. Cobden in favor of limiting the right of blockade find much response among people in authority. Even the admissions rendered necessary to establish a position in reclaiming the rebel emissaries on board the Trent will be limited as far as may be to shut the door against further concessions.

It will then continue to depend upon the degree of concert established among those nations of the world which have ever upheld neutral rights whether any real advance be made in the recognized doctrines of international law or not, just as it has done in preceding times. Great Britain will concede only from a conviction that such a course is the safest for herself. The remedy for other countries is obvious. It is to unite in the labor of raising the obligations of specific contracts to the level of permanent international law and to enforce the observation of a consistent system of policy upon any single power whenever it may venture to set up the promptings of its immediate interest as the only rule of action it thinks proper to abide by.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

CONFEDERATE REPORTS, CORRESPONDENCE, ETC.

Resolution adopted by the Confederate Congress, February 13, 1861.

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That a commission consisting of three persons be appointed by the President as soon as practicable after his arrival to proceed without delay to Great Britain, France and other European powers, and to act under such instructions as may be given from time to time by him.

An Act of the Confederate Congress, approved February 27, 1861.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact :

SECTION 1. That the commissioners authorized and directed to be sent to Great Britain, France and the European powers shall each of them receive a compensation at the rate of $1,000 per month, to commence from the time of their departure on their mission and to terminate on their return to this Government.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That a secretary shall accompany said commissioners who shall receive under like condition a compensation at the rate of $300 per month.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, August 28, 1861.

Hon. HOWELL COBB, President of the Congress.

SIR: I hereby nominate for the advice and consent of the Congress the Hon. James M. Mason, of Virginia, to be commissioner to England, and the Hon. John Slidell, of Louisiana, to be commissioner to France.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE CONGRESS,
August 29, 1861.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you officially that on the 29th day of August instant (1861) the Congress did advise and consent to the nomination of James M. Mason, of Virginia, to be commissioner to England, and John Slidell, of Louisiana, to be commissioner to France.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. J. HOOPER,
Secretary of the Congress.

RICHMOND, August 29, 1861.

Hon. JOHN SLIDELL, New Orleans, La. :

You have been nominated and confirmed this day commissioner to France; Mr. Mason confirmed for England. The commissions are separate and distinct. When may we expect you? Telegraph me.

WM. M. BROWNE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Richmond, September 23, 1861.

Hon JAMES M. MASON, &c.

SIR: The President desires that you should proceed to London with as little delay as possible and place yourself as soon as you may be able to do so in communication with the Government. The events which have occurred since our commissioners had their first interview with Lord John Russell have placed our claims to recognition in a much stronger point of view; but in presenting the case once more to the British Government you ought again to explain the true position in which we appear before the world.

We are not to be viewed as revolted provinces or rebellious subjects seeking to overthrow the lawful authority of a common sovereign. Neither are we warring for rights of a doubtful character or such as are to be ascertained only by implication. On the contrary the Union from which we have withdrawn was founded upon the express stipulations of a written instrument which established a government whose powers were to be exercised for certain declared purposes and restricted within well defined limits. When a sectional and dominant majority persistently violated the covenants and conditions of that compact those States whose safety and well-being depended upon the performance of these covenants were justly absolved from all moral obligation to remain in such a Union. And when the Government of that Union instead of affording protection to their social system itself threatened not merely to disturb the peace and security of its people but also to destroy their social system the States thus menaced owed it to themselves and their posterity to withdraw immediately from a Union whose very bonds prevented them from defending themselves against such dangers.

Such were the causes which led the Confederate States to form a new Union to be composed of more homogeneous materials and interests. Experience has demonstrated to them that a Union of two different and hostile social systems under a Government in which one of them wielded nearly all the power was not only ill assorted but dangerous in the extreme to the weaker section whose scheme of society was thus unprotected.

Prompted by these teachings eleven sovereign States bound together by the tie of a common social system and by the sympathies of identical interests have instituted a new Confederacy and a new Government which they justly hope will be more harmonizing in its operations and more permanent in its existence. In forming this Government they seek to preserve their old institutions and to pursue through their new organic law the very ends and purposes for which as they believe the first was formed. It was because a revolution was sought to be made in the spirit and ends of the organic law of their first union by a dominant and sectional majority, operating through the machinery of a Government which was in their hands and placed there for different purposes, that the Confederate States withdrew themselves from the jurisdiction of such a Government and established another for themselves.

Their example therefore furnishes no precedent for the overthrow of the lawful authority of a regular Government by revolutionary violence; nor does it encourage a resort to factious tumult and civil war by irresponsible bodies of men. On the contrary their union has been formed through the regular action of the sovereign States composing the Confederacy, and it has established a Government competent to the discharge of all its civil functions and entirely responsible both in war and peace for all its actions.

Nor has that Government shown itself unmindful of the obligation which its people incurred whilst their States were members of the former Union. On the contrary one of their first acts was to send commissioners to the Government at Washington to adjust amicably all subjects of difference and to provide for a peaceable separation and a fair satisfaction of the mutual claims of the two Confederacies. These commissioners were not received and all offers of a peaceful accommodation were contemptuously rejected. The authority of our Government itself was denied, its people denounced as rebels and a war was waged against them which if carried on in the spirit it was proclaimed must be the most sanguinary and barbarous which has been known for centuries among civilized people.

The Confederate States have thus been forced to take up arms in defense of their right to self-government, and in the name of that sacred right they have appealed to the nations of the earth not for material aid or alliances offensive and defensive but for the moral weight which they would derive from holding a recognized place as a free and independent people. In asking for this they feel that they will not receive more than they will give in return and they offer as they think a full equivalent for any favor that may thus be granted them. Diplomatic relations are established mainly to protect human intercourse and to adjust peaceably the differences which spring from such intercourse or arise out of the conflicting interests of society. The advantages of such an intercourse are mutual and in general as between nations any one of them receives as much as it gives to say nothing of the well being of human society which is promoted by placing its relations under the protection and restraints of public law.

It would seem then that a new Confederacy asking to establish diplomatic relations with the world ought not to be required to do more than to present itself through a Government competent to discharge its civil functions and strong enough to be responsible for its actions to the other nations of the earth. After this is shown, the great interests of peace and the general good of society would seem to require that a speedy recognition should follow. It cannot be difficult to show in our case a strict compliance with these the just conditions of our recognition as an independent people. If we were pleading for favors we might ask and find more than one precedent in British history for granting the request that we be recognized for the sake of that sacred right of self-government for which we are this day in arms, and which we have been taught to prize by the teachings, the traditions and the example of the race from which we have sprung. But we do not place ourselves before the bar of nations to ask for favors; we seek for what we believe to be justice not only to ourselves, but justice to the great interests of peace and humanity. If the recognition of our independence must finally come, and if it be only a work of time, it seems to be the duty of each of the nations of the earth to throw the moral weight of its recognition into the scale of peace as soon as possible. For to delay will only be to prolong unnecessarily the sufferings of war.

If then our Government can be shown to be such as has been here described we shall place ourselves in the position of a people who are entitled to a recognition of their independence. The physical and moral elements of our Confederacy, its great but undeveloped capacities and its developed strength as proved by the history of the conflict in which we are now engaged ought to satisfy the world of the responsible character of the Government of the Confederate States. The eleven States now confederated together cover 733,144 square miles of territory and embrace 9,244,000 people. This territory—large enough to become the seat of an immense power—embraces not only all the best varieties of climate and production known to the temperate zone but also the great staples of cotton, tobacco, sugar and rice. It teems with resources both moral and physical of a great empire, and nothing is wanted but time and peace for their development. To these States there will probably be added hereafter Maryland, Missouri and Kentucky whose interests and sympathies must bind them to the South. If these are added the Confederate States will embrace 850,000 square miles of territory and 12,500,000 people to say nothing of the once common territories west of these States which will probably fall into the new Confederacy.

Is it to be supposed that such a people and with such resources can be subdued in war when subjugation is to be followed by such consequences as would result from their conquest? If such a supposition prevails anywhere it can find no countenance in the history of the contest in which we are now engaged. In the commencement of this struggle our enemies had in their possession the machinery of the old Government. The naval and for the most part the military establishments were in their hands. They had too most of the accumulated capital and nearly all the manufactories of arms, ordnance and of the necessities of life. They had all the means of striking us hard blows before we could be ready to return them. And yet in the face of all this we have instituted a Government and placed more than 200,000 men in the field with an adequate staff and commissariat. A still larger number of men are ready to take the field if it should become necessary, and experience has shown that the only limit to the disposition of the people to give what may be required for the war is to be found in their ability. The enemy with greatly superior numbers have been routed in pitched battles at Bethel and Manassas in Virginia, and their recent defeat at Springfield, Mo., was almost as signal as that of Manassas. The comparatively little foothold which they have had in the Confederate States is gradually being lost and after six months of war in which they employed their best resources it may truly be said they are much further from the conquest of the Southern States than they seemed to be when the struggle commenced.

The Union feeling which was supposed to exist largely in the South and which was known to us to be imaginary is now shown in the true light to all mankind. Never were any people more united than are those of the Confederate States in their purpose to maintain their independence at any cost of life and treasure; nor is there a party to be found anywhere in these States which professes a desire for a reunion with the United States. Nothing could prove this unanimity of feeling more strongly than the fact that this immense army may be said to have taken the field spontaneously and faster almost than the Government could provide for its organization and equipment. But the voluntary contributions of the people supplied all deficiencies until the Government could come to their assistance as it has done with the necessary military establishments. And what is perhaps equally remarkable it may be said with truth is that there has been no judicial execution for a political offense during the whole of the war and so far as military offenses are concerned our prisons would be empty were it not for a few captured spies.

Under these circumstances it would seem that the time has arrived when it would be proper in the Government of Great Britain to recognize our independence. If it be obvious that the Confederate States cannot be conquered in this struggle then the sooner the strife be ended the better for the cause of peace and the interests of mankind. Under such circumstances to fail to throw the great moral influence of such a recognition into the scale of peace when this may be done without risk or danger may be to share in the responsibility for the longer continuance of an unnecessary war. This is a consideration which ought perhaps to have some weight with a nation which leads so largely as does that of Great Britain in the progress of Christian civilization.

That the British people have a deep political and commercial interest in the establishment of the independence of the Confederate States must be obvious to all. Their real interest in that event is only a little less than our own. The great question of cotton supply which has occupied their attention so justly and so anxiously for some years past will then be satisfactorily settled. Whilst the main source of cotton production was in the hands of such a power as that of the late United States and controlled by those who were disposed to use that control to acquire the supremacy in navigation, commerce and manufactures over all rivals there was just cause for anxiety on the part of nations who were largely dependent upon this source of supply for the raw material of important manufactures. But the case will be far different when peace is conquered and the independence of the Confederate States is acknowledged.

Within these States must be found for years to come the great source of cotton supply. So favorable a combination of soil, climate and labor is nowhere else to be found. Their capacity for increased production has so far kept pace with the increased demand and in time of peace it promises to do so for a long time to come. In the question of the supply of this great staple there is a world-wide interest and if the nations of the earth could choose for themselves a single depository for such an interest perhaps none could be found to act so impartially in that capacity as the Confederacy of Southern States. Their great interest is and will be for a long time to come in the production and exportation of the important staples so much sought by the rest of the world.

It would be long before they would become the rivals of those who are largely concerned in navigation, manufactures and commerce. On the contrary these interests would make them valuable customers and bind them to the policy of free trade. Their early legislation which has thrown open their navigation, foreign and coasting, to the free competition of all nations and which has imposed the lowest duties on imports consistent with their necessary revenue wants proves the natural tendency of their commercial policy. Under such circumstances cotton to Great Britain would be as abundant, as cheap and as certain as if these States were themselves her colonies. The establishment of such an empire, committed as it would be to the policy of free trade by its interests and traditions, would seem to be a matter of primary importance to the progress of human industry and the great cause of human civilization. It would be of the deepest interest to such a Government to preserve peace and to improve its opportunities for the pursuit of the useful arts. The residue of the world would find here too sources of supply of more than one of the great staples in which manufactures and commerce are most deeply interested, and these sources would probably prove to be not only constant as being little likely to be troubled by the chances of war, but also of easy access to all who might desire to resort to them.

In presenting the great importance of this question to the Government of Great Britain in its connection with their material interests you will not omit its bearing upon the future political relations between the Old and the New World. With a balance of power established between the great confederacies on the North American continent the fears of a disturbance of the peace of the world from the desire for the annexation of contiguous territory on the part of a vast and overshadowing political and military organization will be dissipated. Under the former Union the slave-holding States had an interest in the acquisition of territory suitable to their institutions in order to establish a balance of power within the Government for their own protection. This reason no longer exists as the Confederate States have sought that protection by a separation from the Union in which their rights were endangered.

It is manifest from the nature of its interests that the Southern Confederacy in entering as a new member in the family of nations would exercise not a disturbing but a harmonizing influence on human society, for it would not only desire peace itself but to some extent become a bond of peace amongst others.

In offering these views to the Government of Great Britain you will be able to say with truth that you present a case precisely and entirely within the principles upon which it has acted since 1821—principles so well stated by Lord John Russell in his dispatches upon the Italian question that they cannot be better defined than in his own words. In his letter to Lord Cowley on the 15th of November, 1859, after adverting to the action of Great Britain in 1821 in regard to the declarations of the congresses of Troppan and Laybach; in 1823 in regard to the congress of Verona, and in 1825, 1827 and 1830 in the cases of the South American Republics; of Greece and Belgium, he says:

Thus in these five instances the policy of Great Britain appears to have been directed by a consistent principle. She uniformly withheld her consent to acts of intervention by force to alter the internal government of other nations; she uniformly gave her countenance and if necessary her aid to consolidate the de facto governments which arose in Europe or America.

To recognize the Confederate States as an independent power would be to give her countenance to consolidate a de facto government in America which is already supported by a force strong enough to defend it against all probable assaults. To withhold that recognition would certainly encourage the armed intervention of a Government now foreign to us for the purpose of altering the internal government of the Confederate States of America. In his letter of December 3, 1859, to Lord A. Loftus in regard to the controversy between Austria and her Provinces he says:

We at least are convinced that an authority restored by force of arms constantly opposed by the national wishes would afford no solid and durable basis for the pacification and welfare of Italy.

Is not this sentiment still more applicable to the contest now being waged between the United States and the Confederate States? Again in his dispatch of November 26, 1859, to Earl Cowley he declared that—

It would be an invidious task to discuss the reasons which in the view of the people of central Italy justified their acts. It will be sufficient to say that since the peace of 1815 Her Majesty's predecessors have recognized the separation of the Spanish colonies in South America from Spain, of Greece from the dominion of the Sultan and of Belgium from Holland. In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the reasons adduced in favor of these separations were not stronger than those which have been alleged at Florence, Parma, Modena and Bologna in justification of the course the people of those States have pursued.

Were the reasons alleged in the States of Florence, Parma, Modena and Bologna whose people are thus assumed to be the judges in a matter so nearly touching their happiness as their internal government at all stronger than those alleged by the people of the eleven sovereign States now confederated together for withdrawing from a Union formed by a voluntary compact upon conditions which were persistently violated and with covenants essential to their domestic repose openly threatened to be broken? But appended to this letter of instructions you will find more extended extracts* from the letters here referred to for your special reference.

There is yet another question of great practical importance to us and to the world which you will present on the first proper occasion to Her Britannic Majesty's Government. It was declared by the five great powers at the Conference of Paris that "blockades to be binding must be effectual"—a principle long since sanctioned by leading publicists and now acknowledged by nearly all civilized nations. You will be furnished with abundant evidence of the fact that the blockade of the coasts of the Confederate States has not been effectual nor of such a character as to be binding according to the declarations of the Conference of Paris. Such being the case it may perhaps be fairly urged that the five great powers owe it to their own consistency and to the world to make good a declaration thus solemnly made.

Propositions of such great importance and emanating from sources so high may be fairly considered as affecting the general business relations of human society and as controlling in a great degree the calculations and arrangements of nations so far as they are concerned in the rules thus laid down. Men have a right to presume that a law thus proclaimed will be universally maintained by those who have the power to do so and who have taken it upon themselves to watch over its execution, nor will any suppose that particular States or cases would be exempted from its operation under the influence of partiality or favor. If therefore we can prove the blockade to have been ineffectual we perhaps have a right to expect that the nations assenting to this declaration of the Conference of Paris will not consider it to be binding. We are fortified in this expectation not only by their own declarations but by the nature of the interests affected by the blockade.

So far at least it has been proved that the only certain and sufficient source of cotton supply has been found in the Confederate States. It is probable that there are more people without than within the Confederate States who derive their means of living from the various uses which are made of this important staple. A war therefore which shuts up this great source of supply from the general uses of mankind is directed as much against those who transport and manufacture cotton as against those who produce the raw material. Innocent parties who are thus effected insist that a right whose exercise operates so unfavorably on them shall only be used within the strictest limits of public law. Would it not be a movement more in consonance with the spirit of the age to insist that amongst the many efficient means of waging war this one should be excepted in deference to the general interests of mankind, so many of whom depend for their means of living upon a ready and easy access to the greatest and cheapest cotton market in the world? If for the general benefit of commerce some of its great routes have been neutralized so as to be unaffected by the chances of war might not another interest of a greater and more world-wide importance claim at least so much consideration as to demand the benefit of every presumption in favor of its protection against all the chances of war save those which arise under the strictest rules of public law?

This is a question of almost as much interest to the world at large as it is to the Confederate States. No belligerent can claim the right thus to injure innocent parties by such a blockade except to the extent that it can be shown to furnish the legitimate or perhaps we might go still further and say the necessary means to prosecute the war successfully. If it has become obvious as would now seem to be the case that no blockade which they can maintain will enable the United States to subdue the Confederate States of America upon what plea can its further continuance be justified to third parties who are so deeply interested in a ready and easy access to the cheapest and most abundant sources of cotton supply? Perhaps we had the right to expect inasmuch as by the proclamation of Her Britannic Majesty neutrality had been declared as between the belligerents that one of the parties would not have been allowed to close the ports of the other by a mere proclamation of blockade without an adequate force to sustain it.

In presenting the various views contained in this letter of instructions you will say that they are offered as much in the general interests of mankind as in our own. We do not ask for assistance to enable us to maintain our independence against any power which has yet assailed us. The President of the Confederate States believes that he cannot be mistaken in supposing it to be the duty of the nations of the earth by a prompt recognition to throw the weight of their moral influence against the unnecessary prolongation of the war.

Whether the case now presented be one for such action he is perhaps not the most impartial judge. He has discharged his duty to other nations when he has presented to their knowledge the facts to which their only sure access is through himself in such a manner as will enable them to acquit themselves of their responsibilities to the world according to their own sense of right. But whilst he neither feels nor affects an indifference to the decision of the world upon these questions which deeply concern the interests of the Confederate States he does not present their claim to a recognized place amongst the nations of the earth from a belief that any such recognition is necessary to enable them to achieve and secure their independence. Such an act might diminish the sufferings and shorten the duration of an unnecessary war but with or without it he believes that the Confederate States under the guidance of a kind and overruling Providence will make good their title to freedom and independence and to a recognized place amongst the nations of the earth.

When you are officially recognized by the British Government and diplomatic relations between the two countries are thus fully established you will request an audience of Her Majesty for the purpose of presenting your letters accrediting you as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Confederate States near Her Majesty, and in that capacity you are empowered to negotiate such treaties as the mutual interests of both countries may require, subject of course to the approval of the President and the co-ordinate branch of the treaty-making power.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

R. M. T. HUNTER,

Secretary of State, Confederate States of America.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Richmond, September 23, 1861.

Hon. JOHN SLIDELL, &c.

SIR: Along with this you will receive your letter of credence to the Government of France to which the President desires you to present yourself as soon as possible. Our claims for recognition as an independent people have been made much stronger by events which have occurred since they were first presented by our commissioners.

But before re-enforcing those claims you will not fail to place the Confederate States in their true position before the Government of France. You will show that they are not to be considered as revolted provinces or rebellious subjects seeking to overthrow by revolutionary violence the just authority of a lawful sovereign, but on the contrary they stand before the world as organized parties maintaining their right to self-government with sufficient strength to make good their claim and so organized as to be morally and politically responsible for their actions. Their first Union was formed by a compact between sovereign and independent States upon covenants and conditions expressly stipulated in a written instrument called the Constitution. In that union the States constituted the units or integers, and were bound to it only because the people of each of them acceded to it in their separate capacities through the acts of their representatives.

That confederacy was designed to unite under one Government two great and diverse social systems under one or the other of which all the States might be classified. As these two social systems were unequally represented in the common Government it was sought to protect one against a warfare which might be waged by the other through the forms of law by carefully defined restrictions and limitations upon the power of the majority in the common Government. Without such restrictions and limitations it is known historically that the union could not have been formed originally. But the dominant majority which at last proved to be sectional in its character not only used the machinery of a Government which they wielded to plunder the minority through unequal legislation in the shape of protective tariffs and appropriations made for their own benefit, but proceeding from step to step they waged through the forms of law a war upon the social system of the slave-holding States and threatened when fully armed with political power to use the Government itself to disturb the domestic peace of those States.

Finding that the covenants and conditions upon which the Union was formed were not only persistently violated but that the common Government itself then entirely in the hands of a sectional majority was to be used for the purposes of warring upon the domestic institutions which it was bound by express stipulations to protect, eleven of the slave-holding States felt it to be due to themselves to withdraw from a union when the conditions upon which it was formed either had been or were certainly about to be violated. They were thus compelled to withdraw from a Government which not only abdicated its duty to protect the domestic institutions of fifteen States, but on the one hand threatened those institutions with war and on the other withheld from the people interested in them the means of self-defense. The eleven Confederate States were thus forced in self-defense to abandon a Union whose ends were thus perverted, not from any passion of novelty or from any change of purpose, but to attain under a new Confederacy of more homogeneous materials and interests the very ends and objects for which the first was formed. It was amongst the first of these objects to obtain a Government whose authority should rest upon the assent of the governed and whose action should represent also their will.

It was for the sacred right of self-government that they had been forced to take up arms and not to escape the just obligations incurred under the compact upon which the first Union was formed. On the contrary one of the first acts of the Government of the Confederate States was to send commissioners to the President of the United States to adjust amicably and fairly all questions of property and responsibility which had been jointly acquired or incurred by all the States when embraced in the same Union. The Government of the United States refused to receive these commissioners, the authority of their Government was denied, their people were denounced as rebels and threatened with coercion at the point of the sword.

On the part of the Confederate States the war in its inception was one of self defense, and it has been waged since by them with no other end than to maintain their right to self-government. It is in the name of the sacred right of self-government that the Confederate States appear before the tribunal of the nations of the earth and submit their claims for a recognized place amongst them. They approach his Imperial Majesty of France with the more confidence as he has lately championed this great cause in the recent Italian question so much to the glory of himself and the great people over whom he rules. In asking for this recognition the Government of the Confederate States believes that it seeks for no more than it offers in return.

The establishment of diplomatic relations between nations tends to the protection of human intercourse by affording the means of a peaceful solution of all difficulties which may arise in its progress, and by facilitating a mutual interchange of good offices for the purpose of maintaining and extending it. In this all nations have an interest, and the advantages of such an intercourse are mutual and reciprocal. The only preliminary conditions to the recognition of a nation seeking an acknowledged place in the world would seem to be the existence of a sufficient strength within the Government to support and maintain it, and such a social and political organization as will secure its responsibility for its international obligations. It will be easy to show that the Government of the Confederate States of America is fully able to meet the requisitions of these tests.

When we look to the undeveloped capacities as well as to the developed strength of the Confederate States we cannot doubt that they are destined to become the seat of a great empire at no distant day. The eleven Confederate States already comprise 733,144 square miles of territory, with a population of 9,244,000 people. If to this we add the three States of Maryland, Missouri and Kentucky, all of which will probably find themselves constrained as well by interest as by inclination to unite their fortunes with the Confederate States, then these will embrace a territory of 850,000 square miles with a population of 12,500,000 people. This estimate excludes a large territory not yet organized into States and which in the end will probably fall into the Southern Confederacy.

The territory of the Confederate States as they now stand embraces all the best varieties of climate and production known to the temperate zone. In addition to this it produces the great staples of cotton, sugar, tobacco and rice, to say nothing of naval stores which are now exported from it and of provisions which it is capable of producing in excess of the wants of its people. This vast region already enjoys through its rivers a great system of water communication and 8,844 miles of railroad running for the most part transversely to these rivers diversify and multiply the channels of commerce to such an extent as to promise a speedy development of the vast resources of the new empire. If peace were now established it is not extravagant to suppose that the exports of the Confederate States would within a year reach the value of $250,000,000. With a crop of 4,500,000 or perhaps even 5,000,000 bales of cotton, most of which would be exported, together with its tobacco, sugar, rice and naval stores, it would easily send abroad the value just named.

But without reference to its undeveloped capacities you may show that they have exhibited strength enough to maintain their independence against any power which has as yet assailed them. The United States commenced this struggle with vast odds in their favor. The military and naval establishments were in their hands; they were also in possession of the prestige and machinery of an old and established Government. Many of the forts and strongholds of the Confederate States were in their hands; they have most of the accumulated wealth of the country and nearly all the manufactories of the munitions of war, and even of the necessities of life. Add to all these advantages the greater population of that Union, and it is easy to see that the self-supporting power of the new Confederacy has been exposed to the severest tests and rudest trials.

And yet the Confederate armies have conquered in every pitched battle, and that with great odds against them. At Bethel and Manassas, in Virginia, and at Springfield, in Missouri, the U. S. troops have been routed at great loss and without dispute. The foothold which the U. S. troops at first acquired within the Confederate States is being rapidly lost, and the United States Government has given manifest evidence of its fears that its seat of Government may be wrested from it. This exhibition of strength on the part of the Confederate States which was so unexpected by its enemies proves that its morale is greater even than its physical resources for the purposes of this struggle.

Without an army and with a new Government whose necessary establishments were all to be formed in the midst of a civil war the Confederate States not only manifested their military superiority in the first pitched battles, but have already placed more than 200,000 men in the field who are armed, equipped and regularly supplied by the necessary establishments. These sprang into existence almost by the spontaneous efforts of the people, and came into the field faster even than the Government could prepare for them. But voluntary contributions and aid supplied all deficiencies until the necessary military establishments were formed. It would seem then that the new Confederacy has given all the evidence in proof of its power to maintain its independence which could reasonably be asked. That its organization is such as to insure its responsibility for the discharge of international duties will also appear upon an impartial examination of the question.

The action of the Confederate States in their separation from the old Union presents within itself the evidence of their persistency of purpose, and affords a guaranty for the stability of their institutions so far as these may be dependent upon their own will. They have preserved the same form of Government which their forefathers established, with the exception of such changes alone as would make its machinery more suitable for the ends and purposes for which it was created. It was not to change but to preserve the ends and purposes for which the original Constitution was adopted that they separated from a Union which had ceased to respect them. They have neither changed their form of government nor the objects for which it was framed; they have only changed the parties to the Confederacy to secure a faithful execution of the compact upon which alone they were willing to unite. The former Union had failed to accomplish its original ends for the want of a homogeneous character in the parties to it; and having left it for that cause there can be no reason to expect its reconstruction with the same discordant elements whose jarring had destroyed it before.

The whole course then of the Confederate States argues a consistency of purpose and promises a stability for the government which they have formed which together with the resources already exhibited by them give a reasonable assurance of their entire responsibility for the discharge of all their duties and obligations, domestic and international. A people who present themselves under such circumstances for a recognized place amongst nations would seem to be entitled to the grant of such a request. They do not seek for material aid or assistance or for alliances, defensive and offensive. They ask nothing which can endanger the peace or prosperity of those who may grant it. They desire only to be placed in a position in which their intercourse with the rest of the world may be conducted with the sanction of public law and under the protection of agents whose authority is recognized by nations. They seek the moral influence which the act of recognition may give them and nothing more. If it be manifest that the war of conquest now waged against them cannot succeed then the act of recognition is a mere question of time. If the fact be as stated the tendency of the act of recognition would be to prevent the further continuance of an unnecessary war and the useless effusion of blood. It may well be doubted if under such circumstances the nation which thus refuses to throw the moral weight of its influence in the scale of peace does not share in some of the responsibilities for the continuance of an unnecessary war which it might have done something to conclude without risk or injury to itself.

Indeed it may be said without exaggeration that France has a deep material and political interest in the establishment of the independence of the Confederate States. It is the event of all others which would give the most satisfactory solution to the great question of cotton supply for the manufacturing nations of Europe. That the great source of the production of this raw material which enters so largely into the manufacturing industry of Europe has been found in the Confederate States of America is an undoubted fact. That this will continue to be the case for a long time to come is in every way probable, for no other country presents the same combination of soil, climate and trained labor which is all essential to the successful production of cotton.

If our country is to be the great source for the supply of this article so indispensable to the manufacturing industry of the world the nations of the earth have the deepest interest in placing it in a position of independence and impartiality in regard to the distribution of the raw material for which the demand is so immense. If any one country is to have a virtual monopoly of the supply of raw cotton then the world would have the deepest interest in opening it to the easy and equal access of all mankind. Such would be the case if the depository of this great interest should be found in a country on the one hand strong enough to maintain its neutrality and independence and on the other committed by its interests to the policy of free trade and an untrammelled intercourse with all the world.

Such would be the precise position of the Confederate States when once their independence was achieved, and as a proof that this would be the natural tendency of their policy we have only to look to their early legislation which reduced the duties on imports to the lowest rate consistent with their necessities for revenue and opened their coasting trade to the free and equal competition of all mankind. Nor is cotton the only great staple of which the Confederate States are likely to become not the sole but one of the chief depositories upon terms of equality to all the world. Tobacco, sugar, rice and naval stores are to be added to the catalogue of their rich and important products. Nature has thus made it to their interest to buy where they can purchase cheapest and to sell in as many markets as possible. To do this, as they will deal more in raw produce than in manufactures, they will seek to take in return the commodities of the rest of the world on the payment of the lowest duties consistent with their revenue wants. They will then virtually stand as the customers and not as the rivals of the commercial and manufacturing nations of Europe.

But there is another point of view in which the independence of the Confederate States would more peculiarly interest France. The immense development of her navy in a few years past has shown not only that her capacity of asserting her equality on the seas has not been properly appreciated heretofore, but also that this relative capacity has been increased by the use of steam. In this view the further development of her commercial marine and an easy access to a cheap and certain supply of coal, iron and naval stores have become matters of primary importance to her. The commerce of the Confederate States when disembarassed of the enormous protective tariffs to which it was subjected under the former Union, together with the almost inexhaustible supply of cheap coal, iron and naval stores which it could furnish, present the means of a further and vast development of the commercial and naval marine of France.

She could then find as cheap ships or as cheap raw material for the building of ships as could be commanded by any European nation. Depots of coal for her steam marine in these States could be made at less cost and be of more convenient access for use on a large portion of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans than if they had been found originally in mines in France. That these are no new considerations for the French Government is shown by the interest which it exhibited in the negotiations by which a French company would have secured the great water line in Virginia through which when completed the richest and most inexhaustible supplies of bituminous coal perhaps to be found in the world would have been transported from its native depositories in the West to the shores of the Chesapeake in the East. Nothing but the occurrence of civil war prevented the completion of this arrangement between this French company and the Virginia Legislature by which France would have secured a certain and almost inexhaustible supply of cheap coal, iron and timber.

All this is fully stated in regard to the resources of Virginia in a letter of Alfred Paul, French consul at Richmond, to M. Thouvenel, minister of foreign affairs, France, dated June 5, 1860, and as it may be well to recall the attention of the Government to it a copy will be sent you. In the enumeration of the resources of Virginia which would be thus open to France he says: "In coal and iron Virginia excels all the other States of the Union. The fact is recognized, admitted."

He thus specifies the advantages which France would derive from the proposed connection which was about to be formed with Virginia:

First. Facilities for obtaining the raw materials in France at first hand and cheaper, which would enable French industry to encounter foreign competition with superior advantages. Second. A considerable diminution in the expenses of the purchase and expedition of tobacco for the government factories. Third. The arrival, the introduction of our produce by a shorter and cheaper route into the South, the West and the center of the United States. Fourth. A relative augmentation in the movement of our commercial marine. Fifth. Rapid and advantageous provisions of copper, machine oil, tar, bacon and salt pork of the West, and building timber for our naval arsenals. Sixth. Cheapness of coal for our different maritime stations. Seventh. An immense opening in the great West of the United States for French merchandise. Eighth. The probability of seeing Norfolk become an entrepôt for the productions of French industry and commerce to be distributed in part in Central and South America by vessels taking them to complete their cargoes.

The establishment of the independence of the Confederate States would secure to France large supplies of coal, iron and naval stores in exchange for her manufactures and other products beyond almost all the probable chances of war. Committed as these Confederate States would be to the policy of free trade by their interests and traditions they would naturally avoid war and seek for peace with all the world. It may almost be said that to secure the independence of these States is to secure the independence of the great commercial and manufacturing nations of Europe in regard to the supplies of cotton and tobacco and to give France such an independent source for the supply of cheap coal, iron and naval stores as to place her more nearly on terms of equality with Great Britain in building up a navy and merchant marine.

The European nations might then be said to be independent so far as their supplies are concerned because they would be dependent only on a country whose interests would open its markets to the cheapest and easy access of all the world, and which would have every inducement to preserve the peace. But the independence of these States is essential to the certainty of supply and the ease of access to their markets, which are so important to the manufacturing and commercial nations of the earth. If it were possible for the United States to subdue the Confederates and subject them once more to their Government then France would have much cause for apprehension in regard to the future condition of her commerce and manufactures. The non-slaveholding States would undoubtedly use their control over the markets and staples of the South to secure a supremacy in commerce, navigation and manufactures.

There are also political considerations connected with this question which cannot be uninteresting to the Government of France. By the establishment of a great Southern Confederacy a balance of power is secured in North America, and schemes of conquest or annexation on the part of a great and overshadowing empire would probably no longer disturb the repose of neighboring nations.

Heretofore the South has desired the annexation of territory suitable to the growth of her domestic institutions in order to establish a balance of power within the Government that they might protect their interests and internal peace through its agency. This reason no longer exists, as the Confederate States have sought that protection by a separation from the union in which their rights were endangered. But with the establishment of something like a balance of power between the two great and independent confederacies the disputes would precede the annexations and probably do much to prevent them.

Certain it is that the Southern Confederacy would have every reason to preserve peace both at home and abroad, and would be prevented both by its principles and interests from intervention in the domestic affairs and government of other nations. The power of that Confederacy would undoubtedly be felt not as a disturbing but as a harmonizing influence amongst the nations of the earth.

There is yet another question of great practical importance to us and to the world which you will present on the first proper occasion to His Imperial Majesty's Government. It was declared by the five great powers at the Conference of Paris that "blockades to be binding must be effectual," a principle long since sanctioned by leading publicists and now acknowledged by nearly all civilized nations.

You will be furnished with abundant evidence of the fact that the blockade of the coasts of the Confederate States has not been effectual or of such a character as to be binding, according to the declaration of the Conference at Paris. Such being the case it may perhaps be fairly urged that the five great powers owe it to their own consistency and to the world to make good a declaration thus solemnly made. Propositions of such gravity and emanating from sources so high may fairly be considered as affecting the general business relations of human society, and as controlling in a great degree the calculations and arrangements of nations so far as they are concerned in the rules thus laid down. Men have a right to presume that a law thus proclaimed will be uniformly enforced by those who have the power to do so, and who have taken it upon themselves to watch over its execution; nor will any suppose that particular States or cases would be exempted from its operation under the influence of partiality or favor.

If therefore we can prove the blockade to have been ineffectual we perhaps have a right to expect that the nations assenting to this declaration of the Conference at Paris will not consider it to be binding. We are fortified in this expectation, not only by their own declaration, but by the nature of the interests affected by the blockade. So far at least it has been proved that the only certain and sufficient source of cotton supply has been found in the Confederate States. It is probable that there are more people without than within the Confederate States who derive their means of living from the various uses which are made of this important staple. A war therefore which shuts up this great source of supply from the general uses of mankind is directed as much against those who transport and manufacture cotton as against those who produce the raw material. Innocent parties who are thus affected may well insist that a right whose exercise operates so unfavorably on them shall only be used within the strictest limits of public law. Would it not be a movement more in consonance with the spirit of the age to insist that amongst the many efficient means of waging war this one should be excepted in deference to the general interests of mankind, so many of whom depend for their means of living upon a ready and easy access to the greatest and cheapest cotton market of the world? If for the general benefit of commerce some of its great routes have been neutralized so as to be unaffected by the chances of war might not another interest of a greater and more world-wide importance claim at least so much consideration as to demand the benefit of every presumption in favor of its protection against all the chances of war, save those which arise under the strictest rules of public law?

This is a question of almost as much interest to the world at large as it is to the Confederate States. No belligerent can claim the right thus to injure innocent parties by such a blockade except to the extent that it can be shown to furnish the legitimate, or perhaps we might go still further and say the necessary, means to prosecute the war successfully. If it has become obvious as would now seem to be the case that no blockade which they can maintain will enable the United States to subdue the Confederate States of America upon what plea can its further continuance be justified to third parties who are so deeply interested in a ready and easy access to the cheapest and most abundant sources of cotton supply?

In representing the various views contained in this letter of instructions you will say that they are offered as much in the general interests of humanity as in our own. We do not ask for assistance to enable us to maintain our independence against any power which has yet assailed us. The President of the Confederate States believes that he cannot be mistaken in supposing it to be the duty of the nations of the earth by a prompt recognition to throw the weight of their moral influence against the unnecessary prolongation of the war.

Whether the case now presented be one for such action he is perhaps not the most impartial judge. He has acquitted himself of his duty to other nations when he has presented to their knowledge the facts to which their only sure access is through himself in such a manner as will enable them to acquit themselves of their responsibilities to the world according to their own sense of right. But whilst he neither feels nor affects an indifference to the decision of the world upon these questions which deeply concern the interests of the Confederate States he does not present their claims to a recognized place amongst the nations of the earth from the belief that any such recognition is necessary to enable them to achieve and secure their independence.

Such an act might diminish the sufferings and shorten the duration of an unnecessary war, but with or without it he believes that the Confederate States under the guidance of a kind and overruling Providence will make good their title to freedom and independence and to a recognized place amongst the nations of the earth.

When you are officially recognized by the French Government and diplomatic relations between the two countries are thus fully established you will request an audience of His Imperial Majesty for the purpose of presenting your letters accrediting you as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Confederate States near His Imperial Majesty, and in that capacity you are empowered to negotiate such treaties as the mutual interests of both countries may require, subject of course to the approval of the President and the co-ordinate branch of the treaty-making power.

Three steamers and a sloop-of-war now blockading the harbor. Two of the steamers, frigates, arrived in the last twenty-four hours. It is thought thus an even chance of success. We shall accordingly take the route through Texas to Matamoras, Mexico, unless otherwise directed. Reply at once and if the change of route is acceded to request the Secretary of War to direct officers of the army on the route to give all facilities of transportation. Write to New Orleans.

500 tons. Can go at any time and by any route to Nassau or Havana. Offered at $62,000, or chartered to either port at $10,000 for the trip. Owners to pay all expenses; Government to pay value if captured. Will be very useful for coast defense. We will go at once in her if authorized and think the charter price may be reduced one-half. CHARLESTON, October 5, 1861.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: It seems due to ourselves and to the occasion that you should be informed fully of the causes of delay, with the difficulties attending our expected departure from this port. The confidence of success expressed by those in charge of the subject when we left Richmond seems to have been based on the state of facts then and perhaps for sometime previously existing in regard to the blockade. There had been it appears but two ships off the harbor, generally a steam frigate and sloop-of-war, and the expectation was that going out at night through the main channel we might elude observation, or if disappointed in that could escape through the speed of our ship.

For a day or two after our arrival the tide did not serve for departure at night; then there came strong winds at night which although they drove the squadron out to sea by reason of the surf created on the bar prevented our passing over it. Before this obstacle ceased the squadron reappeared with the addition of another steamer—a clipper-built propeller—and from her trim and appearance apparently a fast ship. It was then projected to make the attempt through the Maffitt Channel though without the full sanction of the pilots, and this I believe we should have attempted but for the appearance at that time of another steam frigate, thus making the squadron to consist of three steamers besides the sloop-of-war. Such sudden and unusual accessions to the blockade of the port made us infer (as a high probability at least) that our presence here and purpose had reached the enemy and was the cause of the unusual preparation we witnessed. Mr. Slidell had determined to send his family back, and after full consideration of the whole case we could see no alternative but to take the route through Mexico, and so advised you by telegraph accordingly.

Whilst awaiting your reply the plan was suggested which was the subject of our telegram last night. There is a steamer belonging to this port and owned here called the Gordon now and for some time past under charter to the Government for harbor service at (as we are told) $200 per day. She is something more than 500 tons burden and was used as a coasting packet, crossing occasionally to Havana. After the war [began] she was strengthened and refitted to be used as a privateer and was so used for a short time, having now on board three rifled cannon. Her speed [is] equal to fifteen knots per hour and may be increased to sixteen, and of so light a draft of water that she can pass the bar at any time and is not confined to the channel ways.

This account of the steamer we get from gentlemen here long acquainted with her and only interested to serve our cause. She is used every night to reconnoiter the enemy, going safely out to sea where they lie and keeping only out of reach of their guns. In the last two days she has done the same thing in the daytime, having on board Captains Ingraham and Pegram with other officers of the Nashville, and accompanied yesterday by Mr. Slidell with two of the young ladies of his family. They approached then within less than three miles of the squadron and were not molested, the steamers remaining at anchor. The squadron has become so familiar with the nightly and occasionally daily proximity of this boat of whose speed they are fully aware that her presence does not disturb them had they cared to give her chase.

The naval officers here do not doubt that this steamer can run the blockade successfully day or night and if pursued cannot be overtaken. She can take a supply of coal for six or seven days without impairing her speed and make the run successfully to Nassau or Havana as may be decided on. Communicating with her owners, she is offered for sale at $62,000, the alleged cost to them, or for charter at $10,000 for the trip to either of the ports named, the owners to bear all the expenses of the trip, reserving the privilege of bringing back some $7,000 worth of cigars and other light articles. Mr. Trenholm, known at the State Department as an enlightened and patriotic merchant here, and to whom we are much indebted for his valuable counsels and aid, says that this charter money may be reduced probably one-half upon this privilege of return cargo and to effect which (should the Government determine to charter) he will lend his aid and co-operation.

I should add that in conversation yesterday in presence of Captains Ingraham and Pegram they agreed that the steamer Gordon if purchased would be a very valuable acquisition for coast defense. The present armament is of good caliber—one a large pivot gun, apparently a 32-pounder, though unfortunately I did not make minute inquiry when on board. She is also amply furnished with small-arms as a privateer.

I have thought this explanation due that you may have the facts, and we be relieved of any apparent vacillation of purpose. It remains only to add that come what may if sanctioned by the Government we will embark at once in the Gordon and doubt not can make the voyage successfully; otherwise no alternative would seem to remain but the route through Mexico with its attendant difficulties and delays.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

J. M. MASON.

P. S.—I have read the foregoing to Mr. Slidell, who concurs in its statements.

I omitted to state that on yesterday morning five ships were present off the harbor, the fifth being a steamer.

CHARLESTON, October 9, 1861.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: By telegram yesterday* I informed you that pursuant to the authority* given us by the State Department we have chartered the steamer Gordon for our transportation either to Nassau or Havana.

The terms of the charter-party are for the consideration of $10,000 the ship is to go to either of those ports or to both, at our option, with a clause reserving the right to extend the voyage to any other of the West India Islands at the price of $500 per day for the extra service. We do not expect to have occasion for this latter service, but thought it best to provide for it in the possible contingency of its becoming necessary to go to Saint Thomas or other island to meet the British steamer. It is thought here by those well informed that the Gordon is not sufficiently a sea boat for the more distant island of Bermuda.

* Not found.

Mr. Trenholm, of the firm of Frazer & Co., agrees to pay $5,000 of the charter money for the benefit of the return cargo space not reserved by the owners; thus should we not extend the voyage beyond Havana (which is not anticipated) the cost to the Government will be but $5,000. All expenses of every kind are to be borne by the owners.

Since the arrangement was made they have been busily engaged in putting her in complete order for sea and we fully expect to get off to-morrow night. Her light draft will enable her to go at any time, and by hugging close to shore will be enabled to escape the observation of the enemy's squadron. Our plan is in such way as may be found most safe and practicable to get on board one of the British steamers of the mail line between the West Indies and England. The Gordon is too fast to be overtaken at sea. Since this change of arrangement we have seen nothing to dissatisfy us with it as the best that could be adopted.

The Nashville we understand is under orders from the Navy Department to sail immediately and will probably endeavor to get off to-night. If the enemy are found in the position they occupy by day the chances are very large that she must pass within reach of their guns. In such event her only hope of safety is that she may not be seen, or if seen may not be hit. Against the latter risk her speed is much relied on.

You will of course be advised promptly when we are off.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

J. M. MASON.

SIR: We have the honor to send to you herewith the charter-party we have made with owners of steamer Gordon in conformity with your telegraphic instructions; also a letter* from Messrs. Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER:

Our friends left here last night at 1 o'clock. A fast steamer, good officers and very dark night with heavy rain. The guard-boat reported that they crossed the bar about 2 o'clock and that they could neither have been seen nor heard by the fleet. A strong northwest wind helped them and the fleet this morning seems not to have changed position at all.

As soon as we hear further I will telegraph. The steamer ought to be back in about a week and nothing said until her return. Communicate to Mrs. Mason.

CARDENAS, CUBA, *October 18, 1861.*Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the pleasure to apprise you of our safe arrival on the 16th instant at this port. We left Charleston at 1 a. m. on Saturday, 12th, as I told you we should do in my letter from there of the preceding day. Fortunately a rain came on at the moment of our departure which increasing the darkness the better enabled us to elude the blockading squadron.

We passed (as the captain reported) within a mile and a half of the nearest ship, the squadron then consisting of three steamers and a sloop-of-war (a sailing vessel). We could see their lights apparently not distant, but presume we escaped observation as we could see or hear no movement of the squadron. After we had passed them some three or four miles abandoning the coast we put directly out to sea and by the outer passage made direct for Nassau.

Off that port we learned from the pilots who came on board that there was no steam or other regular communication thence to Saint Thomas, the point of departure of the British steam line. We did not land therefore or cast anchor but put off at once for the Island of Cuba. I should have added that we reached Nassau about 4 p. m. on Monday.

At sea off the harbor of Cardenas we met with a small Spanish war steamer when we raised the Confederate flag and asked to speak them. Our salutation (by dipping our flag) as the vessels approached each other was courteously returned and the Spaniard laid to. Mr. Slidell, with Mr. Eustis, went on board, and on his return reported that he was received with great kindness and civility. We had been somewhat detained in finding our way over the shoal water of the Bahama Banks, and it being doubtful whether the coal remaining would take us to Havana it was determined to put into this port, the Spanish steamer kindly volunteering to attend and show us the way. We cast anchor off the town about 2 p. m., but our papers of clearance, &c., being directed to Havana, and there being some difficulty in getting the authorities together we did not effect a landing until the next day (yes-terday). The custom-house officers, however, were civil and attentive, and as soon as the local governor could be appealed to he dispensed with all formalities, and ourselves and baggage landed without further difficulty or inspection.

I regret to say, however, that we shall have no steamer hence to Saint Thomas until November 9. The steamer for Cadiz once a month departed on its voyage from Havana the day of our arrival here. We shall thus be detained at Cuba some three weeks. The island is said to be healthy. We shall go to Havana or its neighborhood in a day or two and remain thereabouts until the time for our departure. We found a few Yankee vessels in port here, and learned that some of the captains loudly expressed their dissatisfaction at our being escorted into port by a Spanish man-of-war.

The Governor with some of the principal gentlemen of the town have called on and proffered us every attention, and so far as we can gather opinions from conversation and on the streets the sympathies of the people are entirely with us. I would not omit to add that a Mr. Casanova, an acquaintance of Mr. Slidell, and who married a Virginia lady, learning at his plantation by a dispatch sent from here of our arrival came immediately to town by a ride of thirty miles on horseback and cordially and urgently invited our entire party to visit him at his plantations, both of sugar and coffee, and become his guests during our stay on the island; and as further evidence of his kindness or sympathy, as may be, has arranged a special train of cars to take such of the party as can go there to-morrow. Mr. Slidell and his family and I will go for a few days.

At Havana we shall endeavor to gather such information as may be useful to the Government as regards the disposition of the authorities and the people, and transmit it thence by such opportunity as may be presented.

We think that our successful departure from Charleston, leaving the Nashville still there, will best vindicate the course we adopted in recommending to the Government the charter of the smaller steamer. From our experience in the matter and knowing how closely the port was watched we have every reason to congratulate ourselves on the result. The steamer that brought us under her new name of Theodora after replenishing her coal here proceeded on her way to Havana, and I shall send this dispatch to meet her there, and I hope to be safely taken by her to you.

We sent you from Charleston the charter-party with her owners, and with it the engagement of the house of Frazer & Co. to pay $5,000 for the privilege of freighting her home from Havana, all which we hope will be acceptable to the Government. Writing you thus fully Mr. Slidell requests me to say that he has considered it unnecessary to write separately, but that he will do so from Havana. I am gratified to add that notwithstanding the excessive heat all of our large party remain in good health. Thermometer from 96° to 98°.

With great respect, and very truly, yours,

J. M. MASON.

P. S.—Pardon the defaced condition of this sheet. It is the remaining one of the stock I brought with me.

U. S. SHIP SAN JACINTO,
Off the Capes of Virginia, November 15, 1861.

MY VERY DEAR WIFE: The date of this will show you that we have been captured, and on the way to New York the ship will put in for coal into Hampton Roads. Captain Wilkes has been good enough to say that he would give this to the officer at Fort Monroe to take its chance of being sent to Norfolk by any flag of truce that may offer. We left Havana on the 7th instant on board a British mail steamer bound for England, and on the next day this ship fell in with us at sea and Captain Wilkes, the commander, it seems felt himself authorized to demand us from the English captain and here we are.

As to all questions arising from the circumstances attending the capture it would not become me to discuss them here as my letter will of course pass under inspection. Messrs. Eustis, Slidell, Macfarland and myself were taken. The ladies proceeded on the voyage to England. Of course there will be all sorts of speculations in the newspapers concerning our capture and its consequences but I have only to say, my dear wife, that you should not permit your mind to be affected by them, and draw no other inference from my silence concerning them except that I of necessity write under constraint. In the meantime I assure you and our dear ones at home that I was never in better health in my life and in no manner depressed, as I beg you will not be. We have been treated with every possible courtesy and respect by Captain Wilkes and his officers and are guests in the cabin.

I suppose we shall get to New York on Sunday or Monday next, the 17th or 18th, and in due time presume the papers will tell what disposition is made of us. I do not know whether I can write to you, but if allowed will do so and may have it in my power to tell you through what channel you can write. Macfarland will attend to your supplies and have no care about mine which are ample. I have one great consolation always present that while I am deprived of the power of serving and watching over you I feel entire confidence in the efficiency and excellence of our children and the kind friends around you.

Should you find the means of writing to me let me have full details of home but nothing on public affairs. I can only add, my dear wife, my prayers for your safety and those of our loved ones at home.

From yours, most affectionately, forever,

J. M. MASON.

P. S.—My love to Anna, Kate and all—all our circle and friends.

Extract from message of President Davis to the Confederate Congress, November 19, 1861.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

* * * * *

The distinguished gentlemen whom with your approval at the last session I commissioned to represent the Confederacy at certain foreign courts have been recently seized by the captain of a U. S. ship-of-war on board a British steamer, on their voyage from the neutral Spanish port of Havana to England. The United States have thus claimed a general jurisdiction over the high seas, and entering a British ship sailing under its country's flag violated the rights of embassy for the most part held sacred even amongst barbarians by seizing our ministers whilst under the protection and within the dominions of a neutral nation. These gentlemen were as much under the jurisdiction of the British Government upon that ship and beneath its flag as if they had been upon its soil; and a claim on the part of the United States to seize them in the streets of London would have been as well founded as that to apprehend them where they were taken. Had they been malefactors and citizens even of the United States they could not have been arrested on a British ship or on British soil unless under the express provisions of a treaty and according to the forms therein provided for the extradition of criminals.

HON. R. M. T. HUNTER.

MY DEAR SIR: I forward an article written by me on the capture of Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell which will I hope meet your approval. It seems to me important at all events that we should let it be distinctly known the act is viewed by us as an insult to the British flag.

I am, dear sir, very truly, yours,

H. W. HILLIARD.

[Inclosure.]

MR. EDITOR: The seizure of the commissioners of the Confederate States, Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell, is an important event and opens an interesting question as to the bearing of the laws of nations upon the act. The facts are understood to be: That Mr. Mason, of Virginia, and Mr. Slidell, of Louisiana, took passage in a British vessel bound for England; the vessel was a regular mail steamer, commanded by an officer of the British navy; it was boarded on the high seas by an officer of an armed vessel of the United States; and that under his orders the gentlemen referred to and others with them were seized as prisoners and taken from the British steamer. The law of nations in order to enforce the rights of belligerents against neutrals confers on them the right of visitation and search upon the high seas; but this right which is not to be exercised in time of peace is strictly limited as a right of war. It is said by the highest authority to be "strictly and exclusively a war right." If upon making the search the vessel be found employed in carrying troops, dispatches or any of the enemy's property it is liable to be taken and brought before a prize court. This doctrine after full discussion has been sustained both in the courts of England and of this country. It is equally well settled that the right of search is confined to private merchant vessels and that it does not apply to public ships-of-war. Let us apply these well-settled principles to the act which we are considering. In peace the right of visit and of search are alike denied by the Government of the United States to exist for any cause whatever, even by an armed vessel in search of pirates. The British Government has insisted upon the right of visit as distinguished from the right of search, with the view of ascertaining if the vessel hoisting the American flag were really a vessel of the United States, disclaiming any right of search after verifying the character of the vessel belonging to this country; but the Government of the United States has uniformly refused to recognize the distinction and has emphatically refused to yield its ships to the exercise of the one or the other. Mr. Webster's correspondence with Lord Ashburton in 1842 settled the question finally. Conceding then the right of the United States when engaged in war to visit and search the private merchant vessels of neutral nations for purposes sanctioned by the law of nations we must inquire how far this concession affects the act which we have undertaken to examine: the boarding a British mail steamer upon the high seas and seizing persons found there who are claimed as citizens of the United States and amenable to its laws. Are the United States engaged in war? The Government of that country has persistently refused to recognize the people of the Confederate States as belligerents. It is insisted by their public functionaries everywhere that they are engaged in suppressing a rebellion; they treat us as rebels; they deny our right to fit out privateers at the very moment when they assert that it is a right belonging to nations in a state of war; they refuse an exchange of prisoners upon any principle of public law. England certainly recognizes us as belligerent, but does this entitle the United States to exercise the rights of a nation at war when it refuses to acknowledge itself in a state of war? At most then this is by the construction of the United States but a civil war—not a public war; and where a Government refuses to conduct the conflict upon the principles of international law ought it to be tolerated in the exercise of the rights of a belligerent? The rights then of belligerents engaged in public war cannot be claimed by that Government. The right to visit and search vessels is limited to their own waters and cannot be exercised upon the high seas. What offense have Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell committed that authorizes a vessel of the United States to seize them as public enemies upon the high seas? This right in peace exists only so far as public enemies are concerned. If these gentlemen are amenable to the laws of the United States they must be arrested within the limits of the country or demanded by regular course of law in accordance with treaty stipulations. The flag of a nation must not be violated upon the high seas that they may be brought back to the jurisdiction of the country. Mr. Webster lays down this doctrine clearly in his letter to Lord Ashburton upon the subject of impressment:

Every merchant vessel on the high seas is rightfully considered as part of the territory of the country to which it belongs. The entry therefore into such a vessel being neutral by a belligerent is an act of force, and is prima facie a wrong, a trespass, which can be justified only when done for some purpose allowed to form a sufficient justification by the law of nations. But a British cruiser enters an American merchant vessel in order to take therefrom supposed British subjects, offering no justification therefor under the law of nations, but claiming the right under the law of England respecting the King's prerogative. This cannot be defended. English soil, English territory, English jurisdiction is the appropriate sphere for the operation of English law. The ocean is the sphere of the law of nations, and any merchant vessel on the seas is by that law under the protection of the laws of her own nation, and may claim immunity unless in cases in which that law allows her to be entered or visited.

If Mr. Mason and Mr. Slidell were offenders against any law of the United States they could not be arrested on the high seas while in a British vessel, the United States not being engaged in war. There is yet another view of this question. Is a British mail steamer a private merchant vessel? This steamer is not subject to the control of merchants. It is engaged in transporting the mails of the British Government. It is commanded by a British naval officer detailed for that duty, and the vessel is to some extent armed. If it be said that it is not a ship-of-war because it is employed in the civil service of the Government, the reply is that any vessel in Her Majesty's navy might be detailed for that service, and a ship-of-war would not forfeit its character by engaging in it. The steamer in question is certainly not a private merchant vessel, and it is well settled that only such a vessel can be visited and searched even in war. Other vessels enjoy an immunity from the exercise of any jurisdiction but that of the sovereign power to which they belong. This is everywhere conceded both in peace and in war. Here then is a vessel in the service of the British Government, commanded by a British naval officer, armed and sailing under the flag of that country, boarded on the high seas by a ship-of-war belonging to the United States, and persons under the protection of that flag are torn from it and held as prisoners. Will the British Government submit to it? Is the Government of the United States to refuse to yield the right to arm privateers at the instance of the great maritime powers of Europe, and yet to treat as pirates persons sailing with letters of marque granted by the Government of the Confederate States upon the ground that it is no government, and at the same time is that Government to be tolerated in exercising on the high seas rights strictly limited to belligerents in an actual state of war? Is that Government to treat a public vessel of the British Government as if it were a private merchant vessel? Such insolence it is to be hoped will now be rebuked and punished.

H.

LONDON, November 27, 1861.

Right Hon. Earl RUSSELL.

SIR: The undersigned have the honor to submit to Her Britannic Majesty's Government the following facts: On the 7th of November, instant, James M. Mason, John Slidell, James Macfarland and George Eustis, citizens of the Confederate States of America, embarked on board Her Britannic Majesty's royal mail steam packet Trent, then in the harbor of Havana, Cuba, as passengers for Southampton, England. On the 8th instant when in the Bahama Channel, off the Paragon Grande Light-House, the Trent was brought to by the firing of two guns said to have been shotted from a U. S. man-of-war, the San Jacinto, which vessel sent an officer and armed boat's crew on board of the Trent, and after some preliminary acts the officer demanded that the four passengers named above should be delivered up to him. The captain of the Trent refused to comply with this order, and the citizens of the Confederate States above named claimed the protection of the British flag. The U. S. officer then proceeded to arrest those gentlemen by the aid of his armed crew under circumstances of aggravating violence and carried them as prisoners from the Trent to the San Jacinto.

The undersigned believe that this proceeding is in violation of international law and not justifiable under any treaty between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and that of the United States. If it shall be insisted upon that these citizens were coming to England in the capacity of ambassadors it is a sufficient reply that they were not recognized as such by the Government of the United States nor by that of Her Majesty. The former Government looks upon them simply as rebellious citizens; the latter as the citizens of a belligerent power. No charge of their being bearers of dispatches was made by the U. S. officer, and if made it is confidently believed it would not justify their forcible seizure under the circumstances.

It may be concluded that these gentlemen had been commissioned by the President of the Confederate States to proceed to Europe and use their best endeavors to form friendly relations with the neutral European powers, but under such supposition the undersigned insist that they were not liable to seizure upon the deck of a neutral in the manner in which they were seized, for the reasons:

First, that such a procedure can only be sustained upon the principle that neutral States are not justifiable in entertaining propositions for the recognition of and commercial intercourse with belligerent powers.

Second, that these persons were proceeding from a neutral port to a neutral port in a neutral vessel.

It may be conceded that ambassadors proceeding from an enemy's port to a neutral port are liable to seizure under a neutral flag, but the undersigned have been unable to find a principle of international law or a precedent which justifies such a procedure when the ambassador is proceeding from one neutral port to another. In fact a high American authority, President Woolsey, lays it down as incontrovertible that a neutral vessel may convey unmolested an ambassador of the enemy or dispatches of the enemy to and from his own or any other neutral government. (Introduction to Study of International Law, p. 408; On Relations Between Belligerents and Neutrals. Theodore D. Woolsey, Yale College, Boston, 1860.)

Mr. Wheaton seems to sustain this view, for after laying down the general principle that "the fraudulent carrying of dispatches will also subject the neutral vessel in which they are transported to capture and confiscation," he further says:

But carrying the dispatches of an ambassador or other public minister of the enemy resident in a neutral territory is an exception to the reasoning on which the above general rule is founded.

The same author says:

The neutral country has a right to preserve its relations with the enemy, and you are not at liberty to conclude that any communication between them can partake in any degree of the nature of hostility against you.

Most assuredly then the bearers of such dispatches or the ambassadors themselves are not liable to seizure on a neutral vessel when proceeding from one neutral country to another. The undersigned think that it will be found on examination that when an ambassador has been held to be liable to seizure on a neutral vessel while on his passage it has been when the neutral vessel received him in the enemy's port or was carrying him to the enemy's port. In the present case the persons seized were received as simple passengers on the neutral vessel bound from one neutral country to another.

The undersigned submit also this further view of the case: Granting that the persons seized were liable to seizure it is submitted that the question of liability is a judicial question. For the decision of all such questions admiralty courts are established, and in those courts alone where both parties can be heard could they be determined. The only proper course was a seizure of the Trent with her cargo and passengers and a submission of the whole matter to a judicial tribunal.

The undersigned therefore feel it to be their duty to protest against this act of illegal violence done by the Government of the United States to citizens of the Confederate States on board of an English vessel by which they have been torn from their families and committed to a loathsome prison. They feel it to be their duty to lay the facts before the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and to claim for their imprisoned countrymen the full benefit of that protection to which every private person who seeks shelter under the British flag and demeans himself according to British law has heretofore ever been held to be entitled.

The undersigned therefore confidently hope that Her Majesty's Government will cause those citizens of the Confederate States who have been so illegally taken from the deck of a British vessel to be returned to the position which they enjoyed under the protection of the British flag when seized, or to the port whither they were bound and to which Her Majesty's Royal Mail Steam Packet Company had engaged to take them after having received the usual compensation.

The undersigned have the honor to assure his lordship of their very high consideration.

W. L. YANCEY.

P. A. ROST.

COMMISSION OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,

London, December 2, 1861.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge receipt on the 27th ultimo of dispatches of date the 24th of August, as also of dispatch dated 23d of September, 1861.*

It is our painful duty to communicate to you that on the 8th ultimo Messrs. John Slidell, James M. Mason, James Macfarland and George Eustis were forcibly taken by the U. S. man-of-war San Jacinto from her Britannic Majesty's royal mail steam packet Trent while on her passage from Havana, Cuba, to the Island of Saint Thomas when in the Bahama Passage off the Paredon Grande Light-House. The facts as far as we have been able to learn them, and we believe them to be extremely reliable, are as follows:

* None of these dispatches found.

On the 7th of November Messrs. Slidell and Mason with their suite embarked on board the Trent in the harbor of Havana as passengers for Southampton, England. On the morning of the 8th of November, when in the narrowest part of the Bahama Passage, off Paredon Grande Light-House, the San Jacinto was seen lying to in the passage. When the Trent came within half a mile or less the San Jacinto ran up the U. S. flag and simultaneously fired a round shot across the bow of the Trent, immediately afterward firing a shell which exploded within a hundred yards of that vessel. The captain of the Trent then displayed the British flag and being within hailing distance demanded to know what was wanted. The reply from the officer of the San Jacinto was that he wished to send a boat alongside. The Trent was then brought to and Lieutenant Fairfax with an armed boat's crew from the San Jacinto boarded her. He demanded of the captain a list of his passengers. This was refused. The lieutenant then said that the captain of the San Jacinto was informed that Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Macfarland and Eustis were on board and that he was instructed to seize them. These gentlemen at once avowed their presence, but claimed the protection of the British flag. The U. S. officer replied that unless they were surrendered to him he should take possession of the ship which he accordingly did, and after a solemn protest by the admiralty officer on board the Trent against the whole proceeding those gentlemen were seized at the point of the bayonet. Lieutenant Fairfax further said that he was instructed to lay the ship alongside the San Jacinto. The captain of the Trent replied that he was going to his quarter-deck, adding, "If you want me you will find me there," and at once proceeded to the quarter-deck. Lieutenant Fairfax left the Trent, however, without further enforcing his order, carrying with him Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Macfarland and Eustis as prisoners, and the Trent then proceeded upon her voyage. All the papers, letters and dispatches under charge of Messrs. Slidell and Mason were brought to us on the 27th instant, immediately after the arrival of the West India mail packet at Southampton by Mr. Hankel, of Charleston.

Under these peculiar circumstances the members of the commission after consultation, taking into consideration the great interests of the Confederate States, have severally come to the conclusion that it is the duty of each to remain near this Government and that of France until further advised by the President. In consequence we have addressed to Her Britannic Majesty's Government a solemn remonstrance against the outrage perpetrated by the United States in thus forcibly seizing the persons of citizens of the Confederate States on board of an English vessel at sea.

We have also in obedience to instructions of the President to the Hon. James M. Mason communicated to her Britannic Majesty's Government a copy* of the list of vessels which had arrived at and cleared from the Confederate ports from the date of the proclamation of the blockade to the 20th of August, 1861, and also a copy* of the resolutions of Congress of the 13th of August, 1861, touching the declaration of the Conference of Paris. We annex copies* of both of these notes.

* Not found.

We also send with this dispatch for the information of the Department certain editorials of the London journals* indicating the state of public opinion upon the seizure of Messrs. Slidell and Mason and their secretaries. The editorial from the Morning Post is understood to be inspired by Lord Palmerston; that from the Times of the 29th is understood to be from the Foreign Office. Having carefully read the different papers we find that there is but one daily journal in London that entertains the opinion that the act of the San Jacinto is justifiable; that is the Morning Star, the supposed organ of Mr. Bright and Mr. Cobden, and used as one by Mr. Adams.

It is believed in well-informed circles and in fact we may say that it has been communicated to us by persons connected with high official personages in the Government that the Cabinet in council on the 30th ultimo determined upon a report of the law officers of the Crown that the act of the commander of the San Jacinto was illegal, and that a demand should be made on the Government of the United States for apology and the restitution of Messrs. Slidell, Mason, Macfarland and Eustis. We have also received information in the same manner that the blockade is considered to be ineffective—entirely so—by the members of the Cabinet.

After a full consideration of the question we have not as yet deemed it advisable to again formally press the recognition of the Confederate States upon the Government of Great Britain at this moment but will await a favorable opportunity to do so. At this time we think it would meet with rejection, at least before the answer of the Government of the United States to the demand which the British Government has made for apology and restitution shall be received.

The C. S. steamer Nashville arrived at Southampton on the 21st ultimo slightly injured in her wheelhouses and deck by adverse storms experienced on her passage. We learn from Lieutenant Pegram that on the 19th ultimo in seventy fathoms of water he captured and burnt the ship Harvey Birch, of 1,500 tons burden, owned in New York and in ballast from Havre. She was valued at $125,000. Her officers and crew were taken to Southampton and landed there. It is understood that the Nashville will be allowed to repair.

The U. S. armed steamship James Adger has been in the waters of England for the last few weeks. It was asserted that she came to seek for the Nashville. She was allowed to repair damages sustained on her voyage and to coal. Since then she has been hovering about the coast. We understand that in reply to a demand as to her object by an officer of the admiralty that the commander avowed that he was instructed to seize Messrs. Mason and Slidell wherever he could find them at sea and that he expected to take them out of the West India mail packet. We were further informed that the U. S. officer was then advised that such an act would be considered as an insult to the British flag.

We have been advised that the opinion of the Emperor of the French and that of his ministry is that the affair of the Trent is a great outrage upon the British flag. We have inclosed extracts from various Paris journals* all taking the same view.

We are, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

W. L. YANCEY.

40 ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, December 2, 1861.

HON. ROBERT M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State.

MY DEAR SIR: Your instructions dated September 23 were received on the 28th instant. At present there is a probability that our recognition by Her Britannic Majesty's Government will not be much longer delayed. I congratulate you with all my heart upon the indications which so strikingly manifest themselves for a speedy termination of the noble sacrifices of our country for the attainment of its independence. Great Britain is in downright earnestness in her purpose to humiliate by disgraceful concessions or to punish severely by force the so-called United States for the flagrant violation of the integrity of her flag upon the high seas. Her voice will now be found in her sword.

By never losing sight for a moment of the object for which I was appointed and not quitting here for a day since my arrival I have succeeded in opening channels of communication with the most important personages of the realm. In an hour after the Cabinet decided upon its line of action with respect to the outrage committed by the San Jacinto I was furnished with full particulars. What a noble statesman is Lord Palmerston! His heart is as young as it was forty years ago.

I suggested the importance of putting the new and invincible iron-plated steamer Warrior in commission and of dispatching her to Annapolis Roads with a special minister to Washington. This in my opinion would have secured the immediate restoration of our captured countrymen to the freedom which they enjoyed under the British flag and thus assured their early arrival in London and Paris. It would also have so humiliated the North that her position would have been very equivocal as relates to respectability in the family of nations. With all her brazen-facedness she could not have elevated her head again for a half century.

As soon as Mr. Mason or his successor, if he shall not be surrendered, arrives I shall repair to Madrid and afterward proceed to Brussels. For this renewed manifestation of confidence in me by the President and the agreeable manner in which you have communicated it I cannot adequately express my thanks.

I cannot close this hurried note without expressing to you my unqualified admiration of the peculiarly proper bearing of Mrs. Slidell, her daughter and Mrs. Eustis under the distressing separation from their husbands and father. Truly may it be said as concerns those ladies that "woman's hour is the hour of adversity." I never was so proud before of my countrywomen in a foreign land. There is not a British heart that does not sympathize sincerely with them.

Yours, with faithful consideration,

A. DUDLEY MANN.

FOREIGN OFFICE, [London,] December 7, 1861.

Lord Russell presents his compliments to Mr. Yancey, Mr. Rost and Mr. Mann. He has had the honor to receive their letters of the 27th* and 30th† of November, but in the present state of affairs he must decline to enter into any official communication with them.

PARIS, December 24, 1861.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS,
President of the Confederate States of America.

SIR: A friend takes charge of this letter which may prove useful should our last dispatch not have been received.

Having gone to England as soon as I heard of the outrage committed upon Messrs. Mason and Slidell, at the first interview I had with my colleagues we severally came to the conclusion that the separate powers and instructions last received presupposed the presence of Messrs. Mason and Slidell in London and Paris, and that in the excited state of public feeling which had resulted from their capture the best interests of our Government required our presence in those capitals.

I could not be in doubt as to the course I ought to pursue, having positive information through the Spanish legation here that the question of our recognition had never been mooted at Madrid and would not be until we were recognized by England or France, and knowing besides the necessity of counteracting at once an attempt then being made by an influential portion of the French press to unite against us the anti-English and anti-slavery feelings of this country.

The commissioners addressed a strong representation to Earl Russell in relation to the affair of the Trent, asking the British Government to demand the immediate restitution of our captive friends to the protection of the British flag. England has ere this demanded that restitution, and unless the North has yielded at once war is certain. In that war France will remain neutral, but it is confidently believed in Government circles that in a few months it will be in her power to come forward and command peace between the three belligerents.

Should the Lincoln Government yield I am assured by my colleagues that the British Government is now thoroughly convinced of the inefficiency of the blockade and will insist that it be raised. While the Emperor wishes to continue on good terms with the United States Government and would regret to see the Federal navy destroyed I cannot doubt that his sympathies and those of his Government are with us. A series of articles headed "Reconnaissance des États Confédérés," now in course of publication in the Pays newspaper, are written in the Bureaux of the Ministry of the Interior. They advocate the right of secession, the cause of the South generally, and its right to be recognized. Other articles of the same character have been recommended for publication in other papers by the director of the press, but thus far have not been published because most probably the editors of those papers expect money from us. That question of money is continually turning up against us. I do what I can out of my own means but that resource is necessarily limited.

Many causes little understood at home have combined to delay our recognition; but a great change in public opinion has taken place here within the last six months, and in reviewing the past while I avoided rendering myself obnoxious by indecent haste I am not conscious of having omitted anything calculated to advance our cause. My unofficial intercourse with members of the Government has been more and more friendly, and on a recent occasion M. Thouvenel was pleased to say to me that no one could have accomplished more than I had.

We have given Earl Russell and M. Thouvenel the list of the vessels which had run the blockade, and in obedience to the last instructions addressed a communication to them. M. Thouvenel was astonished to find the evasions so numerous, as the reports made to him by the officer commanding the French squadron on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts had induced him to believe that notwithstanding occasional violations the blockade could not be considered ineffectual. He promised to take the matter into serious consideration. The lists sent only extend to the end of August and first part of September; lists of subsequent violations should be sent to us immediately. Should Messrs. Mason and Slidell be liberated and allowed to proceed to Europe recent proofs of the insufficiency of the blockade might be of the greatest importance in their negotiations.

DECEMBER 28.

No news from America. The London Times of yesterday says:

We are at this moment looking up at the coin which is twirling in the air and guessing without any good ground of preference whether it will come down heads or tails—war or peace.

This is a true statement of the situation. In the mean time England is fitting out the largest naval expedition that ever left her shores. That expedition will crush the North at a blow if there is war, or open the blockade if there is not.

I am, with very high regard, your very obedient servant,
P. A. ROST.

LONDON, December 31, 1861.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER.

SIR: Nothing has occurred since the last dispatch of the commission which in their opinion requires an official communication to the State Department. Duplicates of that dispatch have also been sent off, together with a copy of Earl Russell's reply* to our notes. The terms and spirit of that reply in my opinion called for notice from the commission, but my colleagues did not think so, and consequently Earl Russell's note has not been answered. The publication of Mr. Adams' correspondence with his Government which has just appeared and which doubtless you have seen has strengthened me in the view that the note should have been replied to but Colonel Mann (Judge Rost at Paris) still adheres to his original impression.

Earl Russell promises to Mr. Adams (in June last) that he will not see the "pseudo commissioners any more." What truckling to the arrogant demand of Mr. Seward that England should forego her international privilege of hearing the case of a belligerent power! What a violation in fact of that impartial neutrality proclaimed, a neutrality indeed which includes the equal hearing of both sides, although upon unequal terms—official on one side, unofficial on the other. Had the foreign secretary in August last not driven us to a written communication the commissioners could have kept up unofficial and verbal interviews and communications until this time, and not have subjected themselves to the rebuffs they have received, while at the same time they could have constantly kept the English Cabinet informed of events and their own views. But Earl Russell's last note cuts off all communications until at least the question of the Trent has received a solution.

I presume there is no doubt that England has demanded the restitution of Mason and Slidell and an apology. Here public opinion generally is that they will be surrendered. The funds fluctuate. The Government view is that the issue of peace or war is about evenly balanced. Ten thousand picked troops and immense war material have been sent to Canada. A great steam fleet has been fitted out, and if there is war the English blows will be crushing on the sea-board.

If Mason and Slidell be given up the Government here will endeavor for awhile at least to observe a frigid neutrality toward us; that is will lean to the United States on the blockade and diplomatic issue, and postpone or refuse recognition. France, however, will be disposed I think to act more favorably, and may drive England into favorable action. Public opinion is for us, and when Parliament meets I feel confident that the ministry will be compelled to act favorably or to resign.

The British West India mail steamer from Saint Thomas was due on the 28th, but only arrived off Southampton an hour ago. The Havana steamer of December 28 failed to connect, and my opinion is that a Yankee captain mindful of the honors heaped on Wilkes has searched her and found dispatches or Confederate agents and has taken her into port for adjudication. If so war can no longer be prevented, for England will not submit to it. I desire to leave here very much, and if Mason and Slidell arrive or other commissioners will do so at once. If no one arrives to take my place and war ensues I will leave on concluding a treaty with England and be home I hope by March.

• Most respectfully, yours, &c.

W. L. YANCEY.

JANUARY 1, 1862.

The British West India mail steamer due on 29th not yet arrived. It is feared that a Yankee man-of-war has seized her, and if so perhaps because of C. S. officers and dispatches on board. It was a false rumor as to arrival of the Shannon.

FENTON'S HOTEL, LONDON, January 30, 1862.

HON. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: We arrived in London yesterday evening and I could address you but a short private note by a ship to sail to-day for a Confederate port. I have had but one day in London and that engrossed by visitors, embracing many of our countrymen here with many English gentlemen who sympathize with us.

This letter which cannot contain much is to go by the Nashville, and if Captain Pegram makes good his voyage he will tell you the complications that have arisen in regard to his presence in an English port. It will suffice for me to say that the Federal ship Tuscarora being at Southampton to watch him this Government ordered both to leave the port, brought about by misconduct in regard to the espionage of the commander of the Tuscarora, the Nashville to depart as I understand it twenty-four hours (afterward extended to forty-eight) after the departure of the Tuscarora. Captain Pegram who consulted with me in obeying this apparently harsh order has acted in everything in a manner becoming his position. I have not the means of making myself fully acquainted with the orders of the British Government in this regard, they being partly written and partly through verbal communication. So far as I have understood them, however, I have no reason to believe that the admiralty intended incivility or discourtesy to the Nashville, but under the necessity of sending away the Tuscarora it was thought prudent and to preserve neutrality to extend the same measure to the Nashville.

In my short note of last night* I could tell you only of the favorable impressions we received everywhere on our voyage of sympathy from the British naval officers. Now with but a day's experience in London my impressions decidedly are that although the ministry may hang back in regard to the blockade and recognition through the Queen's speech at the opening of Parliament next week the popular voice through the House of Commons will demand both. But few members it is said are yet in town, but there is a prevalent desire manifested to be well informed as to American affairs, and I have said to those who have called on me that I shall be happy to see and converse with any gentleman who desires such information.

My views of course upon such short acquaintance must be crude, but I shall be disappointed if the Parliament does not insist on definite action by the ministry inuring to the relief of their people as well as ours.

By the next opportunity I shall hope to write you more formally and at large. Please send the inclosed* to Mrs. Mason.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

J. M. MASON.

COMMISSION OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
London, February 2, 1862.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State, Richmond.

SIR: I arrived here on the 29th ultimo in the West India mail steamer from Saint Thomas, and have since written you two private notes by casual opportunities offering taking the chance of their reaching you. In these I gave you a brief account of our voyage after being released from Fort Warren. This is to go by Mr. Yancey, who leaves this evening for Southampton.

Lest my private notes should have miscarried I will briefly state here that on the 1st of January Mr. Slidell and I with Messrs. Eustis and Macfarland were taken from Fort Warren in a small steam-tug forty miles across an arm of the sea to Provincetown, Mass., in charge of a subordinate clerk of the State Department at Washington and six marines with a corporal, where we found at anchor the British war steamer Rinaldo, of seventeen guns, Commander Hewett, and were placed on board about 4 p. m. We were received by Captain Hewett with great courtesy and the ship immediately got under way for Halifax.

Captain Hewett showed us in the course of the evening his letter of instructions from Lord Lyons, which directed him to receive and treat us with all the respect and consideration due to private gentlemen of distinction, and his orders were to proceed to Halifax or if we desired it to any other neutral port, but not to any one of the Confederate States. The most speedy opportunity to England being from Halifax we proceeded thither, but during the night a gale sprung up from the northwest which continued with increasing violence accompanied by thick weather and snow-storms up to Sunday the 5th. During that period we were unable to take an observation or to determine where we were in reference to our port. The thermometer was at 15°, the ship covered thickly with ice, all the ropes, cordage and sails frozen into a dense common mass and the coal nearly exhausted; add to which the ship had sustained much damage by the severity of the protracted storm, lost two of her boats from the davits, her fore-top sail (the only sail set) blown away, though double reefed, the taffrails stove in, &c., with many of the sailors severely frost-bitten.

In this condition the captain determined on Sunday, the 5th, still unable to get an observation, to bear away for Bermuda. It was computed by the dead reckoning that we had run some forty miles to the east of Halifax, when the course of the ship was changed. Getting to the middle of the Gulf stream after a run of some 300 miles we were enabled to thaw out, and reached Bermuda without further mishap on the 9th.

We immediately communicated through Captain Hewett with Admiral Milne, commanding the station, at his residence on shore, expressing our desire so far as compatible with his convenience to proceed in the most speedy manner to our destination. He had but few ships in port, but offered either to send us direct to England in the steamer Racer, which could be got ready by the 13th, or if we preferred it to send us on in the Rinaldo to Saint Thomas, which it was thought we might reach in time to intercept the mail steamer La Plata to leave there at latest on the 14th, Captain Hewett kindly offering to have his ship coaled during the night and to proceed during the next day, notwithstanding her damaged condition.

We chose the latter, as the Racer was a slow vessel, and under any circumstances would have a protracted voyage.

The admiral also kindly sent us an invitation to dine with him and to spend the night on shore, which we gladly accepted. Our entertainment was in everything courteous and hospitable. All the officers of the ships in the harbor and on duty on shore called on us with congratulations on our arrival, tendering us every offer of hospitality and expressing an earnest hope that we could remain with them a few days. But I must add as a marked tribute that as we passed the admiral's ship, the Nile, going into the harbor the band on the quarter deck having the officers grouped around played what they understand to be our national air, Dixie. Our presence on board had been made known by telegraph.

I hope you will pardon this detail as part of the history of the times and as indicative of the feeling and spirit prevailing in the British navy. A common sentiment pervaded all and which was freely expressed of warm sympathy with the South and entire alienation from the North.

We left Bermuda on the morning of the 10th, and after a prosperous run entered the harbor of Saint Thomas on the morning of the 14th, where we found the La Plata. Captain Hewett after having had our baggage transferred accompanied us in his gig on board the La Plata and introduced us to her captain, who received us with warm congratulations and provided every comfort for us during the voyage. The U. S. steamer Iroquois was at anchor in the harbor, and near her the British war steamer Cadmus. Captain Hillyar of the latter called on us on board the Rinaldo, and said in conversation that amongst other reasons for being gratified at our arrival it would relieve him of the duty of watching the Iroquois which had been his occupation for some weeks past. We sailed the same afternoon in the La Plata and reached Southampton on the 29th; came to London the same evening, and on the following morning Mr. Slidell with Mr. Eustis proceeded to Paris.

In the three days only that I have been here I have been called on by a great number of gentlemen, including Sir James Fergusson (whom you probably saw recently in Richmond), with congratulations and other tokens of kindest welcome. I must again ask pardon for these details, not otherwise fitted for a dispatch but as evidence of the spirit and feeling of the people. Mr. Yancey who bears this can tell you in person of everything interesting to us in public affairs.

* * * * *

From all I can gather here while the ministry seem to hang fire both as regards the blockade and recognition the opinion is very prevalent and in best-informed quarters that at an early day after the meeting of Parliament the subject will be introduced into the House of Commons and pressed to a favorable vote. The motion will probably come in the form of an amendment to the address and with the opposition it is thought will carry a sufficient conservative vote to reach a majority. With all this, however, Mr. Yancey is far better versed than I and can give better information. He will tell you that on the last application by the commissioners for an interview with Earl Russell they were requested to make their communication in writing. How far this may foreshadow refusal to receive me I am at a loss to say, though I do not anticipate it.

My present purpose is unless something should occur advising delay to write a note to-morrow to the minister asking an interview and announcing my being here as special commissioner to this Government. * * *

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. M. MASON.

C. S. COMMISSION, London, February 7, 1862.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Secretary of State, Richmond.

SIR: My dispatch to you by Mr. Yancey bore date of the 2d instant. An opportunity direct enables me to say a few words additional.

I send you with this the *Times of this date containing the Queen's message and the debate on it in Parliament. The former as you will see contains no further reference to American affairs than the affair of the Trent. It is thought that silence as to the blockade was intended to leave that question open. Mr. Gregory was kind enough to call on me by appointment and find me a place in the House of Commons. It would seem after consultation members favorable to our interest thought it best not to broach them in the House in the form of an amendment to the address as I thought would be done, but the question will come up in both Houses in some form at an early day.

Many Members of Parliament warmly in our interest have called on me, including Mr. Lindsay, Member of Parliament for Liverpool, and who is the largest ship-owner in England, and I was introduced to others at the House. They confer freely as to what may be best for our interest. They say the blockade question is now more easily carried in our favor just now than recognition, in which I agree, and their efforts will mainly be directed to a repudiation of the blockade. If that is done recognition will speedily follow.

The ministry are certainly averse to either step just now. They seem afraid of any further broil with the Government at Washington. You will see what was said by Lord Derby in the Lords and D'Israeli in the House. There was extreme reluctance with all parties to go into any controversial question on the address because of the recent death of the prince and the real sorrow of the Queen.

I have had long conferences with Mr. Gregory who will be an earnest and efficient coadjutor. All agree that I could not have a more useful or safe adviser. A call will be made probably in both Houses for any information in possession of the Government touching the efficiency of the blockade. I have the returns from the Southern ports given me at Richmond up to the 1st of September and received here since I came for the months of September and October. I shall make free use with our friends in Parliament of the results they show, and when in communication with the foreign office shall send them to Earl Russell. As to the latter Mr. Gregory has kindly offered to consult with judicious friends and advise me in what manner it may be best to ask the interview, always considering that while conforming to any proper usage I stand in no attitude as a suppliant or as asking any favor.

I have a note from Mr. Slidell dated at Paris on the 5th in which he says:

I wrote a note (unofficial) to M. Thouvenel on Monday requesting an interview. I received an answer the same day fixing Friday, the 7th instant, for the purpose. This prompt reply seems to me to argue well for the disposition of the Government. I shall make only a passing allusion to the question of recognition, intimating that on that point I am not disposed at present to press consideration, but I shall insist on the inefficiency of the blockade, the vandalism of the stone fleet, &c.

And further on he gives as his impression from other circumstances—

That the Government while unprepared to receive me officially wishes to manifest its personal good feeling toward me and at the same time to prove that it is not unfriendly to our cause.

To conclude I can give no opinion satisfactory to myself as to the probable action of the Government here, further than that it will remain passive unless moved by a vote of either House, and of the last I have not the means of speaking with confidence. This is to go by a steamer expected to sail direct for the South with supplies, &c., to-morrow.

* Not found.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. M. MASON.

FEBRUARY 8.

I also send the Times of this date* with the debate of yesterday in both Houses. * * * The delay of a day in this dispatch enables me to add that since I wrote you yesterday I addressed to-day (on advice of Mr. Gregory) a note to Earl Russell asking an interview at his convenience "as instructed by my Government," and have his reply to-night in form of a polite note saying that he would receive me on Monday, 10th instant, at his residence, at 11 a. m., unofficially. I shall of course call on him accordingly and in my next dispatch will send you copies of my note and his reply with the result of the interview.

J. M. M.

109 PICCADILLY, February 13, 1862.

His Grace the DUKE OF SOMERSET.

MY LORD DUKE: I cannot refrain on arriving in England from expressing to your grace and to the lords of the admiralty the grateful sense I entertain of the kindness and hospitality received from the naval authorities of Great Britain everywhere on our late protracted voyage to this country, a feeling I know that is equally entertained by my colleague, Mr. Slidell, and by our secretaries, Mr. Macfarland and Mr. Eustis.

To Captain Hewett, commander of Her Majesty's ship Rinaldo, and to all his officers this acknowledgment is especially due. Their courtesy, consideration and most generous hospitality were unremitting, and under the circumstances of a tempestuous and prolonged voyage we much fear greatly to their personal inconvenience.

To Admiral Milne we are under great obligations for our courteous and hospitable reception at Bermuda, and particularly for his marked kindness in expediting our passage to Saint Thomas.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your grace's most obedient servant,

J. M. MASON.

Case of Messrs. Hopkins, Butler, Wattles and ex-President Pierce.

Dr. Guy S. Hopkins, of North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., was arrested at Detroit on the 20th day of November, 1861, and taken to Fort Lafayette by order of the State Department. Hopkins was charged with treasonable correspondence with parties in the rebel States and with forwarding correspondence between such parties and their friends in Europe through Canada and with propagating treasonable sentiments in the region of his residence. Joseph P. Whiting, a member of the detective police of Detroit, made an investigation of Hopkins' case previous to his arrest. The report of Mr. Whiting shows that at the request of U. S. Attorney Russell he proceeded to North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., on the 7th of November; that he learned from the sheriff of said county that Hopkins and others residing in and about North Branch were according to common report openly avowed secessionists; that he stopped at the public house kept by Isaiah Butler (one of Hopkins' associates and co-conspirators), to whom he was introduced under an assumed name, and that he was subsequently introduced to Hopkins by Butler. On the following day Mr. Whiting had an interview with Mr. H. C. Sherwood, a resident of the neighborhood, who stated that Hopkins, Butler, Wattles and others had raised a pole for the purpose of hoisting a secession flag thereon, and on being warned by Sherwood and others that such action would result in the destruction of their property they replied that they would murder the whole of the damned abolitionists there were in the settlement if interfered with, and hurraed for Jeff. Davis, cursed the damned Lincolnites, &c. Mr. Whiting also states that on the 14th of November Private Calvin Hills, of Company H, Kellogg's cavalry regiment, stationed at Saint Louis (then returning home on a furlough), passed Butler's tavern, whereupon Hopkins and Butler ran out and gave three cheers for Jeff. Davis; and that on the evening of the same day Hopkins was present at a meeting at Butler's tavern on which occasion Butler made a speech on the right of secession and avowed himself an advocate of the doctrine. Mr. Whiting further states that in conversation with Hopkins in relation to the Government and about the war Hopkins said it was no Government at all, and many other like expressions, and denounced the war as unjust and tyrannical; and that many good and loyal citizens denounced Hopkins as an "open and avowed secessionist, which I think is true." A letter signed in cipher, dated North Branch, October 5, 1861, and directed to a citizen of Detroit, fell into the hands of Mr. Howard, the postmaster at that place, and was subsequently delivered to W. H. Barse, special agent, by whom it was forwarded to the Secretary of State. The letter is in the handwriting of Hopkins, and he has since admitted that it was written by him. It was addressed to R. M. C., esq. (said to mean Robert McClelland), and professes to relate to a secret league formed for the purpose of overthrowing the Federal administration; and it is filled with treasonable sentiments. Its references to individuals, &c., are only by initials, and among those referred to as members of the league or active in its interest are C—s S—t and Pres't P—, said to mean ex-President Pierce and Col. Charles Stuart, of the Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers. It speaks of the secrecy and success with which their operations have been carried on, and says.* The prisoner in his statement made after his confinement in Fort Lafayette claims that the letter was only intended for a sell and that his expectation was that it would be sent to one of the treason-shrieking presses and would be apt to quiet their howls. Letters and communications found among the prisoner's papers afford unmistakable evidence that he is a very bad man and justify incredulity at least in relation to any of his statements in his own behalf, and also warrant the belief that to a man so faithless to good morals and social order the transition would be easy to that of disloyalty to his Government.

* Not found.

Isaiah Butler, of North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., was arrested at that place on or about the 21st day of November, 1861, and was taken to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. Butler was charged with forwarding correspondence to and from the rebel States between said States and Canada and with propagating treasonable and secession doctrines in the neighborhood of his residence. An officer of the detective police of Detroit who was employed to examine the charges against Butler before his arrest reported that Butler with others had raised a pole for the purpose of hoisting a secession flag; that on different occasions he hurraed for Jeff. Davis; that he made a speech on the right of secession and avowed himself an advocate of that doctrine; that he was exercising a bad influence, poisoning the minds of many citizens in the whole settlement around him. After his arrest he refused to acknowledge himself a Union man and said he would not renounce his secession sentiments if he knew he was to be shot. The said Butler remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.

David C. Wattles, of North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., was arrested by U. S. Special Agent W. H. Barse, of Michigan, or by his orders, on or about the 25th day of November, 1861, and conveyed to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. Wattles, with one Isaiah Butler and one Guy S. Hopkins, had long been notoriously active in propagating disloyal sentiments at North Branch, and these three persons were the leaders of a small band who openly justified the rebellion and advocated its cause. In October, 1861, a letter was discovered in Detroit in the handwriting of Guy S. Hopkins appearing to give assurance of the existence of an extensive league or conspiracy to overthrow the Government and boasting of the rapid extension of said league, and claiming among other things to have already established an uninterrupted line of communication between the South (rebels) and Europe. Wattles as well as the other persons named was soon after arrested. Upon and after his arrest he openly avowed his sympathy with the rebels. The said Wattles remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

NEW YORK, September 17, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The object of the present is to apprise you that Franklin Pierce, ex-President, and Clement March, now a senator of the State of New Hampshire, are traitors and are aiding and abetting secretly and covertly the leaders of the Southern rebellion.

DETROIT, November 20, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD:

We have arrested Dr. Guy S. Hopkins, of North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., with treasonable documents on his person, and from comparison of handwriting author of the letter addressed to the Hon. Robert McClelland, a copy of which has been sent to you. Shall I take him to Fort Warren?

DETROIT, November 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find the original letter from North Branch, Mich., addressed to a prominent citizen of this city whose name is withheld from me. It was thrown into the wrong box, and the person upon opening it discovering a conspiracy was on foot to overthrow the Government took it to a friend, and the friend to W. A. Howard, esq., postmaster, and after a delay of some three or four weeks it came into my hands, and I have permission to send it to you with this understanding on my part that it shall be returned when called for. My object in sending it now is that you may compare the writing and ink with that found on Dr. Guy S. Hopkins who is now confined in Fort Lafayette.

I will endeavor to give you the rendering of initials embraced in this mysterious letter according to our judgment, viz: R. M. C., Robert McClelland; C—s, circulars; S— of S—, Secretary of State; P—ts, prints; R— L—, W. C. W., R— L— (don't know), Windsor, Canada West; C—s S—t, Charles Stuart, colonel of Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, now filling up; N—, North; S—, South; A—, assistance; A—, abolitionists; M—d, Maryland; Ft. M—, Fort Monroe; Pres't P—, President Pierce; P—y, Purdey; L. C. D—t, League Club of Detroit; Doct. [De] F— (don't know); H—, Mormon elder (don't know, am on his track); Port H—, Port Huron; Doct. [De] F— (supposed to be a Virginian who boarded at Port Sarnia about 1st of October last and registered his name as Jonathan Tripp, Virginia. Notes taken by my son, 7th of October); R—, Richmond; Capt. S— (don't know); G— M—, grand master or marshal; W—, Windsor (you will please note Sicilian Vespers); Capt. H— (don't know); p—s, passes. The signature you must figure out, for I cannot.

I have a number of names that I am on the lookout [for], and associate those sent forward and named in letter, viz: Capt. Walter P. Beach, N. H. Hart, lieutenant, and now filling up to go into Charles Stuart's regiment. David C. Wattles was to go as second lieutenant, but unfortunately he is on his way to Fort Lafayette. Others have been named, and if we are to believe those that come in daily contact with them they are rank secessionists and members of this League Club or Golden Circle. It is to be hoped that I may come across some more papers that will throw more light upon the subject. We have been to considerable expense in ferreting this matter out, having first to send a couple of detectives out to North Branch, and they employed the sheriff of Lapeer to assist them. They were gone about one week and returned with their report. I then waited until Dr. Guy S. Hopkins came in and arrested him, secured his papers and then sent out and arrested Butler and Wattles, all of which costs money. You will please advise me if I can embrace those expenses in my monthly account.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

W. H. BARSE.

P. S.—I will send Doctor Hopkins' other papers in by themselves as found in his possession.

BARSE.

[Inclosure.]

NORTH BRANCH, [LAPEER COUNTY, MICH.,] October 5, 1861.

R. M. C., Esq.

DEAR AND HONORED SIR: I write to inform you that C——s, the signature of the S—— of S——, &c., attached with a number of skeleton P——ts, will be found at the house of R—— L——, W. C. W., by the 9th instant.

The work, dear sir, goes bravely on; I have received replies from over sixty different localities and forwarded them to their proper destination, and I am happy to say thus far without a breath of suspicion or any accident. Our fellow-citizens are better prepared for the grand movement than even the most sanguine of our leaders dared to hope. The league is extending its ramifications in every direction and gaining new and valuable adherents daily. I feel greatly strengthened in the belief that when the hour comes to erect our glorious standard an overwhelming force will spring up at the first trumpet call. Many who are outwardly rabid in the tyrant's favor are with us heart and soul. I cannot, in common with C——s S——t, refrain from expressing my astonishment not to say delight at the unparalleled success and secrecy which has thus far attended the efforts of the brotherhood. God cannot help blessing a cause whose object is the restoration of a great nation to peace and unity by the overthrow of the blackest and most damnable despotism that ever usurped the liberties of a free people.

It is not difficult to convince an honest, intelligent man that the only way left to restore the Union and rescue the Constitution from beneath the feet of the tyrants where it is now lying is to insure by concerted action throughout the N—— the success of the S——, until tired and disgusted the conservative element is strong enough to raise and unite if necessary with the A—— of the S——, overrun the N—— like a hurricane, sweeping the A—— into eternity, or at least driving them into complete and unconditional submission. This is the only way in which our liberty and our country can be saved. Such a result would again unite the N. and S. in new bonds of amity and interest, restore the Union in all its former strength and beauty and the Constitution to the sacred niche from which it has been ruthlessly hurled by the despots. May the league prove the stepping-stone to such a result.

I have it from the best authority that the league is doing noble work in M——d, even among the F—— S—— at Ft. M——. If God continues to prosper our efforts the hour of a union between the N. and S. is not far distant. Prepared and united our force will prove irresistible and the accursed A—— G—— will be swept into the Atlantic.

President P—— in his passage has drawn many brave and influential men to the league. P——y, of the L. C. D——t, sent a line to Dr. F—— (by H., the Mormon elder), who as you perhaps know is just across the line from Port H——. The league is doing nobly in M., I. and Wis. He is cautious, but in common with others is gradually preparing the minds of the people for a great change. He expresses a fear that any attempt to draft men will produce a premature outbreak. I think his fear is well founded. A member of the league in Genesee who passed through the woods on his way with dispatches to Dr. F—— told that any attempt to draft our friends there would bring on an open rupture. I think our leaders should look to this, as no doubt they will.

I am happy to say Dr. F—— considers his mission accomplished and departs for R—— by the 7th instant. Through us there is now an uninterrupted line of communication between the S—— and Europe. He leaves Captain L——, a sure friend, in his place to receive correspondence, &c. Our obscurity is our greatest safeguard. The duties which devolve upon me could never be conducted in any place of note without attracting attention. I forwarded your request to the G—— M—— and am instructed to furnish you with the cipher and its key. I will send the same to Pt. H——, thence to W——.

I have much which I wish to communicate, but will wait until an opportunity offers to send it by a safe hand. I am obliged to send this by mail.

May God prosper the cause. The S—— is doing gloriously. It wrings my very heart however to see our brave countrymen N. and S. sacrificed to carry out the hellish plans of our tyrant. May our project prove a second Sicilian Vespers, attended with all its success, but I fervently pray without its bloodshed.

Dear sir, excuse this confused and hurried letter, and allow me to sign myself,

Yours, in the cause,

* ɹ < ^ z || □

P. S.—Captain H. will give you instructions as to the disposition to be made of the C—s; the P—s are to be used as necessity requires.

DETROIT, November 27, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I found the inclosed* laid aside after sealing up the doctor's papers. I send you these merely to give you an insight to his character and sentiments. Taking him all in all I think he is as great a scamp as goes unhung.

Your obedient servant,

W. H. BARSE.

*No inclosures found, but probably alludes to correspondence addressed to the Detroit Free Press; see Hopkins to Seward, November 29.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *November 29, 1861.*HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the 20th instant in the city of Detroit, Mich., I was suddenly arrested without being informed of the charge against me further than the general one of disloyalty. Knowing that I had laid myself liable to suspicion by an act of inconsiderate folly I was most anxious for an immediate examination. This favor was refused me and I was immediately sent to this post. I am anxious to make a full and explicit report of what I know, not I beg you to believe to screen myself but to prevent if possible suspicion falling upon loyal and innocent men. If I were alone interested I believe rather than confess my knowledge of the cause of my arrest and the trouble I have unwittingly occasioned I would prefer running my chance under an unsupported charge of disloyalty, but the interest of others demands that I should admit not my guilt but my folly.

My only guilt, sir, lies in attempting to play off a practical joke upon the Detroit press. It is impossible that in the short space of a few months all old party animosities and prejudices should be forgotten. Although the Democratic press and people acquiesce with more or less cordiality in the policy of the Administration still beneath it all there is an undercurrent on minor subjects of political rancor which still maintains old party lines. Actuated by such feelings the Democrats charge the Republicans with abolition, while the Abolitionists without any show of reason charge all Democrats with either disaffection to the Government or outright treason. In Lapeer County, Mich., in particular, remote from the wild whirl of political and warlike events, these feelings exist in all their strength—so much so indeed that there is scarcely any communication between members of the two parties.

Some time in September, I think, my enemies having reported me a secessionist, my office was attacked in the night and ransacked and other acts of violence committed, of course by Abolitionists. About the same time I noticed frequent paragraphs in the Detroit papers charging the Democrats with treason, with oft-repeated reference to a secret league favorable to the Confederate States. These events, the accusation of men whom I admired as statesmen and loyal Americans, the disgrace heaped upon me by Canadian abolitionists, who I knew at heart bore little love to my native country, living remote from civilization, and although reading not realizing the fearful change which has taken place in the past six months; the universal reign of suspicion, revenge and a desire to sell the Detroit treason-shrieking press—all this and many influences which I will not occupy your time in rehearsing, on reading a very irritating paragraph on Democratic treason, it suddenly entered my mind to sell the Detroit press by writing a letter full of dark innuendoes and hints, but which in reality would mean nothing. The idea was hardly conceived before it was executed.

My only fear in writing it was that it would be immediately seen through, and I caught at every circumstance which would add to its plausibility without for a moment considering that I might be weaving a web not only to catch myself in but one which would be very difficult to unravel. My furthest expectation was that it would be sent to one of the treason-shrieking presses, and when exploded would produce lots of fun. I fancied such a sell would be apt to quiet their howls. My only belief was that it would be either immediately seen through or if the fish took the bait it would be sent to the Tribune, drawing from that admirable journal a yell of intense satisfaction.

What that letter contained I do not distinctly remember. I know I used nothing but initials, leaving it entirely to the well-known ingenuity of the very penetrating Detroiters to fill out the blanks. Not an hour passed after the conception of this piece of folly before the letter was in the post-office.

After it was written, not knowing who best to address it to I left it to chance by picking up a Detroit paper, looking through the advertising list and at length selecting the name I think of M. Mills. Weeks passing away and nothing being heard from this fanciful practical joke, it passed from my mind until my place of residence was visited by one Jenkins alias Whiting. The name used, his visits to the post-office, &c., caused me to suspect something wrong and to fear more serious results from my joke than I ever anticipated. I was on my way to Ypsilanti to look after some property fallen to my family at the time of my arrest. I was not surprised, but after thinking over all I could remember of that doubly-accurSED letter I felt very much distressed. I then for the first time realized what I had done. For myself I did not so much care. I felt I deserved all I suffered. I feared, and greatly feared, that I had been instrumental in casting suspicion on good and loyal men; that they might at that very moment be under arrest with no other evidence against them than such as my folly had furnished. Influenced by such fears I begged they would give me an immediate examination, but either from want of inclination or want of power it was refused.

I have only one word more to say in connection with this letter. I beg and pray that whatever penalty is attached to this act may be confined to the only party guilty, and that nothing in it be allowed to reflect upon any one whom it may seem to hint at. I should certainly feel myself the worst of men if any act of mine however innocent in intention should cast a stain of disloyalty upon others. I speak of this letter as if I knew it to be the only charge against me. I do not know it. I simply know it to be the only thing wherein I am guilty. As for any other act of treason I can only say I belong to no secret society, was never even tempted to join any such society, or to commit any act whatever favorable or otherwise to the Confederate States. Also to the best of my knowledge I never saw a secessionist until my advent here. As an act of justice to the Detroit Free Press I desire to state that the manuscripts found in my trunk addressed to that paper were never sent, and were only written to pass away the time. No communication was ever sent by me to that paper more than a subscription letter.

I repeat my only object in writing this communication is if possible to relieve others of any suspicion which may have fallen upon them through me. To further this object I am willing to attest to what I have here written under oath. For myself I leave myself as I needs must at your disposal, only praying that I may not be too severely handled for one moment's indiscretion.

Very respectfully, yours,

GUY S. HOPKINS.

DETROIT, December 1, 1861.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: * * * While in Fort Lafayette on the 28th ultimo I was told by Lieutenant Wood that Doctor Hopkins wished to make a communication to the Secretary of State of something which was of the utmost importance and would no doubt save much trouble if revealed soon. I have no doubt in my mind but what he is able to do that which he states, and requested Lieutenant Wood to keep his friends (Wattles and Butler) away from him for a few days at least, as he is evidently repenting his rash course. Both Wattles and Butler avowed themselves in presence of Mr. Whiting and myself as opposed to this war and in sympathy with the South.

There is something strange about the whole affair. Doctor [Hopkins] was going to join the army near Washington; Wattles was looking for a chance as lieutenant in Captain Beach's company] (a suspected party) of Eleventh Regiment, with Charles Stuart as colonel (who is mentioned in North Branch letter). The query is, for what reasons? And as three of them are known to be in sympathy with the South and many more of same pattern joining, it looks strange indeed, and but one conclusion to arrive at, i. e., traitors, which is shown from the fact of the clause in North Branch letter where it speaks of "the league is doing noble work even [among] the F. S. at Ft. M."

We will do our best to sift this matter thoroughly, but if in any way you can get this Dr. Guy S. Hopkins' statement (which he proposes to give) it would aid us materially as we have sharp, jealous enemies to work against in this matter.

Hoping that you will give the above ideas and suggestions (if approved) your earliest attention I remain, yours with respect,

GEORGE R. BARSE,

U. S. Deputy Marshal.

DECEMBER 2, 1861.

[W. H. BARSE, Deputy U. S. Marshal:]

At the request of Alfred Russell, U. S. attorney, having received information of the treasonable sentiments of various individuals residing in and about North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., did proceed to the above-named place to ascertain the facts of the same on the 7th of November ultimo. Having reference to Samuel Carpenter, sheriff of said county, learned from him that it was the common report that Isaiah Butler, David C. Wattles and Guy S. Hopkins with many others were secessionists, and openly avowed themselves as such. I employed him to accompany me as a hunter through the woods thirty-four miles to the above-named town, he having an excuse on business there. I stopped over at the house of said Isaiah Butler. After being introduced as one Richard Jenkins, of McComb, Mr. Butler introduced me to Hopkins, which opened the way for investigation.

On the following day I had an interview with H. C. Sherwood at the school-house, about one mile and a half from there, from whom I received the following statement: That Butler, Hopkins and Wattles with others had raised a secession flag, but that Sherwood, Scott, Bunker, himself and others informed Butler if he did so they should certainly destroy his property, with which they replied that if they were interfered with they would murder the whole of the damned abolitionists there were in the settlement; hurrahed for Jeff. Davis, and cursed the damned Lincolnites, &c. On the 14th while Private Calvin Hills, of Kellogg's cavalry regiment, Company H, stationed at Saint Louis, was returning home and passing Butler's farm, Butler and Hopkins ran out and gave three cheers for Jeff. Davis. The poor fellow feeling very bad, as he was then on his way to see to his little children, having lost his wife the week previous, he told me that if he was on duty he should arrest them, but was then on furlough. On the evening of same day

Butler, Hopkins, Pemberton and others met in the bar-room of Butler when Butler made a speech on the right of secession, and avowed himself an advocate of the doctrine of such.

He [Butler] appears to be a man of good talents and has an unwieldy influence with the whole settlement around him, and his house is the headquarters for the transaction of all business which gives him an opportunity to poison the minds of many citizens. I also learned that Hopkins traveled a great deal about the country. In conversation with him when there we talked about the war and the Government which he denounced as unjust and tyrannical, and that it was no Government at all and many such like expressions, and I learned from many good and loyal citizens in that section of country he was denounced as an open and avowed secessionist, which I think is true. Wattles is a man of some influence. He is the supervisor of the town of North Branch, and from all I could learn was with Butler and Hopkins most of his time, and was traveling about a large share of his time with no particular business except talking about the "damned black abolitionist Government," and boasting of his secession principles, &c. There are many little incidents connected with the above investigations of a sojourn with them of ten days and facts brought to light that should they be required can be given.

As Doctor Hopkins informed me that he had received an appointment as a clerk in the dispensary department at Washington he should leave there in the course of two weeks I made arrangements with Mr. Sherwood, the postmaster, that when Hopkins left to inform me by mail. He left on the 18th. On the 19th I received a letter as agreed at Detroit advising me of the fact, and on 20th met him at Detroit and Milwaukee Railroad depot, having just arrived. I arrested and placed him and his baggage and papers in the hands of W. H. Barse, who took charge of him. I then started back on the 21st to arrest Messrs. Butler and Wattles, and employed sufficient help by order of Mr. Barse to assist me in carrying out my plans, and succeeded in so doing. On searching for papers at the residences of prisoners they immediately informed me that I had not been smart enough, and that I had been suspected, &c.; but from the time of their arrest until left at Fort Lafayette they did not acknowledge themselves as Union men, and would not renounce their sentiments if they knew they were to be shot.

JOSEPH P. WHITING,
Detective.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, December 9, 1861.

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Secretary of War and does himself the honor to inclose a letter from the U. S. attorney for the district of Michigan, and to ask if as is therein stated Mr. Stuart, late U. S. Senator from Michigan, has been authorized by the Department of War to raise a regiment in that State. The return of Mr. Russell's letter is requested.

OFFICE OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
Detroit, December 6, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: There exists in this State an extensive branch of the treasonable organization known as the Knights of the Golden Circle. A letter directed to the Hon. Robert McClelland, ex-Secretary of the Interior, a resident of this city, implicating himself and ex-Senator Charles E. Stuart, of Kalamazoo, was intercepted here, and a copy has been furnished you. Since that time the writer, Dr. Guy S. Hopkins, of Lapeer County, Mich., has been discovered with three confederates mainly through the exertions of Joseph P. Whiting, sheriff of this city, and they have been sent to Fort Lafayette. Ex-Senator Stuart holds a commission from the Secretary of War to raise a regiment. I venture to suggest that the commission ought to be revoked and that both of those gentlemen are worthy of a place in Fort Warren. Permit me also to recommend the appointment of Mr. Whiting as secret agent here in addition to Mr. Barse, to be charged with the special duty of breaking up the order referred to.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

ALFRED RUSSELL,

Acting U. S. District Attorney, Michigan.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.]

SIR: * * * The "S." above [following] is the same that is mentioned as Captain S. in the mysterious letter* sent you some days since, and written by Guy S. Hopkins, now confined in Fort Lafayette.

THE ARRESTS FOR TREASON IN LAPEER COUNTY.

We understand that three men charged with treason were last week arrested by the U. S. marshal in Lapeer County and taken to Fort Lafayette. One of them is said to have objected to being handcuffed, when the marshal told him he could take his choice between the contents of a revolver or being handcuffed, when the contumacious traitor permitted himself to be shackled. We understand that these men were proven to be disloyal by certain letters they had written to parties South which of course never reached their destination but went to the dead-letter office, when their treasonable contents were known and their authors ordered to be "nabbed." One of the prisoners, a Mr. Butler, is said to have formerly resided in Auburn, this county.

We learn that the proper authorities have the names of several in this county who if evidence can be obtained to prove their secession proclivities will follow in the infamous footsteps of their Lapeer brethren in treason.

KIDNAPPING.

LAPEER, December 1.

To the EDITOR OF THE DETROIT FREE PRESS:

Democrats up here are kidnapped and stolen away to Fort Warren or somewhere else and for what no one knows, unless it be because he is a Democrat; and it is said that several others are marked to go also. Perhaps you may not know to what I refer. One week ago to-day two persons claiming to be U. S. marshals went north of us about twenty miles and took two men, D. C. Wattles and I. Butler, residents of the township of North Branch, in this county. Mr. Wattles was the supervisor of the town. The officers said they had committed treason against the country and at the same time refused to go anywhere where the prisoners could get any one to assist them but avoided all settlements and villages, so that no one here, even their friends, know what has become of them or where they are taken to or for what they were taken, but as the Republicans up here say it is enough to know that they were Democrats; so we cannot tell who must go next time; but the Lord have mercy on the officer that comes again for I cannot.

DETROIT, December 10, 1861,

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I inclose two slips, the first cut from the Detroit Daily Tribune of the 7th instant, and the other from the Detroit Daily Free Press of this date. They have attracted my attention from the following circumstance:

During General Pierce's stay in Detroit as I was returning to my home about 9 in the evening in passing down Fort street I overtook three men, one of whom I immediately recognized as Col. T. F. Brodhead, and another I took to be General Pierce, though I had not before seen him. It was the day news came that Mayor Berret* had been sent to Fort Lafayette, and as I was nearly up with and about to pass them one of the three made some remark in regard to that event, when the man I took for General Pierce promptly said, "They must stop that sort of thing or there will soon be fighting at the North, and we shall have to send for you to come back, Colonel Brodhead." Either from being aware of my presence or some other reason the conversation changed without any response that I heard and was in another tone while I passed by and out of hearing.

The next day or so I learned that General Pierce in company with Colonel B. and another man went down Fort street, as I had seen, leaving no doubt on my mind that it was the ex-President who made the above remark to Colonel Brodhead (who was an officer under him in the Mexican war and had the office of postmaster in Detroit during his administration). He is now colonel of a regiment of cavalry in camp near this city. Perhaps the importance I have given this matter is in part from an inquiry addressed to me two or three days since by one who has lost a minor office under the Government. In a tone that might be taken either jest or earnest he said, "Do you know they are going to establish a provisional government, and make some conservative man President in place of Lincoln?" To my reply that such an attempt would create a brisk demand for hemp he said "that Lincoln had established a provisional government in Missouri, and now they were going to do the same by him and settle all our troubles in ninety days." This was T. C. Fitzgibbon, lately mail agent on the Detroit and Milwaukee Railroad. I have incidentally heard it said that a son of ex-Minister Faulkner had been in this city in conference with R. McClelland, esq., who was with Mr. Davis in President Pierce's cabinet.

These incidents may be of little consequence unless there are other reasons for suspecting an organization hostile to the Government to which the ex-President is lending his position and influence. The Tribune editor has had no information from me nor have I spoken to any one of what I tell you, as I could see no use in it unless given to some one with authority to act in the matter if necessary.

* See case of Berret, p. 596.

Yours, truly,

J. A. ROYS.

EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE'S TOUR.

There is little doubt but that ex-President Pierce's tour through the North and into the Southern States is to foster division among the people, excite sedition, and to get up an organized treasonable opposition to the efforts of the Government to crush out rebellion in the Northern States. He goes through State after State the avant-courier of the rebellion to stir up sympathy for the rebel traitors in arms. While in this city he was closeted with a select circle who are known to be doubtful in their loyalty; he made a speech to them; and since he left Detroit more than one of that secret circle have said to others who were invited but would not be contaminated by the foul conspiracy, "You ought to have heard ex-President Pierce last night; he would have cured you of the idea of supporting this Government in this d——nable war." Our opinion is that Franklin Pierce is a prowling traitor spy.

[Inclosure No. 2.—Extract from Detroit Free Press, December 10, 1861.]

EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE.

Ex-President Pierce has lately been making a short tour through a portion of the West, and the fact being mentioned the opportunity has been embraced by a number of journals to impeach his patriotism and openly charge him with treason, or what is about the same sympathy with treason. We have seen or heard of nothing and know of nothing that he has either said or done upon which to ground any such charge, and we believe those who so flippantly make it are equally as ignorant in that respect as ourselves. On the contrary he has made a few short speeches, the tone of which has been one of loyalty and devotion to the Union and the Constitution. We know that while in this city he stated that he would rather see Joseph Holt President than any man living. Men who feel thus have no sympathy with this attempt to break down the Constitution and laws by force and thus destroy our Government. We have no sympathy or respect whatever for treason-mongers or treason-sympathizers, and just as little for those who in the present state of the country so flippantly and infamously charge treason and disloyalty upon political opponents without knowing or caring anything about the facts.

He is cautious, but in common with others is gradually preparing the minds of the people for a great change. He expresses a fear that any attempt to draft men will produce a premature outbreak. I think his fear is well founded. ANDOVER, MASS., December 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: A package indorsed Department of State, U. S. A., franked by W. Hunter, chief clerk, and addressed to Franklin Pierce, esq., Concord, N. H., was received by me to-day, having been forwarded from the place of my residence. But for the stamped envelope and the handwriting of Mr. Hunter with which I am familiar I should probably have regarded the inclosures as an idle attempt at imposition in which your name had been surreptitiously used. I must I suppose, though I do so reluctantly, now view it in a different light. In the note bearing your signature you say:

I inclose an extract from a letter received at this Department from which it would appear that you are a member of a secret league the object of which is to overthrow the Government. Any explanation upon the subject which you may offer would be acceptable.

It is not easy to conceive how any person could give credence to or entertain for a moment the idea that I am now or have ever been connected with a secret league or with any league the object of which was or is the overthrow of the Government of my country. Surprise, however, only increases as I pass from your note to the extract to which you refer as a sufficient basis for an official communication. Incoherent and meaningless as this extract from the vagaries of an anonymous correspondent seems to me to be it is not a little singular that it should have been sent for explanation to one who during his whole life has never belonged to any secret league, society or association. My name does not appear in the extract, and as there is not the slightest ground for any reference to me in the connection indicated I take it for granted that your inference is wholly erroneous and that neither I nor anything which I ever said or did was in the mind of the writer.

Nothing but the gravity of the insinuation, the high official source whence it emanates and the distracted condition of our recently united, prosperous and happy country could possibly lift this matter above ridicule and contempt. Not therefore because explanations would be acceptable but because this correspondence is to hold a place upon the files of the Department of State long beyond the duration of your life or mine, and because I would leave so far as I am concerned no ambiguity upon the record, it is proper—perhaps it is my duty—to add that my loyalty will never be successfully impugned so long as I enjoy the constitutional rights which pertain to every citizen of the Republic, and especially the inestimable right to be informed of the nature and cause of accusation and to be confronted face to face with my accusers.

Love for our whole country, respect for the reserved rights of the States, reverence for the Constitution and devotion to the noble Union which for so many years reposed securely upon that sacred instrument, have been interwoven with my best hopes for civil liberty, my deepest emotions, and my sternest purposes from youth to age. If I have failed to illustrate this in official station, in private life and under all circumstances where it became me to speak or act I have labored under a singular delusion, consciousness of which would embitter more than anything else the present hour and such remaining hours or years as may be in reserve for me.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

FORT LAFAYETTE, December 24, 1861.

DEAR BROTHER: I wrote you under date of the 5th instant which I suppose you have received ere this writing. I did not give you the particulars of my arrest presupposing that you had got them from home. I also refrained from giving you a detail of the treatment to me from the time of my arrest to my arrival here, being assured that any communication reflecting upon the cruelty, injustice and inhumanity practiced upon me would not be permitted from the hands of the commander of the post. But feeling somewhat assured that you have received my letter informing you where I am, &c., I feel more independent and write with less care and anxiety whether this is forwarded or not.

It may be useless for me to go into all the minutiae of what transpired since my arrest, but suffice it to say that on my arrival at Detroit I was taken to the Detroit House of Correction, put into a cell the only furniture of which consisted of an iron bedstead, a narrow straw tick filled so full of marsh hay or seaweed as to be entirely round and about twenty inches in diameter, a pillow of the same material, one blanket, and a tub for the necessities of nature, kept in irons during the night without supper; taken out next morning and taken to Toledo before breakfast, having fasted twenty-four hours. On my arrival at New York I was confined one night in the basement of the police office in a cell with only a rude bench for a bed, with not a rag nor even a fire to protect me from the cold. In addition to all other wrongs and injuries I am arbitrarily held and imprisoned without indictment; have not been confronted with my accusers; have been denied the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury; have been conveyed out of the State in which I was arrested (where if at all a crime had been committed). Should you be led to inquire the cause of my arrest I can only say of that I am as ignorant as yourself. I have suspicions, it is true, but they are vague and uncertain. I sometimes think it is through the false and malicious misrepresentations of some political opponent. Let the cause be what it may all that I desire is to be confronted with accusers, well knowing that a charge of disloyalty cannot be sustained against me. But it seems that I am denied all the constitutional rights of an American freeman.

Nor am I the only sufferer; there are many others here in the same category. Men are arrested and placed in confinement here upon a telegraph dispatch from Secretary Seward without any charge against them whatever. It is indeed deplorable to think that a once free and happy Government like ours (the freedom of which was purchased with the blood of our ancestors) should be so completely given up to a military despotism; but why should we be surprised when we consider that a new era has been established, that instead of kidnapping of negroes as we have sometimes read of, a system of the kidnapping of white men is now quite extensively carried on. We were restrained from having any intercourse with any one on the way, and we have every reason to believe that we were secretly represented as being counterfeiters.

Mr. Jenkins, alias Jo. Whiting, a deputy marshal from Detroit, who came up to make the arrest of Butler and myself is a base scoundrel. It was he who put the irons on me previous to my arrival at Detroit. He coupled us together with a pair of handcuffs on leaving the Detroit House of Correction. On arriving at the junction of the Michigan Southern and Toledo Railroads and while standing in the warehouse waiting the arrival of the cars I remarked to Butler that I thought it was rather hard to freeze and starve too; whereupon one of the overseers or officials of some kind standing near, hearing the remark, said insultingly, "Good enough for you. You had no business to be caught in such a dirty scrape." This insult although made within the hearing of Whiting passed without comment or rebuke—indeed I should judge he seemed to enjoy and sympathize with the ruffian who offered it. On entering the cars we were joined by Deputy Marshal Barse from Detroit, under whose instructions the irons were removed, and from that time forward we were treated by him with the courtesy and kindness becoming a gentleman; and as I only look upon him as a tool in the hands of wicked men I shall always remember him with kindness.

Lieut. Charles O. Wood, commander of this post, seems to be very gentlemanly in his demeanor toward the prisoners confined here. Sergeant Reed is also highly esteemed by the prisoners. We all hail with joy the hour which he is on guard duty, as there are many things connected with the duties of sergeant of the guard toward the prisoners in which he can treat them with kindness and civility or otherwise. If I knew that my business affairs had already suffered so much that I shall not be able to recover from the ruin already effected it would make but little difference to me whether they let me out this winter or not. We are faring first-rate and having a good time generally. There are seven of us occupying a room about eighteen feet by twenty-four feet, with a good wood fire, plenty to eat, and have a variety of amusements. We are allowed to walk in the inner court of the fort one hour in the morning and evening (with now and then an exception when Sergeant Reed is not on guard duty). We were expecting to have an oyster supper for Christmas but we have just learned that owing to the roughness of the harbor we shall not be able to get them in time.

Tell me of the success of Captain Beach in getting his company filled in time to go into rendezvous at Flint with the Tenth Regiment, and who the officers are, &c. I wrote to Susan a day or two after writing to you informing her of the best course that I knew of to get my case investigated. It seems to me that in some cases that influence is of greater importance than innocence to obtain a release from imprisonment. I think that Colonel (now General) R. would have as much influence with the administration toward obtaining for me an investigation as any one. I am looking for the arrival of a letter from you by the middle of this week. I hope I shall not be disappointed. I suppose that our county is now districted into two representative districts to the particular liking of the Republicans. Had Supervisor Deming left before the meeting of the board? Send to Susan the first opportunity. Tell her to be of good cheer; that all will be right when the end comes. We have just had a new arrival of prisoners from Texas, some three or four of whom have been allotted to our room. We are therefore in uproar and confusion at present. In consequence I shall have to close writing for this time. Write soon and remember me to all the friends.

Your affectionate brother,

DAVID C. WATTLES.

MY DEAR SIR: An injurious aspersion on your fair fame and loyalty came into my hands. Although it was in an anonymous letter the writer was detected and subsequently avowed the authorship.* The document must become a part of the history of the times. I desired that you might know how your name was made use of by a traitor to increase the treason he was encouraging. Unable to prepare a note to you personally I devolved the duty on the chief clerk of this Department. The manner in which it was done has given you offense. I regret it and apologize for it with the only excuse I can make, namely, the necessity of employing another head to do what ought to be done and yet which I had not time to do personally. I place your answer on the files of the Department of State as an act of justice to yourself, and I beg you to be assured that all the unkindness of that answer does not in the least diminish the satisfaction with which I have performed in the best way I was able a public duty with a desire to render you a service.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

It may be proper to state that adopting the form of address to ex-Presidents of the United States used by the late Mr. Webster I have invariably left off all titles of address as being most respectful.

CONCORD, N. H., January 7, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your letter of the 30th ultimo. It could hardly have surprised you to learn that I failed to discover in your official note a desire to render me a service. You will excuse me if I regard even a suggestion from a source so eminent that I am "a member of a secret league the object of which is to overthrow this Government" as rather too grave to have been sent off with as little consideration as a note of rebuke might have been addressed to a delinquent clerk of one of the departments.

The writer of the anonymous letter it seems "was detected and subsequently avowed the authorship," and yet I am not advised whether he disavows reference to me or whether there was an attempt to inculpate me in his disclosure. These were the only facts connected with him, his treason or his confession at all material for me to know. I suppose I am left to infer the latter, because although my name does not appear in the extract to which my attention was particularly called you still state that an aspersion upon my "fair fame and loyalty" came into your hands. I think you will upon reflection arrive at the conclusion that the whole ground upon which the allegation is repeated should as a simple act of justice have been placed before me. It was not the manner of your official note as you seem to suppose nor any form of address which awakened on my part a deep sense of wrong. These whatever they may have been were not worthy of serious notice. The substance was what I intended as courteously as I could but very distinctly to repel.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

FORT LAFAYETTE, Tuesday, February 11, 1862.

N. H. HART, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I have long hesitated to write to any gentleman in Michigan for reasons which would occupy too much room to detail. I am nearly as you know a stranger in Lapeer County. In looking over my limited list of acquaintances I thought of you as one who would not refuse to do me a trifling favor. For some time after my imprisonment I was under the impression that few letters from prisoners got outside of the walls of Fort Lafayette. To test the matter I wrote two or three letters full of nonsense to some person far away in the woods of North Branch. I this morning received indubitable evidence that they at least had passed in the shape of a wretched scrawl from a virgin of Canada stock. It may have contained very important news but Baron Humboldt could not have deciphered its meaning. Saving this epistle I have not heard a word from Michigan since my arrest. I have requested permission to send for the Daily Free Press but have received no reply pro or con. I wish to know whether any publicity through the press has been given to the arrests in Michigan. If so you would be doing me a great kindness by sending the papers to me at Fort Lafayette.

You can understand my object when I inform you that I have been left in total ignorance of the cause of my arrest, never having received the slightest intimation of the charges against me more than was embraced in the general one of disloyalty. Our country has undergone a marked change from the past when an American citizen can be held months in prison without warrant, trial or even examination. This is a display of authority for which I can find no excuse even under the widely usurping plea of necessity. Under no circumstances certainly should the innocent be punished and I cannot possibly see any danger to the country in a few obscure men receiving at least a trial.

To the few persons in Michigan whose good opinion I should be proud to possess I can only say whatever may be the pretended charges against me defer your judgment until you hear both sides. Believe me, sir, I am no traitor, unless indeed a freely acknowledged hatred of abolitionism be deemed treason. No man would more willingly give his life to see our country restored to peace and unity. Just as freely would I give my heart's blood to see crushed out that accursed insurrectionary element of Northern society called abolitionism, in which organization is embraced all the damnable, fanatical and demoralizing isms known to our country.

I saw a paragraph in the New York papers among the Washington dispatches which stated that Wattles, Butler, Hodges and Boyle had been arrested for destroying the mails. This of course is a mistake. Mr. Wattles and Butler knew nothing of my arrest until they found themselves enjoying the luxuries of the same boarding house. (It was stated that the destruction of the mails was in revenge for my arrest.) I further saw that Hopkins was a member of a secret traitorous organization called the Knights of the Golden Square. This is the most absurd nonsense. There is to my knowledge no such society in existence; certain I am, not in the loyal State of Michigan. Would to God the Black Republicans were half as patriotic as the Democrats of Michigan. Mr. Wattles and Butler are as innocent of any act or intent of treason as the best Union man in Lapeer. They are deserving of the best efforts of every Union man to restore them to their families. I fancy Hodges and Boyle have been guilty of some trifling act of insurrection which has been grabbed at to make them trouble.

Excuse this letter and send me, if possible, the information I request.

I am, truly, yours.

SIR: The indulgence offered me this day by the commander of Fort Lafayette was refused on the following grounds: I was arrested without legal warrant, was dragged to the city of Detroit in irons, there placed in a felon's cell; was told by the prison keeper that I was to be taken immediately before the U. S. commissioners for examination on a charge of treason. Instead thereof I was conveyed to this place; have been held here three months in prison not only without trial, but unnoticed and apparently forgotten. I reside in the loyal State of Michigan. I am and have always been a loyal citizen; have said or done nothing worthy the treatment I have received. I therefore objected to accepting my liberty on parole, as it will be held an admission of a treason of which I have never been guilty. I demand a trial or an unconditional release. I am ready to enter into recognizance with sufficient surety to appear for trial whenever and wherever it may be necessary for that purpose.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose a short article from the Saturday evening edition of the Boston Journal (March 22), the substance of which it is quite probable you may have seen before. Having originated in Michigan and been reproduced in Boston it can hardly be doubted that it has already secured a wide circulation. The subject is not new to me. It was the occasion of a correspondence between the Secretary of State and myself as early as December last. I thought it reasonable to suppose at the close of that correspondence that the matter would cease to attract notice. This expectation not having been realized and the offensive charge alleged to be based upon a document the original of which "is now in the State Department at Washington" having been revived and extensively published, will you do me the favor to introduce in the Senate a resolution calling for the correspondence to which I have referred.

It will strike you I am sure both upon public and personal grounds that such imputations should not be permitted thus to circulate unchallenged, especially when an answer to them at least so far as I am concerned has been for months upon the files of the first Department of the Government.

I am, very truly, your friend, &c.,

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

TREASONABLE PLOT IN MICHIGAN.

The Detroit Tribune publishes a curious document revealing an attempt in that State last fall to organize a league for the purpose of overthrowing the Federal Government. This object is plainly avowed in a secret circular, which declares the purpose of the movement to be "to rise and unite if necessary with the a—— [army] of the S—— [South], overrun the N—— [North] like a hurricane, sweeping the A—— [Administration] into eternity, or at least driving them into complete and unconditional submission." The document is dated October 5, 1861, and says the league is doing a noble work in Maryland and among the soldiers at Fort Monroe, and that "President P—— [President Pierce] in his passage has drawn many brave and influential men to the league." The Tribune says the original of the document is now in the State Department at Washington, and that it led to the arrest and imprisonment of several persons in Fort Lafayette. It was discovered that secret organizations existed in many towns in Michigan and in numerous places in Canada West.

The correspondence transmitted included Seward to Pierce, December 20, with the inclosed extract from the anonymous letter of October 5, p. 1257; Pierce to Seward, December 24, p. 1257; Seward's response, December 30, p. 1260; the anonymous letter entire, addressed to "R. M. C.," p. 1248; Hopkins to Seward, November 29, p. 1250, but did not include Pierce to Seward, January 7, 1862, p. 1261. The omission occasioned further debate in the Senate, during which Senator Latham read the omitted letter, which appears in the proceedings of the Senate printed in the Congressional Globe for April 3, 1862, pp. 1489-1490.—COMPILER.

COMMISSION RELATING TO STATE PRISONERS,
New York, April 9, 1862.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

COLONEL: The following prisoners, viz, David C. Wattles * * *, having given their parole of honor to render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States, you may discharge them immediately.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
 EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

[NEW YORK,] April 9, 1862.

I, David C. Wattles, of North Branch, Lapeer County, Mich., do hereby give my parole of honor that I will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States.

DAVID C. WATTLES.

Signed in presence of—

E. D. WEBSTER,
Secretary.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, April 10, 1862.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that out of ten men sent before the commissioners in New York City day before yesterday four have been released, viz, David C. Wattles, * * * on parole of honor not to aid the enemy. * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel Third Artillery.

Case of Fernando Wood.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New York, November 27, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: An effort will be made to prejudice me in the estimation of the Government by representations affecting my support of the war movement, &c. This is designed to induce the administration to become a party actively hostile to my re-election as mayor, and to injure me before the people. I hope you will defend me against any such attempts in your quarter. I am for a vigorous prosecution of the war, for sustaining the Administration by every power at our command, and for a restoration of peace only when it can be done consistently with the safety, honor and unity of the entire Government.

Very truly, yours,

FERNANDO WOOD.

NEW YORK, [November] 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

I have been importuned by a number of our most respectable citizens to arrest Fernando Wood in consequence of a violent disunion speech he made last night, to which I desire to call your particular attention as published in the morning papers. I await your instructions.

R. MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, November 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: This community was scandalized this morning on seeing in the newspapers the report of a speech made last night by Fernando Wood at a meeting of his friends at the Volks Garten. It appears to me you should have your attention specially called to it. Therefore I inclose you copies* of it as it appears in the Herald and Tribune of this morning.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

NEW YORK, November 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, State Department:

You ought to arrest Mayor Wood for using the traitorous language he did last night before a public assemblage. Do it at once and save future agonies here.

C. A. STETSON.

NEW YORK, November 29, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Although I am aware that your time is engrossed by the pressing anxieties of your position I can not refrain from intruding upon you a minute on a subject of pith and moment. I ask your attention to this infamous speech delivered by Fernando Wood on Wednesday night last. I inclose you a copy.

Of course you are aware that Wood before he was frightened into an appearance of loyalty by the people here had strong secession sympathies, and that whenever since that unpleasant event he has dared expose the cloven foot he has been delighted to exhibit it. Colonel Burnham, a New Yorker by birth, is Wood's marshal and next door neighbor. He under the manipulation of Wood, who seems to have fascinated this otherwise estimable man, has become and continues to be a stubborn secessionist, and submits as though he were acting a martyr's part to loss of friends and destruction of his business. He used to be proprietor of the famed Burnham's, at Bloomingdale, but has been driven from it by loss of business consequent upon the knowledge of his want of loyalty.

The Daily News which you suppressed was owned in part by Wood. Ben Wood who is but as potter's clay in Fernando Wood's hands was the friend of Breckinridge and Burnett during the session of Congress in July and counseled with them. I recall these matters partly to prove F. Wood's traitorous sympathies, and partly to show you that they being known South the enemy there receive substantial aid and comfort from his attacks on the Government. He is a natural conspirator, this "spare Cassius" with "lean and hungry look," and if he has not kept up correspondence with the leaders of this unnatural and atrocious rebellion the only reason for his abstinence lies in apprehension for his personal safety.

* Not found, but see inclosures in Haskins to Seward, December 2, post.

Yet out of the fullness of the heart the mouth will speak and on Wednesday night it had its overflow, and if you do not arrest and imprison him for his treasonable sentiments so openly and boldly expressed I can only say that you will make a mistake which by and by you will have cause to regret. The general expression yesterday in this city was one of denunciation, and the general hope that when the sun set on Fort Lafayette Fernando Wood would be within its walls.

You can not have any doubt that there was an arranged scheme here last spring on the part of Wood and others to detach this city from the support of the Government. The sudden and unexpected popular demonstrations in its favor drove these traitors for a time from their purpose, but I have no idea that they have abandoned it. They only wait for one of those lulls or changes in the aura popularis which almost always occur in long wars to renew and attempt their project. On Wednesday night Wood chose his ground judiciously and prepared it well for the seed—a German gathering, sprinkled with a shower of popular rights peculiarly Teutonic. That soil will grow the seed unless you bind the sower.

Yours, truly,

JOHN E. DEVELIN.

[Inclosure.]

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I appear before you to-night not with the intention of pleasing your ears with fine words, not to indulge in eloquence, but to talk a little common sense to you. [Cheers and cries of "Good for you."] I have ever regretted any attempt to continue distinctive nationalities and national prejudices. I have always held and believed that when once the man merged into the citizen he merged his nationality, and he became as it were dissolved into the general community without any other appellation, rights or privileges than those which appertained to every other man in the community. [Cheers.] While, however, it was the duty of men to support the Government they had a perfect constitutional right to criticise the acts of the Government and the laws under which they lived. The people of New York had been deprived of their rights. The city unlike that of free Hamburg possesses no municipal rights whatever. The naked fact is that if these oppressive acts had been submitted to the people for ratification they would unanimously reject them.

There is in the legislature at Albany a great preponderating power over us, exercised by men too in every sense of the word foreign to us, and opposed to us in every element and every characteristic which goes to make a great and free people. These men we find make laws for our government while they take care that these same laws shall be inoperative as against themselves. [Cheers and "That's so."] We have no longer the right to make our own laws. We have no longer the right to tax ourselves. We must ask permission of the legislature at Albany. We have been deprived of the right to appoint our own police; to build our own court-houses; to lay out our public parks, or to say what shall be the legal observances of the Sabbath. [Great cheering.] We have not the right to say who shall be licensed or who shall not be licensed. We can no longer say who shall deal in malt liquors or spirituous liquors; nor have we longer a voice in those domestic arrangements which every community controls except those who live in despotic countries. [Cheers.] We have been deprived of those rights by the legislature—a legislature which in my judgment is a curse not only to the city but to the State and to the whole country. [Faint cheers.]

But, fellow-citizens, the day of deliverance is at hand. [Cheers.] A downtrodden people will no longer lie silent and quiet under oppression of this character. I believe that the good sense of the people of this city will restore to us those rights; will restore power to the government of the State; will restore the power of the chief magistrate of the city [cheers]; restore to the people of New York the right to make those laws which appertain to their own social indulgence, and restore to us that right which every community enjoys to make those peculiar laws which meet the wishes and principles and rights and interests of the people to be governed. [Loud cheers.] I have authority for saying that these rights will be restored. ["Good for you!"] That the time is coming before even next spring when the legislature at Albany will restore to the mayor of New York the right to govern the city of New York according—[the close of the sentence was lost in cheers.]

And if it be my good fortune to be re-elected to this office I can only say to you that if those duties devolve upon me and if I have the power of controlling any of these social and domestic relations I here pledge myself to allow the fullest liberty to all consistent with the safety and good of the community. [Loud cheers.] I am opposed to dictating to any man whether he shall drink water or lager beer or rum. [Vociferous cheering and cries of "Good" and "Bravo."] I am opposed to compelling any man to go to church on Sunday if he chooses to go anywhere else. [Continued applause.] I am opposed to imposing unjust taxation on any man though he does sell an article mischievous in itself. I am opposed also to regulating by law what a man must eat and what he must drink and what he must wear. [Loud cheers and cries of "Good" again.] I will let a man's safety hereafter depend entirely as a matter between himself and his God, for I deny the right of any one to step in between me and my Maker. All this I will leave to the individual. In short, repeating what I said before, all of these social matters, all of these questions appertaining to mere conscience—all of these matters which rest in a man's own heart—I will leave to himself. I ask him only to conform to law. I ask him not to deprive his neighbor of his property. I ask him to be peaceable, orderly and sober. I ask him not to violate any of the rights of the community. In short I ask him to conform only to the regulations necessary to the safety of the community. But I go no further, and so long as you do this so long are you entitled to the protection of the Government and all those inalienable rights which God and nature have vouchsafed to man. [Cheers.]

I have referred to a party which I denominate an abolition party—a party that has brought this country to the verge of ruin and destruction and precipitated upon it a civil war—[cries "That's so"]—a war which if we survive it is more than any nation has been able to do under similar circumstances. A party that is in favor of freeing the slave that he may rid the South of slavery and bring black labor in competition with the white labor of the North. A party who gives all its sympathy to the black and has none at all to spare for the poor white man of the North. A party who will oppress you by the interposition of unjust taxation and exaction; who will grind you down to the earth; who will compel you to work for 50 cents a day, and even withhold that from you if it can be by fraud. [Cheers.] And yet these men have hearts, but not for you but for the negroes of the South. ["That's so."] I tell you that so long as this party rules the country there is no peace for the country. These men are not only in favor of prosecuting the war but they are in favor of perpetuating it and prolonging the war. They are in favor of the war so long as a dollar of the public money is to be expended and in the expenditure they can participate. They are in favor of the war so long as slavery exists on the continent, and they will prosecute it so long as a drop of Southern blood is to be shed, and so long as they are themselves removed from the scene of danger. [Cheers.] They will get Irishmen and Germans to fill up the regiments and go forth to defend the country under the idea that they will themselves remain at home to divide the amount of plunder that is to be distributed. [Cheers.]

If this party gets possession of the city government God help you! [Cheers and laughter.] They have driven the Union to destruction, and they are now battling steadily against the old Empire State itself, which if it falls, I repeat, God help us! My friends of New York, false abolitionism rules in our midst, and I tell you instead of the laws we now live under we will have others of ten thousandfold severity if they succeed in getting possession of this democratic city of New York as they have got possession of the State. And if they who have already done so much in Albany to rob you of your rights—if they who in Washington plunged the country into civil war and who wrung $500,000,000 from the thews and sinews and the industry of the country so that they might have contracts, and so that they might abolish slavery and shed the blood of Southern men—did this before what would they not do when in addition to that power they get control of the city in adding to the load of wretchedness and misery under which the country already labors? [Cheers.]

I have discharged my duty hitherto for the public benefit without reference to birth or nationality, without reference to religion,—which is a matter between a man and his God,—and I will only say in conclusion that I have no doubt of a glorious triumph on Tuesday next. [Cheers and cries of "That's so."] I have no doubt that the people of New York are conservative and national, and that they are democratic; and believing that they are conservative and national and democratic I cannot believe that they are ready to yield up their rights; that they are willing to yield up this proud commercial emporium of the American continent into the hands of the worst enemies of the country—such enemies as we are afflicted with. [Cheers, "Never."] Believing this I am convinced that New York will sustain my action without reference to public merits or demerits, and feeling confident as I have ever felt confident that the lion-hearted Democracy of New York will stand by me and the principles I represent I think that on Wednesday morning you may say that all is safe; that New York is secure, and that confidence and order is once more restored. I have great hope that your representative in the city hall may be an instrument in God's hands to bring about national unity and national peace. [Cheers, amid which] Mayor Wood resumed his seat.]

NEW YORK, November 30, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

My language in the speech of Wednesday night here was reported incorrectly. I did not utter the treasonable sentiments reported.

FERNANDO WOOD.

ORIENTAL HOUSE, New York, November 30, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State of the United States.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith I send you two newspaper articles.* Of the truth of the averments therein contained there is not a shadow of a doubt. Is it not the duty of the State Department at Washington to shut the mouth of this caitiff Wood by sending him to some fort in the harbor of New York, or to the State prison at Sing Sing, if they will have him in there? This city has been accursed with him long enough, and now that he has grown bold with his treason is the proper time to rid the community of so vile a pest.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. UNDERHILL.

NEW YORK, December 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith two extracts from our daily papers, the subject of which I think will commend itself to your special attention at a time when the Government needs and is fairly entitled to the aid and sympathy of its friends, and when those who are placed in positions of trust and honor pervert their influence and talents and openly enlist both in the service of its enemies. I am but an humble citizen, but feel it to be within the scope of my duty as I hold it to be of every true friend of his country to spot a traitor wherever found, and whoever may omit to do so I will not knowingly be one of them. This, respected sir, must be my apology for addressing you.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

WILLIAM L. HASKINS.

FERNANDO WOOD'S TREASON.

We have not cared about saying much on the character of Fernando Wood who is now a candidate for mayor again under greatly diminished chances of success. We knew that if he were given the opportunity he would damage himself more than he could be damaged by any opponent. One year ago he was writing base letters to Toombs, of Georgia, declaring his sorrow because our police stopped the transmission of arms that were about to be used against our own lives, and he was contriving plans for disconnecting the city of New York from the Union. He had small maps made for distribution among his followers which represented this island as a part of a new Southern Confederacy. He was then an out-and-out traitor.

But the great outbreak of Northern enthusiasm which followed the assault upon Fort Sumter frightened him for a time. Like the sly fox that he is he wiped his eyes in apparent penitence and pronounced for the Union. He had the audacity even to attend the great meeting at Union Square and make a patriotic speech. Somebody in the crowd cried out, instinctively distrustful of his honesty, "We mean to hold you to this, Fernandy;" but that was a very inexperienced politician if he supposed that Fernandy was to be held to anything but his own interest. With the abatement of the first popular enthusiasm Wood's zeal has abated. His love for the Union has declined with the days. At last he is bold enough to avow his opposition to the war and to make appeals to the people against it. In a speech read to the Germans on Wednesday the hoof of the devil was shown in this wise:

I have referred to a party which I denominate an abolition party—a party that has brought this country to a verge of ruin and destruction and precipitated upon it a civil war—a war which if we survive it is more than any nation has been able to do under similar circumstances. A party that is in favor of freeing the slave that it may rid the South of slavery and bring black labor in competition with the white labor of the North. A party who gives all its sympathy to the black and has none at all to spare for the poor white man of the North. A party who will oppress you by the interposition of unjust taxation and exaction; will grind you down to the earth; who will compel you to work for 50 cents a day, and even withhold that from you if it can be by fraud. [Cheers.] And yet these men have hearts, but not for you but for the negroes of the South. [That's so.] I tell you that so long as this party rules the country there is no peace for the country. These men are not only in favor of prosecuting the war but they are in favor of perpetuating it and prolonging the war. They are in favor of the war so long as a dollar of the public money is to be expended and in the expenditure of which they can participate. They are in favor of the war so long as slavery exists on the continent, and they will prosecute it so long as a drop of Southern blood is to be shed, and so long as they are themselves removed from the scene of danger. [Cheers.] They will get Irishmen and Germans to fill up the regiments and go forth to defend the country under the idea that they will themselves remain at home to divide the amount of plunder that is to be distributed. [Cheers.] If this party get possession of the city government God help you! [Cheers and laughter.] They have driven the Union to destruction, and they are now battling steadily against the old Empire State itself, which if it falls, I repeat, God help us! If they who in Washington plunged the country into civil war and who wrung $500,000,000 from the thews and sinews and the industry of the country so that they might have contracts, and so that they might abolish slavery and shed the blood of Southern men—did this before what would they not do when in addition to that power they get control of the city in adding to the load of wretchedness and misery under which the country already labors? [Cheers.]

Nothing so atrocious as this has been uttered since the beginning of the war, and the miscreant who uttered it asks the suffrages of the free citizens of New York.

[Inclosure No. 2.—Editorial extract from the Brooklyn Times November 30, 1861.]

ANOTHER CANDIDATE FOR FORT LAFAYETTE.

There is something very imposing in impudence. Cheek is a quality which the world recognizes and defers to. Boldness is admirable; but impudence, cheek and boldness, when applied to the defense and dissemination of treason, which are used to stir up civil strife, to set class against class, and prepare the way for anarchy, lose the respect the world otherwise accords them, and while we are startled by their display in such a cause we seek to punish the possessor of them. On Wednesday evening last Fernando Wood addressed a large meeting of Germans in a lager beer garden in New York in which he displayed more impudence; cheek and wicked boldness than we thought even he, reckless and reliant upon the recklessness and wickedness of the elements which sustain him as we knew him to be, would dare to display. After sending up a wail over the fact that the power which during his first term of office he had so abused and perverted for his own selfish political purposes had been taken from him, and assuring his audience that before next April that power would be restored, he avows his determination should he be re-elected to "allow the fullest liberty to all," and remove all barriers to licentiousness and permit everybody to do just as he pleases, irrespective of every conventionality, of every divine command, of every sacred prejudice; and promises further that no man shall be taxed for selling bad rum "no matter what mischievous results" the sale of such poisons may bring about. He then goes on to abuse in the choicest Billingsgate the present administration,—under the name of the Abolition party,—accuses it of having precipitated a civil war upon the country for the sole purpose of freeing the blacks of the South and bringing their labor into competition with the whites of the North, and whose purpose—he goes on to relate—is to oppress you by the imposition of unjust taxation—who will grind you down to the earth—who will compel you to work for 50 cents per day, and even withhold that from you if they can by fraud.

He accuses the administration of prolonging the war for the sake of plunder only, and then belches forth the following treason:

They will get Irishmen and Germans to fill up the regiments and go forth to defend the country under the idea that they will themselves remain at home to divide the amount of plunder that is to be distributed. If this party get possession of the city government God help you! They have driven the Union to destruction, and they are now battling steadily against the old Empire State itself, which if it falls, I repeat, God help us! My friends of New York, false abolitionism rules in our midst, and I tell you instead of the laws we now live under we will have others of ten thousandfold severity if they succeed in getting possession of this Democratic city of New York as they have got possession of the State. And if they who have already done so much in Albany to rob you of your rights,—if they who in Washington plunged the country into civil war and who wrung $500,000,000 from the thews and sinews and the industry of the country so that they might have contracts, and so that they might abolish slavery and shed the blood of Southern men,—did this before what will they not do when in addition to that power they get control of the city in adding to the load of wretchedness and misery under which the country already labors?

What will the noble and true hearted Irishmen and the honest, patriotic Germans who have staked their lives upon the issue of this contest think of this? They, poor fellows, are imbued with the idea that they are battling for a great principle; that they are pouring out their blood to sustain a sacred cause, and daily court death in the belief that the Government which they have lived under and under which they have enjoyed the blessings of liberty and freedom demands such sacrifice in order that others—their children and down-trodden and oppressed countrymen—may hereafter enjoy the blessings they have enjoyed. But this bold traitor Wood, this reckless demagogue, this anarchist, who would see barricades erected in the streets of the metropolis, and have class arrayed against class, and have blood flowing in the kennels, tells them that it is all a mistake; that they are only fighting to keep an administration in power which inaugurated the war, and prolongs it only that it may grow fat on plunder and rob the Treasury filled by exactions "wrung from the thews and sinews of the industry of the country."

If this is not treason we do not know how to define it. If this is not giving encouragement to the rebels in arms against the Government by sustaining them in their idea that there is a great anti-war and anti-Union peace party in the North language has no force and words mean nothing. Such expressions at such a time are a proof of how strong Fernando Wood's reliance must be upon his own power and the strength of the elements with which he works, and how much he needs to be taught that no position, no power, no political intriguing and wire-pulling can shield him or any other man from the just consequences of treasonable utterances and acts. There are a hundred men to-day held as State prisoners in the various forts in our harbors not half so guilty as Wood, and who should be set free at once if this lying demagogue cannot be checked. He is as much a traitor to-day as Mason or Slidell, and should share their fate. And yet such a man dares to ask the patriotic city of New York to place him at the head of its municipal government, and promises if they do so to bring about national peace. God defend us from the peace such a man would bring about—a peace purchased at the price of national honor, of the sacrifice of every principle we hold dear, and the utter demolition of everything the good, the honest, the loyal and the true cherish as sacred!

Case of Parker H. French.

This person, known as Parker H. French, alias Carlisle Murray, alias Charles Maxy, was denounced to the Department of State as being engaged in efforts to fit out a privateer or private vessel at Boston under pretense of arming a vessel for the public service, and as being busy in propagating a secret disloyal society called the Knights of the Golden Circle in Boston and other parts of New England. On or about the 2d of November, 1861, an order was issued for his arrest, which was executed on or about the 6th of November, 1861, at Branford, Conn., and the prisoner taken to Fort Warren. The papers discovered in possession of French show that he had been negotiating with Mr. Lawrence, of Boston, to sell to the Government for him two steamers for the naval service; also that he had been ostensibly making some exertion to buy and arm for the service of the Government or to induce the Government to arm a propeller at Boston; also that he had in his possession and had made some use of a set of forms for a secret society called Knights of the Golden Square, instead of Circle, and that said secret society purported to be of loyal instead of disloyal character. French himself states in letters to the Department of State that his reputation was so bad that unfavorable constructions were put upon all his acts. The suspicions excited against him at Boston were not allayed by the appearances which it was assumed he had contrived to throw around his movements and intentions for the express purpose of eluding justice. The said French remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

NEW YORK, November 30, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I am appealed to in most pathetic terms by Parker H. French to give his case a careful examination and have promised him I would do so. He while admitting that there are clouds upon his good name protests most earnestly that treason cannot be imputed to him. If he is loyal he should have the benefit of that virtue even though it should prove to be "linked with one virtue and a thousand crimes." He informs me that his case is fully before the State Department in the papers he has furnished. From some things I have heard it would seem possible that he might with propriety be handed over to some local jurisdiction, say of Boston. His case may be already all clear to you. If, however, I can do anything in the premises please forward the papers and I will look into it. I shall be embarrassed by my promise to him to do so and desire to keep my good faith by looking over his case.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo. In reply I inclose herewith all the papers on file in this Department relative to Parker H. French, with the remark that Mr. L. C. Baker, the detective who arrested him, is firmly of the opinion that French is an agent of the insurgents.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

413 BROOME STREET, New York, December 18, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I have gone carefully over the papers transmitted in the case of Parker H. French. There is no certain evidence of disloyalty upon which he could be held as a traitor guilty of any overt act. His papers contain certain memoranda which have probable reference to a privateering expedition; also traces of a design to speculate out of a sale of certain propellers to the United States Government, which I suppose is not a crime or better men than he are not innocent; also abundant evidence that he is a rascal prepared to depredate on all governments and everybody, and that he is a spiritualist, an opium eater and lunatic, or that he simulates all these characters. I cannot doubt that French is guilty of offenses for which he might be held and punished in Boston, and have had some correspondence with Mr. A. A. Lawrence, one of his victims, hoping to find proofs to justify handing him over to the civil authorities, but as yet the parties who have been imposed upon are not quite prepared to take a public part in the matter.

Under these circumstances I return the papers but am not willing to say that he should be set at liberty. I think any confinement is better than liberty for him and the public. I inclose also two letters* from Mr. A. A. Lawrence to me. If hereafter I should find a more favorable state of things in Boston I will venture to communicate with you again on the subject.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

P. S.—I send the package of papers by express.

[NEW YORK,] *December 20, 1861.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: I have this morning received several affidavits* in behalf of Parker H. French. They are not of a character to affect the conclusions in relation to his case and are therefore not at present important, but it is proper that they should be on file in your Department.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

NEW YORK, *February 13, 1862.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Yours containing the letter of H. Lynde Harrison in relation to Parker H. French is received. I have given much attention to the case of Parker H. French. I do not find in the evidence I have seen any facts or circumstances which cannot be reconciled with his loyalty to the Government. Everything connected with his career is mysterious and feigned, but I think it is the result of his temperament and habits as a general filibuster. It appears that he concerned himself about selling propellers to the Government, but in that transaction A. A. Lawrence was a party, and there is no satisfactory evidence that in that business French intended anything more than a speculation of such character as has been common during this war.

I think he should be set at liberty, and I do not think the conditions upon which he should be discharged are important. If he is a Union man as his papers would seem to imply conditions are not needed, but if he is a well disguised traitor conditions will be useless, as he has no moral qualities to command any degree of confidence in his promises.

I return the paper inclosed to me with a recommendation that Mr. Parker H. French be set at liberty on such conditions as shall be deemed proper.

Respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

I return herewith the paper inclosed to me.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, March 17, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: * * * I have the honor to report that the following named persons have taken their parole and left agreeably to your order of the 21st ultimo: * * * Parker H. French. * * *

I am, sir, with highest respect, your obedient servant,
J. DIMICK,
Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

Case of James Brown.

James Brown, of Saint Martin's Parish, La., was arrested in Boston, Mass., about the 13th of November, 1861, by the U. S. marshal of Massachusetts, charged with being about to return to the South with letters and contraband information. Upon his person was found a number of specimens of leather tanned by a new process (in the space of twenty-four hours), the receipt for doing which it was believed he had obtained with the intention of taking South to be used for the benefit of the insurrectionists. Also neatly sewed in the lining of his coat sleeve was discovered a letter from W. L. Yancey to his son B. C. Yancey, captain of artillery, C. S. Army, Fort Morgan, Mobile, Ala. This letter was dated London, August 23, 1861, and inclosed to the address of Messrs. Hobart & Forster, of New Orleans, and of a highly treasonable character. November 15, 1861, an order was issued by the Department of State directing the U. S. marshal to convey Brown to Fort Warren, which order was duly executed on the 20th of that month. The said James Brown remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Boston, November 13, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to report * * * that I arrested here to-day one James Brown, of Saint Martin's Parish, La., who came from there via New Orleans, Memphis, Henderson, Ky., Saint Louis, Chicago, &c., leaving October 10 and arriving here October 27, with a pass from Governor Moore and an officer at Henderson, &c. He has been engaged in getting out railroad sleepers in Louisiana, and has a steam saw-mill and a gang of hands engaged in the work for the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, now finished eighty miles from New Orleans to Brashear City. Since his return to Bridgewater, Mass., where he formerly lived and has a wife and child, he has been making careful inquiries into the process of tanning leather in twenty-four hours, and had on his person a number of specimens of leather probably prepared by this process. He brought as he says a few open letters to parties North, and had quite a number that he was to take back with him which he gave up and proved to be merely private family correspondence.

Upon searching him there was found in his coat-sleeve lining, sewed carefully in, the inclosed letter from W. L. Yancey to his son at Fort Morgan, Ala. It was directed as per outer envelope, and Brown was requested by Hobart & Forster to call for their letters at John Monroe & Co.'s, New York, and bring them safely through. Not going to New York, he sent by a friend who obtained this and another (a private letter) to Mr. Forster and brought them here to Brown, who declared his entire ignorance of their contents as they were sealed. He had no other articles except his and his wife's personal baggage which was carefully searched. I have him still in custody, and should be glad of directions in regard to him. I think he was going back to look after his interests South, taking his wife with him, and that he took these letters as a friendly act to the New Orleans firm.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN S. KEYES,
U. S. Marshal.

[Inclosure.]

15 HALF MOON STREET, London, August 23, 1861.

[B. C. YANCEY, Esq.,

Captain of Artillery, C. S. Army, Fort Morgan, Mobile, Ala.]

DEAR BEN: After so long a delay after having had two good personal opportunities of sending to me direct and yet not hearing from you I was surprised on receiving from you your letter of 23d July this morning. I believe it contained not a word of news, not even a reference to your health. All its allusions to war matters I had learned long since. We get three mails a week from the United States and Canada and see all the New York and Baltimore papers ten and eleven days after publication. We also see the New Orleans papers pretty regularly. What I desired to know was that within your own immediate circle of movements; the condition of the forts in Mobile Harbor; who is commander; who are your brother officers; what is your daily routine of duties; what your command; are they regular troops, militia, or volunteers; what your progress in learning the details of your profession, &c. None of that is to be found in the newspapers. I hear from home irregularly yet still often. I received at one time, that is regularly, letters of dates of 20th, 23d and 27th June; then a long lapse and then one of 22d July and none since. On that day your mother wrote that she rarely heard from you—perhaps not since your return. In my eye all this is wrong—yea, it is cruel. The ladies are at home and every man of the family at a distance and the times gloomy and troublesome. You could write weekly. How you look upon it is another thing.

My health is good. I have fattened here very much. I can only allude in general terms to public affairs. Europe desires to be strictly neutral yet now believes that the South will win its cause. Capitalists as at present advised will lend no money to either side. The North has been buying arms very largely, good and bad. It is difficult for us to ship any. Our officers here are doing their duty with energy and sagacity. The blockade will be raised before December if not made perfect. France and England are conferring and acting together. There is no difference. Spain, Denmark, Belgium and Prussia are all ready to recognize us to-day, but will only act when the great powers act.

There is enough cotton here to answer till the 21st November, if they consume as much a week as they did last year. They may make it last by short time and increased import of East India cotton and increased use of it till February. The summer here has been delightful. I have worn broadcloth all the time and sleep under two blankets every night. The harvest is gathered and was fine—a loss to the North of $30,000,000. Fruits are very dear. Too little sun to ripen or give a good flavor. I see Southerners constantly. No trouble in coming and going over the lines. No search coming, but search for those going home.

Your father,

W. L. YANCEY.

P. S.—Foreign postage is high and is by weight, hence I write closely on silk paper. If not prepaid it is double. I paid for your letter 50 cents. You can write and send to George Forster, New Orleans, with request to forward through John Monroe & Co., of New York. Address as before under cover to Arthur Dare, 15 Half-Moon street, London. I send a postage stamp to put on that envelope—of one silk sheet and two silk envelopes.

Case of Rev. J. P. B. Wilmer.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, November 18, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Some weeks ago the Rev. Dr. Wilmer, of Philadelphia, resigned his pastoral charge with the assurance from General Scott whom he consulted that he should have a passport to Virginia where he has property. He is now here with his wife and three young children. May not his case be properly made an exception to the late rule suspending the issue of passports? Was not the engagement of General Scott a pledge which the Government may be called on to redeem, as Mr. Wilmer on the faith he reposed in it has given up his place and is here without the means of subsistence, his resources in Virginia being cut off? I hope you will take this view of the subject. I have known

Mr. Wilmer many years. He is a pure-hearted man and has done no act of hostility to the Government. He was fifteen years in Northampton County as a clergyman, and came to me yesterday to offer his services to go there and entreat his old friends to submit to the Government without a contest and I may yet accept them, in which case he may go that way to Fort Monroe where he can meet his wife and children. I hope the peculiarity of this case may be considered as one of those exceptions which confirm the rule instead of impairing its force

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX.

Major-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 21, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant inclosing one from the Rev. J. P. B. Wilmer, late of Philadelphia, who desires a passport to enable him to reach Virginia. The rule adopted by the Government after deliberate consideration since the breaking out of the rebellion has been to allow no passes across the military lines of the United States without the previous sanction and approbation of the Secretary of State, and this course has hitherto been rigidly adhered to. It is therefore believed that the Rev. Mr. Wilmer must have labored under a misapprehension as to the promise said to have been made to him by Lieutenant-General Scott assuring him of a passport for his family into Virginia. I do not see that an exception can well be made in the case of Mr. Wilmer, since a relaxation of this most necessary rule would probably lead to consequences which would render it virtually inoperative.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, November 22, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter in regard to Rev. Mr. Wilmer. There was as you supposed a mistake. He says it was mine. I inclose Lieutenant-General Scott's letter.* Mrs. Wilmer values it as an autograph and you will oblige her by returning it to me. It seems General Scott's promise extended only to Mrs. Wilmer and her young children. The three with her here are all young. If she has a claim on the strength of the general's promise which the Government recognizes will you please send the passport to me.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,

Major-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 25, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Headquarters, Baltimore.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant with the one from Lieutenant-General Scott to Mrs.

* Not found.

Wilmer. The rule adopted by the Government hitherto with regard to the granting of passports to the insurgent States I regret to say does not permit an exception in the case of Mrs. Wilmer and her children. The letter of General Scott is herewith returned.

I am, general, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, &C.,

Fort Monroe, January 7, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Herewith you will receive a pass signed by you in favor of the Rev. Dr. Wilmer. Being a strong rebel in heart and sentiment which he did not conceal I became suspicious that the pass was in some way improperly obtained. This was confirmed by the quantity of articles which he brought with him and which I have detained until I hear from you on the subject. He emphatically denied that he was in the employ of the United States. The wording of the pass was so different from any other that I have seen coming from you that I concluded to forward it for your inspection.

You have any number of rebel spies in Washington. The rebels have an agent there who I presume professes to be a strong Union man and who obtains all the information necessary for those who command in the rebel army. They know much better than I do what is doing at Washington. The expedition of General Burnside is perfectly known at Norfolk and much better than I do, and preparation is making to meet it at the island of Roanoke.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. WOOL,

Major-General.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 30, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN E. WOOL.

GENERAL: The Rev. Dr. Wilmer, of Philadelphia, who will hand you this, is proceeding to Virginia accompanied by his wife and children on public business of the United States. I will thank you to allow him to pass freely in either direction.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD

[Inclosure No. 2.]

List of property found in the baggage of Rev. Mr. Wilmer, who was forwarded to Norfolk by flag of truce January 2, 1862.

One hundred and seven spools of silk; 31 rolls of tape; 26 new white linen shirts; 48 pairs of boots, shoes and rubbers, nearly all new; 650 envelopes; 6 reams paper; 31 pairs socks; 2 gross steel pens; 15 pen-holders; 11 silk vest patterns; 2 silk dress patterns; 2 dozen handkerchiefs; 2 pieces silk; 25 gross buttons; 50 papers pins; 100 papers needles; 50 spools thread; 5 pieces gray woolen cloth; 1 piece (30 yards) white cotton cloth; 1 piece white flannel; 10 pounds coffee; 50 pairs pants, part slightly worn.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 8, 1862.

Maj. Gen. JOHN E. WOOL, Fortress Monroe, Va.

GENERAL: I have received and thank you for your communication of the 7th instant relative to the Rev. Mr. Wilmer. His loyalty was vouched for by the Hon. Eli Thayer, late Member of Congress from Massachusetts. The loyalty of Mr. Thayer himself it is believed cannot be questioned. As it would appear from your letter, however, that he may have been mistaken I have sent for him to ask for explanations on the subject. Meanwhile you may retain the articles, a list of which you send, until the result shall be made known to you. The unusual form of the pass to Mr. Wilmer was occasioned by the illness of General McClellan.

I am, general, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

PHILADELPHIA, February 27, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON.

MY DEAR SIR: I trust you will excuse my troubling you with this letter, which I regret to do knowing you to be much pressed at this time with important matters. Some time since my brother, Rev. Dr. Wilmer, obtained from Mr. Seward a pass for himself and family to go into Virginia. On his arrival at Fort Monroe he was permitted to take but a very small portion of his baggage. Among the packages detained was a box of sermons which he is very anxious to have forwarded to him. If not inconsistent with your duty would you be kind enough to authorize the provost-marshal to forward the same to him with so much of the clothing as you may think proper to let him have. Should such a course not meet your approval I should esteem it a personal favor if you would authorize him to deliver to me such of his effects as may be detained at Fort Monroe that I may take charge of them until such time as free communication may take place with the State of Virginia. If you will send me such an order on the provost-marshal authorizing the delivery to me such of his effects detained at the fort I shall feel that you have conferred a special obligation on,

Very respectfully, your friend,

JNO. W. WILMER.

Case of the Messrs. Day, Colemans, De Bell, Carper and others, concerned in the murder of Union soldiers.

William B. Day was arrested about the 27th day of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with having been an open and unrelenting secessionist, and that he with others in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville and murdered two of them, wounding another. Brigadier-General Porter informs the Secretary of State in a letter dated the 17th of January, 1862, that an order was made by Major-General McClellan, commanding, that all the prisoners in custody suspected of having participated in the murder in August last of the U. S. pickets near Dranesville, Va., be held until a trial could be had in their cases and that the evidence in each case found be reported to him.* The said William B. Day remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

John T. Day was arrested about the 27th of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol. He was charged with having been an open and unrelenting secessionist, and that he with others in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville and murdered two of them, wounding another. The said John T. Day remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

John Coleman, Charles W. Coleman and Philip W. Carper were arrested about the 27th of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington were committed to the Old Capitol Prison. They were charged with having been open and unrelenting secessionists, and that they in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville, Va., and murdered two of them, wounding another. The persons mentioned above remained at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when they were transferred to the charge of the War Department.

John B. Farr was arrested about the 27th of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol. He was charged with having been an open and unrelenting secessionist; a member of a secret committee who made it a business to seek out the Union men of Fairfax County, Va., and by threats forcing them to abandon their property and leave the State; also a member of the home guard; in that capacity that he with others in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville and murdered two of them, wounding another. The said John B. Farr remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

John T. De Bell was arrested about the 27th November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with having been an open and unrelenting secessionist, and that he with others in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville, Va., and murdered two of them, wounding another. The said John T. De Bell remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

R. H. Gunnell was arrested about the 27th day of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with having been an open and unrelenting secessionist, and that he with others in August last awaited the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville and murdered two of them, wounding another. The said R. H. Gunnell remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with an order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

James [W] Farr was arrested about the 27th day of November, 1861, by a cavalry company in General McCall's division at Dranesville, Va., and having been brought to Washington was committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with having been an open and unremitting secessionist, and that he with others in August last awaited in ambush the coming of some Federal pickets near Dranesville, Va., and murdered two of them, wounding one. The said James [W.] Farr remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

These persons [George G. and Richard Coleman] were arrested at Dranesville, Va., by order of Brigadier-General McCall December 6, 1861, and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. They were charged with having in conjunction with a party of citizens of Dranesville assassinated several U. S. soldiers doing picket duty and with mutilating their bodies. The said George G. and Richard Coleman remained in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when they were transferred to the charge of the War Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

CAMP PEIRPOINT, VA., November 27, 1861.

Capt. H. J. BIDDLE,

Assistant Adjutant-General, McCall's Division.

SIR: In obedience to orders I started from this camp yesterday with my regiment at 9 o'clock in the evening for the purpose of marching on Dranesville. * * * I arrested six of the citizens of Dranesville who are known to be secessionists of the bitterest stamp. The names of the citizens taken are as follows: John T. Day, M. D., Dranesville; R. H. Gunnell, Great Falls, Va.; John T. De Bell, C. W. Coleman, Dranesville; W. B. Day, M. D., Dranesville; J. B. Farr. Upon my return some miles from Dranesville a fire was opened upon the head of the column from a thick pine wood. Assistant Surgeon Alexander was seriously wounded and Private Joel Houghtaling was badly wounded and I had my horse killed. Surgeon Stanton received a ball in his overcoat and his horse was shot twice. The woods were instantly surrounded and the carbineers dismounted and sent into the woods. We killed two and captured four, one of whom is shot twice and is not expected to live. Private Houghtaling is I fear mortally wounded.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. D. BAYARD,

Colonel First Pennsylvania Regiment Cavalry.

HEADQUARTERS MCCALL'S DIVISION,

Camp Peirpoint, November 27, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: Herewith are forwarded to be delivered to you eleven prisoners taken by our cavalry in a dash at the secession picket at Dranesville, viz, two cavalrymen, three infantry soldiers; five secessionists of known activity in furnishing supplies to rebel forces or taken in arms, the details of which arrests will be furnished in the report of the officer concerned. One of the prisoners is said to be a South Carolina officer and aide-de-camp.

By direction of Brigadier-General McCall:

H. J. BIDDLE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosed list of prisoners.]

W. D. Farley (captain and aide to General Bonham), First South Carolina Volunteers; F. de Caradene, lieutenant Seventh South Carolina Volunteers; Private F. Hildebrand, Thirtieth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Cavalry; Private A. M. Whitten, Thirtieth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Cavalry; P. W. Carper, Seventh Regiment South Carolina Volunteers.

Citizens, &c.—John T. Day, M. D., Dranesville; R. H. Gunnell, Great Falls, Va.; John T. De Bell, C. W. Coleman, Dranesville; William B. Day, M. D., Dranesville; J. B. Farr.

The following is a list of the citizens that attacked four of our men on Lowe's Island, killing two of them, and stripped and left them so that the hogs ate them: a Dr. William B. Day, a Dr. John Day, Thomas Carper, John Coleman, Gilson Jenkins, Samuel Jenkins, a Thomas Coleman (who now has one of the pistols taken at that time), James Farr, a Philip Carper, James Carper and Stephen Farr. They are all residents about Dranesville. This information was furnished by three of Mrs. Coleman's negroes who came into Camp Griffin November 26, 1861.

The above is a copy of a paper furnished by John Hawkshurst, member of the Union Legislature of Virginia from Fairfax County, now residing at first house this side of Lewinsville on road from Langley. Mr. Hawkshurst goes to Wheeling to attend the Legislature to-morrow. The negroes referred to he states were sent into Washington from General Hancock on November 27.

the Confederate pickets. I keep a house of public entertainment and was compelled to feed them or be arrested. I also fed some of General McCall's men when in Dranesville, and came very near being arrested by the Confederates for that. None of the exiles from Fairfax can say that I had anything to do with driving them out of the county or to have them arrested. To the contrary was always opposed to it. I have a brother-in-law who had to leave his sick wife and four little children whom I have supported up to time of my arrest. I have never been in arms against the United States at any time. I have a wife and three little children at home, with no person to do anything for them. The prisoners taken with me know that I could not get a pass to go through the Confederate lines to their army. Anything you can do for me will be thankfully received. I want to be able to go home when the army advances again.

Your obedient servant,

CHAS. W. COLEMAN.

HEADQUARTERS MCCALL'S DIVISION,
Camp Peirpoint, Va., December 6, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: Herewith are transmitted to be held in custody and disposed of as may be directed by the commanding general two prisoners, viz: George Coleman and John [Richard] Coleman, taken at the house of John Gunnell, a squire and noted secessionist. * * * Herewith are also sent two colored men, the property of John Gunnell, named David Johnson and John Jackson, whose disposition is to remain with the family but who were brought in as being available as laborers in the support of the enemy.

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. MCCALL,
Brigadier-General, Commanding Division.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, Washington, January 1, 1862.
Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

I have now been confined in prison for nearly two months and for what charge I have not been able to learn. It is true I fed the Confederate pickets, and what would have been the consequence had I refused? I keep a public house. The meals were called for by the pickets who paid for the same with their own money. You can see I was compelled to do it. I never left my home at the advance of the Union troops as a good many of my neighbors did. I remained at home hoping that I would be left inside the Union lines and free to express my sentiments. This I failed in. I know a good many Union men in the upper part of Fairfax and lower part of Loudoun Counties who are waiting patiently and praying for an advance of the Union army. Mr. Gracey, of the New York Thirty-fourth, who was wounded on Lowe's Island near Dranesville, was left at my house for two weeks and was attended to by me, who afterward made his escape from Fairfax Court-House and got back to Washington, can tell you whether he thinks me a Union man or not. When General McCall was in Dranesville in October he could only find four men in the village and I was one of that number; and if I had been such a rebel I would not have been found in the village at that time, hearing that he was advancing two hours before he arrived.

Whoever reported me it has been guess work with them, and nothing would give me more pleasure than to meet them on trial. I would also refer you to the Union men's families who were left by their husbands to avoid being arrested whether they ever knew me to have anything to do with having Union men arrested or their property taken from them. I was abused by the Confederates for feeding some of General McCall's men and for selling him 100 bushels oats, threatening to arrest me for doing it, and I was also refused a pass to go through their lines to get provisions. If you will grant me the liberty of taking the oath of allegiance to the United States and to remain in the lines I will do it until my home is in the Union again.

Your obedient servant,

CHS. W. COLEMAN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 13, 1862.

Respectfully referred to Brig. Gen. Andrew Porter with a request that unless there are well-founded reasons to the contrary the prisoner may be released upon the usual conditions. Please report to this Department.

E. D. WEBSTER,
Clerk.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: As the daughter of a good and loyal citizen of the United States I beg you will give attention to the following statements:

On the night of the 27th of November, 1861, the U. S. troops entered the village of Dranesville, Fairfax County, Va., and seized my father who was then in his bed upon suspicion of disloyalty and brought him to this city and placed him in the Old Capitol Prison where he is still in custody. Being a resident of Washington myself I solicited Mr. Carpenter (correspondent of the New York Tribune) to procure me a pass which your honor very politely granted. Upon the occasion of my visit my father assured me in the presence of the said Mr. Carpenter that his sentiments have always been those of loyalty to the Government, and his feelings are sorely wounded to think that he should thus suffer upon a false accusation, and he assured me that nothing would give him more pleasure than to be permitted to swear allegiance to the Government he has always loved. Furthermore he has a family—a wife and young children depending upon him for support and protection—who have been left exposed to outrage and want with no one to care for them.

So far as I can learn no individual has preferred any charge against him. I presume he would remove his family to this city if liberated. Now, sir, with these facts I beg and implore that you will give speedy attention to his case; and for the sake of humanity, for the sake of the cause of the Union, for the sake of his health which is declining from confinement and grief, for the sake of his helpless and unprotected family, for the sake of God, I trust your honor will grant him an immediate release.

Submitting the above I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

KATE FARR.

[Indorsement.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 6, 1862.

Respectfully referred to Brigadier-General Porter with a request that he will examine this case and report whether there is any well founded reason why the prisoner should not be released upon taking the oath and making the usual stipulations.

By order of the Secretary of State:

E. D. WEBSTER.

[OLD CAPITOL PRISON,] January 6, 1862.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington, D. C.:

I was for a time here confined as prisoner of war. My relation is now changed. I belong to Colonel Stone's staff, the Sixtieth Virginia Regiment, and as surgeon went with the militia when called out under a requisition of the governor. I performed duty as such at the Junction, and upon our own wounded near the battle-ground, and rendered service on Tuesday to your wounded soldiers in connection with Doctor Smith of the regular service, a fact I omitted to state in a letter* to General Porter.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM B. DAY.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 13, 1862.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that on the 4th instant there was received at this office a communication signed Kate Farr addressed to the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, and by him referred to you with his request indorsed thereon that you would examine the case of John B. Farr therein mentioned and report whether any well-founded reason existed why said Farr should not be discharged from custody upon taking the oath of allegiance, &c.

The communication aforesaid sets forth substantially that the writer, Kate Farr, is the daughter of John B. Farr, of Dranesville, Va., who was seized by the U. S. troops on the night of 27th of November at Dranesville upon suspicion of his disloyalty, and was brought to this city where he has ever since been confined in the Old Capitol Prison; that she procured a pass to visit her father in said prison and was there assured by him that he had always been a man of loyal sentiments, and that his feelings were deeply wounded to think that he must there thus suffer from false accusation, he also assuring her that nothing would give him greater pleasure than to swear allegiance to the Government he had always loved; that her father has a wife and young children depending upon him for protection and support, and that she had not known of any charge having been made against him, and finally that for reason of the above-recited facts and other causes she asked that her father be discharged from custody.

On the 27th day of November last eleven prisoners were received at these headquarters sent in from General McCall's division, with the following accompanying dispatch.† Upon the receipt of the prisoners aforesaid means were early taken to procure and collect the evidence in their cases individually and collectively, and as far as concerned J. B. Farr resulted as follows:

William Tyson, citizen of Langley, Va., stated that he was postmaster at Beach Grove, Va., from which place he was driven by the rebels about two months before Farr's arrest, and that just previous to his leaving he was told by John Hurst, a secessionist, that John B. Farr was one of the guerrilla party which waited in ambush in August last near the Potomac, a short distance from Dranesville, for a company of Union soldiers who had crossed over from Maryland at that point, said party attacking and firing on the Union soldiers, killing two or three and wounding another who was taken by them to Dranesville, where a glorification was held by the secessionists over their achievement. Tyson further stated that of his own knowledge said Farr was an active secessionist and very bitter against Union men.

Nelson Voorhes, of Dranesville, Va., stated that he knew John B. Farr as a very rabid secessionist who had been very active in obtaining information for the rebels, and was a member of the rebel home guards of Dranesville.

Nathaniel Hanery, of Dranesville, stated that he knew John B. Farr to be a secessionist who voted against the Union at the May election and used all his power to persuade others to do likewise; that Farr was a member of a committee which met at Fairfax Court-House for the purpose of inquiring into the opinions of citizens of Fairfax County and with the view of driving out such men as were found to be favorable to the Union; that among others who were thus driven out were two brothers named Gould and John Lester, a merchant, all of whom with their families were compelled to leave, while their property was all either destroyed or confiscated.

Amos T. Berdle stated that he knew John B. Farr; had heard him say that he would kill the damned Yankees wherever he could catch them; that they had no business there at all; that Farr voted for secession and did all he could to persuade others to do the same.

Thomas T. Johnson, of Fairfax County, Va., stated that John B. Farr was a notorious secessionist, having voted that ticket and was a member of the rebel home guards; that he was one of the committee which met at Fairfax Court-House having for its object the hunting up, persecution and expulsion of Union men; that he (Johnson) was told by J. B. Farr that he (Farr) had heard he was a Union man, and that if such was the case he (Johnson) had better be leaving.

Henry Bishop, of the same county, stated that Farr was a notorious secessionist.

William Waters, same county, stated that Farr was a notorious secessionist, and was reported to have taken an active part in aiding the rebels and in persecuting Union men.

Daniel L. Borden stated that he was arrested the day after Ellsworth was killed by John T. Day, John B. Farr and others and was told by them that if he (Borden) went to Washington to join the Union army his property would be burned and his family massacred.

Such in brief is the evidence against Farr, the mere recital of which is sufficient to establish the groundlessness of his pretension to be a good and loyal citizen of the United States. But the case does by no means rest here. It has been stated by several different persons from Dranesville and vicinity whose statements are on file in this office that that same guerrilla party of which John B. Farr is stated to have made one member did some time in the month of August last proceed from Dranesville in the night to a place near Sandy Landing, and there laid in ambush for a number of U. S. soldiers who had crossed over from the Maryland side of the Potomac whom they fired upon, killing two or more and wounding one, which last was taken by said party to Dranesville, where a glorification was held by them and numerous other secessionists of that place, the company being made jolly with whisky purchased with money taken from the rifled pockets of the murdered soldiers. That these soldiers after thus being killed were robbed of arms and other things about their persons, among the rest a letter from one of their wives, and were also stripped of their clothing, which was afterward given to negro slaves owned by the men who thus savagely performed these sacrilegious acts and by said slaves was worn, while the dead and plundered bodies were left unburied on the field to be eaten up, as they were, by the rebels' hogs; meantime the letter being publicly read and the other things shown as relics of their horrid chivalry.

Should it be hereafter claimed by Farr that he was not one of this party of murdering, plundering, savage robbers, and should it turn out that he was not with them on that particular occasion, it would by no means relieve him from the well-sustained charge of most outrageous and active participation in systematic and long-continued persecution of men and their families, driving them from the soil which they owned in the State of Virginia and committing their hard-earned property to devouring flames or rebel confiscation. It does not and will not relieve the said Farr from his acts as a member of that self-constituted committee in whose secret conclaves were made edicts against such men in Fairfax County as were guilty only of the crime of being friendly to the American Union, destroying their property, breaking up their homes and families, driving them from the State, and finally culminating in August last in scenes of fiendish barbarity, no matter by whom executed, scarcely paralleled in the civilized world,—Union soldiers shot down by these men in ambush, their pockets rifled of precious mementoes, their bodies stripped to furnish clothing for their negro slaves, and left unburied to be eaten up by hogs, while the money taken from them was made to contribute intoxicated madness to their bitter hate of the Union, and thus fit and prepare them for that Dranesville carnival of bestial joy over their brutal accomplishment of savage barbarity.

What cares such a man for an oath of allegiance, even if proof were not furnished (as it is) by the testimony on file that several of these same men who were arrested with Farr had said at different times that no such oath possessed a shadow of sacredness in their estimation? I am unable, general, to find in the case of Farr any extenuating circumstances attending his course, not even the poor and unsatisfactory excuse of a rebel soldier volunteering in the service and then acting under orders. Farr was a citizen, not called to take up arms by civil or military authority, but was animated alone by his own brutal instincts, to gratify which he marked out voluntarily his own pathway of cruelty and crime, continuing to follow it until arrested by the strong arm of military power.

I therefore respectfully suggest that said John B. Farr be not released from custody, but that he be held until a military court can afford him trial for his manifold crimes.

All of which, general, is most respectfully submitted by

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, OFFICE OF THE PROVOST-MARSHAL,
Washington, January 17, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I had the honor to receive from you with your request indorsed upon each for examination and report upon the respective cases therein mentioned three several communications * signed respectively by the following persons named, to wit: Kate Farr on behalf of J. B. Farr, William B. Day on behalf of himself, Charles W. Coleman on behalf of himself.

I also had the honor on the 13th instant to make a report to you in the case of said John B. Farr, but while making up said report I had not in my mind the order made by Major-General McClellan November 27, 1861, commanding that all the prisoners in custody suspected of having participated in the murder in August last of two U. S. pickets near Dranesville, Va., be held until a trial could be had in their cases and that the evidence in each case found be reported to him.

I have the honor here to repeat what was stated in the report made to you in the case of J. B. Farr—that some time during the month of August last a midnight attack which had been previously planned by several of the citizens of the village of Dranesville and vicinity was by them made upon a squad of Union pickets who were on duty at Lowe's Flats, near Dranesville, killing two and wounding one, and afterward committing upon the dead bodies such acts of inhuman and sacrilegious nature that they will challenge the civilized world to furnish a parallel.

The following are the names of the persons now under arrest and confined at the Old Capitol Prison who are suspected with a large array of evidence against them of the murder and acts of barbarity aforesaid: John B. Farr, John T. Day, William B. Day, Charles W. Coleman, John T. De Bell, R. H. Gunnell, John Coleman, Philip Carper and James Farr. In view therefore of said order of the commanding general I beg most respectfully to return without further report the three communications aforesaid inclosed herewith.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. PORTER,

Brigadier-General and Provost-Marshal.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC,

COMMISSION RELATING TO POLITICAL PRISONERS,
Washington, March 25, 1862.

W. P. WOOD, Esq., Superintendent, &c.

SIR: You will please discharge R. H. Gunnell and John T. De Bell, prisoners confined in the Old Capitol Military Prison, on their taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

I, James W. Farr, of Dranesville, Va., do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Union and Constitution and the Government of the United States as established by that Constitution against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same any ordinance resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

JAMES W. FARR.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 25th day of March, 1862.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

[NOTE.—John B. Farr, R. H. Gunnell and John T. De Bell also subscribed to the same oath and were discharged.]

HEADQUARTERS PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1862.

Colonel TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General.

SIR: Dr. William B. Day, a civilian, is confined in the Old Capitol Prison and is held to answer very serious charges, and his release was refused by the commission (Judge Pierrepont and General Dix) on any terms.

I have the honor to be, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. E. DOSTER,
Major and Provost-Marshal.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 20, 1862.

PHILIP W. CARPER, Old Capitol Prison, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant,* and to inform you in reply that your case has not been considered either with reference to an exchange or to a discharge from the military custody of the United States for the reason that you are held in confinement on the charge of having engaged in an irregular or guerrilla mode of warfare. Under these circumstances your application to be released on parole to return to your home in Fairfax County, Va., or for any other purpose cannot be granted.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, June 4, 1862.

Hon. P. H. WATSON.

DEAR SIR: Dr. John [T.] Day, William [B.] Day† and Charles [W.] Coleman have at your suggestion and upon the advice of Mr. Mackall and myself consented to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. I respectfully ask that you order the release of John Day and Charles Coleman upon their taking the oath above stated. And so far as Dr. William Day is concerned he has left the matter entirely with Mr. Mackall and myself; he is willing to take the oath at our request, and we will give bond in the sum of $20,000 that the said Dr. Day will observe all his obligations.

I am, sir, yours, respectfully and truly,

JOHN S. HOLLINGSHEAD.

[Indorsement in pencil.]

Release of John [T.] Day and Charles Coleman ordered.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 4, 1862.

WILLIAM P. WOOD, Superintendent of the Old Capitol Prison.

SIR: You will release from custody Dr. John [T.] Day and Charles [W.] Coleman on their taking the oath of allegiance to the United States, Judge Pierrepont having recommended their release upon this condition. You will make return of your proceedings in these cases, indorsed hereon to the provost-marshal, that the proper entry may be made upon the records of his office.

By order of the Secretary of War:

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 12, 1862.

E. D. WEBSTER, State Department.

SIR: The Secretary of War desires to be informed of the grounds upon which Philip W. Carper* is held a prisoner of State. Also whether he is one of the number whom the commission recommended to be released on taking the oath of allegiance.

Yours, very respectfully,

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Case of George W. Jones.

George W. Jones, of Iowa, former Delegate in Congress from Michigan and Wisconsin, U. S. surveyor-general, U. S. Senator from Iowa, and late minister resident from the United States at Bogota, New Granada, was arrested in New York by an order of the Secretary of State on the 20th day of December, 1861. His arrest was a precautionary measure to prevent his carrying into effect a purpose he had repeatedly professed that he entertained—of going South to join his fortunes and his efforts with those of the rebels. In a letter dated Bogota, New Granada, May 17, 1861, addressed by Jones to Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, President, &c., as his “noble and very dear friend,” Jones dwells at length upon his sympathy with Davis and his cause; his admiration of the system of slavery; his hatred of all friends of freedom, and his own wrongs in being compelled by public opinion to emancipate nine slaves during his residence in the Territory of Iowa. He says:

You may well say as you do in your letter to me that you “know you (I) will sympathize with us (you).” How can I feel other, dear old friend, college mate and colleague, than sympathy for you and the people whom you represent on such an occasion? Born in what they tauntingly call a free State (Indiana), brought up in Missouri, and educated there and in Kentucky, and having resided for the last thirty-four years in Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, I cannot but be well acquainted with the principles, feelings and actions of the parties to the contest which is now going on in my beloved country.

When I went to Wisconsin, then Michigan, I took with me my servants whom at their request I purchased, they having been born in Illinois and made slaves under the ordinance of 1787. Abolitionists who like Doty, Bronson, Burnett, et al., came to my house to share my hospitality told my slaves that they were free, and actually made the ignorant but happy Paul to believe he was free and to bring suit for himself and his sister Charlotte, both of whom you may recollect as they waited on you when you visited us. I had a vexatious and long law suit with Paul but triumphed over him and his abolition advisers. I served in Congress as Delegate from Michigan and Wisconsin two years each, and was then beaten for the third term by Doty because I served as a second in the Cilley and Graves duel and was a slave-owner. In 1841 I was removed from the office of surveyor-general of Wisconsin and Iowa by General Harrison's administration through Doty's influence as the then Delegate simply because I was a Democrat and sympathized with the South; no single objection having been made against me of any other character. Mr. Polk, God bless him, restored me in 1845, and put out the long-legged black Republican Jim Wilson, of New Hampshire, who had superseded me. I was transferred from the surveyor-general's office in December, 1848, to the U. S. Senate, and driven therefrom by the Abolitionists in 1859, no other objection having been made to me save that I was a follower of the South and a "dough-face" for such men as yourself, Clay and other Southerners. If therefore I had no other reason for sympathizing with the South the bad treatment which I have received at the hands of Northern Abolitionists would have made me do so.

Further on in the same letter he says:

My prayers are all regularly offered up for the reunion of the States and for the peace, concord and happiness of my country. But let what may come to pass you may rely upon it as you say that neither I nor mine will be found in the ranks of our (your) enemies. May God Almighty avert civil war, but if unhappily it shall come you may—I think would without doubt—count upon me and mine and hosts of other friends standing shoulder to shoulder in the ranks with you and our other Southern friends and relatives whose rights like my own have been disregarded by the abolitionists. I love Wisconsin and Iowa for the honors conferred by them on me and because I served them always faithfully; but I will not make war with them against the South whose rights they shamefully neglected.

He concludes this long letter by saying: "The dissolution of the Union will probably be the cause of my own ruin as well as that of my country, and may cause me and mine to go South." Jones states in this letter that his latest advices from the United States were of the date of February 22, 1861, so that he had barely heard of the installation of his correspondent as President of the insurgent Confederacy. Fearing, however, that his letter might not reach its destination he sent a copy by a subsequent mail accompanied by a letter dated Bogota, May 23, 1861, in which he says:

It will not be many months, I guess, before my successor shall present himself here. I shall then return home immediately to try and so arrange my financial matters as to be enabled to save my delightful residence as a home for my noble and beloved wife and our children. Should I fail in that I know not what I shall do or whither to look for another, for I shall not be willing to continue at Dubuque or in Iowa or the North.

I wish I had taken John M. Bass' advice a few years ago and had sold off the most of my then valuable property and gone down to Louisiana, Mississippi or Texas and had purchased a cotton plantation as he did on credit, paying for it in a few years thereafter. Now my property is unsalable and I apprehend it will grow worse if the reunion of the States be not speedily effected. To cap the climax the dissolution of the Union will absolutely blast all my hopes. If Breckinridge or Lane had been elected business and prosperity would have soon revived, and besides I would doubtless have been retained here. * * * I want you to write me and to give at length your views and opinions of the present and prospective condition of the country and advise me what to do. Your letter shall be confidential entirely if you wish it. I have, dear Jeffie, as your wife calls you, more confidence in your opinion than in that of any living man. The secession of the States leaves us National Democrats of the North who stood by you in a deplorable condition, and but that I know you could not do otherwise I should feel hard toward you for leaving us to the mercy of abolitionism. Even Crittenden's amendments if all adopted would allay the storm but for a short time. The equilibrium should never have been broken up between the free and slave States, and I said and knew that twenty years ago.

As the mails were very irregular at that period in New Granada he had not sent off his letter before he concluded to send a further missive; and he therefore opened the envelope and inclosed a note dated Bogota, May 27, 1861, in which he comes to the point as follows:

MY DEAR FRIEND: As I have not been able to send off my letter to you I open it to write you a few lines and to make an earnest appeal to you as my old and valued friend and as the President of the Southern Confederacy in behalf of my only brother, General Augustus Jones, who resides at Columbus, Colorado County, Tex., and who I judge from the tenor of the inclosed letter from his charming young Virginia wife has become reduced in his pecuniary circumstances. I wish you, my dear friend, to provide some office for him, either in Texas, at the seat of Government of your new Confederacy, or anywhere else.

On the 1st day of August, 1861, Jones addressed a letter to Hon. I. E. Morse, New Orleans, in which he avows the same purpose of adhering to the cause of the insurgents, as follows:

I expect my successor, Allen A. Burton, of Kentucky, every day, and will leave on the next day after his arrival, being exceedingly anxious to return home to my family, my sons having left them to come down South to fight for the maintenance of the Constitution, the laws and the rights of the people of the South, as I intend to do if required to fight at all and it be possible for me to leave my family and my private affairs, now almost in a ruined state in consequence of the crisis.

In various letters from members of Jones' family to him they allude to his proclivities and his probable determination to identify himself with the cause of the rebels. April 9, 1861, C. S. D. Jones, son of George W., writes to his father from New York giving an account of a visit he had made to the State Department, and an interview he had with Mr. Sanford, then just appointed minister to Belgium. It seems that Jones had made application to Doctor Mackie and Mr. Sanford to retain his position at Bogota. Young Jones describes Doctor Mackie as cool, and is surprised at discovering Mr. Sanford, "instead of being muco fino to be nothing more than a well-educated Yankee." Mr. Sanford it seems had been at Bogota and young Jones had also been there afterward, and evidently had his envy excited by hearing the Bogotans speak of Mr. Sanford as a fine gentleman, while he emphatically avers that "he is nothing more than a pretty smart Yankee, no more to be compared with a Southern gentleman than Hyperion to a Satyr;" and again, "It strikes me that he had very little of the fine gentleman about him. He did not trouble himself about you, I feel pretty sure."

The young man then adds:

Oh how deeply I regret that your poverty ever made you intimate to Sanford or Mackie that you would like to be retained. You ought to resign and come home if they do not send your successor soon. You owe it to your principles and friends in the South. Of course you know it by this time that the cotton States have seceded and that your old friend Jeff. Davis is President of the Southern Confederacy. All hail to it I say,—although I loved the Union dearly,—but I hate abolitionism and love the Southern people. Come home, and let's move South and help them fight for their independence. The last news is that Old Abe will commence a war on the South. God protect us if he does. I feel a conviction that I shall fight for the South. Come home soon. * * * I had not time to get you a pair of holsters made so I send you a pair of the common kind for those French pistols Mr. Matthew is to send. They are the best extant. You must keep them for our revolution, if we are to have one precipitated by those damnable abolitionists.

On the 16th of June, 1861, the same C. S. D. Jones wrote to his father from Dubuque setting forth his views of persons and public sentiment there, and saying:

As long as you were in the Senate or in a good office these fellows and those like them were very great friends of yours. But now things are changed. When you come home you will know these things more fully. What I wish to impress upon you now is that you must leave Dubuque or sink down and sacrifice your principles as no man of honor could ever think of doing. This is to express the hope that you will not allow first impressions or promises or inducements offered to you when you get to New York or Washington to compel you to make a avowal of sympathy (if you have any) for Abe Lincoln and his war upon the South—that you will not do as Douglas and the rest of the semi-abolitionists at the North have done. I wish to advise you to keep all the money you have till you get home. Don't pay Corcoran or any one else a cent till you have come home and seen for yourself. You will need more money here than you imagine. If you are opposed to the war and in favor of Southern independence you must be circumspect and extremely careful till you arrive at home and get your accounts settled. Doctor Mackie is a very miserable Black Republican I assure you.

On the 31st of July, 1861, the same son writes to his father from Dubuque, giving an account of the battle of Bull Run, and says:

I expect a very speedy recognition of Southern independence by all the great powers at an early day. Viva la Confederacion! Jeff. Davis was very conspicuous during the battle, riding on a white horse. He commanded the center, Beauregard the right, and General Johnston the left. God bless them all and their people is my heartfelt prayer. How much I wish that we could have been there to share in the glory of that day. George went to Nashville about the 26th of May last with my approbation. He was engaged for a little time in drilling recruits but is now staying with Col. B. R. Johnson.

On the 6th of August, 1861, he again writes to his father from Dubuque, saying:

This will be most probably my last letter to you before our next separation, which I trust an identity of principle and interest will render unnecessary. * * * With reverence I say it, I think I see the finger of the Almighty in the battle of Manassas, in your going to Bogota and in Mr. Seward's doing you the eminent favor to recall you. I regard this act as the greatest favor to you that he could have done possibly—not the transfer to a mission worth $50,000 a year could have been half so desirable and honorable in my mind. Thus you will not suffer the disgrace of having served Lincoln's abolition Government for pay when your sense of honor and lifelong principles condemned it as disgraceful. * * * I'd rather this minute accept with joy the most abject misery and poverty than be the favorite Pennsylvania contractor under Cameron and support the war or go to this war with the brightest epaulettes that ever were worn, or support it (the war) in any way. * * * I hope you will not pay Corcoran any money; at least not until you come home and pay your taxes.

On the 14th of August, 1861, he wrote to his father from Dubuque, saying:

The Chicago Tribune that came last night contained the inclosed slip which I send that you may take a salutary hint from Mr. Faulkner's case.* You cannot be too cautious, even hypocritical, if you are anti-Lincoln or anti-abolitionist in order to get your accounts settled and come safely home with your dues.

On the 8th of September he writes these words:

You cannot be too cautious and discreet about your political expressions, at least till after you leave Washington—that is if you are opposed to Lincoln's truculent policy against the South.

On the 25th of September he writes from Cincinnati these words:

You ought to keep whatever money is due you in drafts on New York till you get home and see the condition of affairs there. * * * I understood before I left home that orders had been received to fill up Vandever's regiment immediately, and I suppose that this meant impressment. However, I did not wish to aid in this war even by getting a substitute if I were drafted, so I am here.

On the 10th day of July, 1861, Jones' wife wrote him a letter from Dubuque in which occurs the following passage:

Our beloved country is in a terrible condition and we know not what to say or do. I am sick of this war. It is fairly grinding to me and I wish an end was put to it in some way; anything better than bloodshed; but it seems that such leaders of the Administration as the Blairs are for the war and nothing else. I hope the South will make a desperate effort upon them ere long, and succeed, if they continue the cry of war as they do now.

On the 25th of August she wrote him again from the same place saying:

The Government have given orders to suppress the papers that are against Lincoln's cause and I reckon the Herald will be stopped here. You cannot form an idea of the state of affairs. Men that were thought decided in their opinions have changed and there is no confidence placed in any one. * * * He (Colonel Heath) is in debt, and if he was not so busily engaged in going to fight for abolitionists (though he says for the Union; that is gone forever) he would be put in jail, so little do they care for him. * * *

The First Company of Iowa Volunteers returned here on Friday morning and had a grand reception, a breakfast prepared for them at the Washington Square. The streets and almost every business place were decorated with evergreens, flowers, banners, &c. I did not go down town for I do not countenance anything for this war. I beg of you, my beloved husband, to be careful of what you say. We have cautioned you enough in our letters, written some time ago, but you cannot be too careful. It will be time enough to make your sentiments known after you settle with the Government, get your money and come home. * * * If you get what is due to you when you get to Washington I shall be content. Do not pay it out to Corcoran or any one until you reach home. You can send them what you can spare. * * * We hear occasionally from George, who is in Nashville and thereabouts; he says that he is perfectly happy and will not move from there until the war is over and then only to visit, for that is his adopted country. * * * Be careful what you say or do and get home to me as soon as you possibly can. * * * When you get here he (Charles) will leave here, I reckon, for he hates most of the people, and it will be much better for him to do so. * * * Judge Pollock told Colonel Heath the other day that he heard you had left Bogota several months ago and had joined the Confederate Army. He said if we knew General Jones to be a Union man (that is against the South) we would elect him Governor. We do not say what we think of your politics, and be careful what you say until you get home.

These extracts from the letters of his wife and son, showing that they were fully prepared to assume with confidence that he would unhesitatingly join his fortunes with the rebel cause and would heartily approve the course of his sons in doing the same, served to give confirmation and emphasis to his own treasonable declarations. Jones in his correspondence generally adds further weight to the evidence furnished by his wife and son of his long-cherished and habitual sympathy with the feelings and purposes of the conspirators who originated the rebellion. His letters to Jefferson Davis disclose the treason he was then contemplating. He had just learned the first movements of the rebellion, the secession of five or six States, the formation of a pretended Confederacy and the inauguration of his correspondent as President thereof at Montgomery. He, a minister of the United States, hastened to give the rebel chief not only assurances of his sympathy, which had been anticipated, but also of his approbation, adherence and aid. His recognition of the rebel Government was immediate and his call for political reward from it for his family equally prompt. To give Davis assurance of his sincerity he wrote him a history of his life to show that his views and feelings had always harmonized with the interests on which the rebellion was founded. There is not in either of his letters to Davis a single word of dissent, disapprobation, remonstrance, reproach, admonition or caution in regard to his treasonable course; but unqualified sympathy, approbation and adhesion. The same is true of his letter to Morse.

The said Jones remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

E. R. MEADE, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I received the note which you addressed to me on the 14th instant informing me that you have been retained by George W. Jones, of Iowa, to institute proceedings against me for damages growing out of his recent arrest and imprisonment, and in consideration of courtesy and mutual convenience suggest that if it should be agreeable to me I might refer you to attorneys in New York who could enter an appearance for me and thereby dispense with personal service of process. I thank you very sincerely for the consideration which you have manifested in this respect, and pray you to be assured that it is duly appreciated.

I have to state in reply to your suggestion that the matter involved is an official one, and I am not at liberty to unite or favor the proceedings which you regard it as your duty to institute. For this reason I must leave you to conduct the affair in your own way. Your letter is marked personal, which is very proper so far as you are concerned, but the same consideration which I have before mentioned has obliged me to regard it as a public one, and that communication together with this answer has thereupon been submitted to the President of the United States.

I am, dear sir, your very obedient servant,

W. H. SEWARD.

Case of F. M. Ellis.

Ellis was arrested by order of Major-General McClellan December 20, 1861, and committed to the Old Capitol Prison on the charge of being a spy. The only information on file in the Department of State relative to Ellis appears as an indorsement upon a returned order granting permission for one H. D. Turner to visit the prisoner, which reads as follows, viz:

HEADQUARTERS CITY GUARD,
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST-MARSHAL, Washington, January 16, 1862.

Respectfully referred to Hon. F. W. Seward, Assistant Secretary of State.

The prisoner, F. M. Ellis, by order of Major-General McClellan, is being held in close confinement on the charge of being a spy for the rebel Government.

A. PORTER,
Brigadier-General and Provost-Marshal.

The said F. M. Ellis remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

HEADQUARTERS PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL,
ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, March 18, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I received on yesterday from the War Department—it being referred to me for report—a communication signed F. M. Ellis, and by Ellis addressed to yourself, which communication I return herewith appended; that in the case of F. M. Ellis I have to report that in September last Ellis was introduced to me by General R. B. Marcy, chief of the staff of Major-General McClellan; that he represented himself as having been in the employment of General Mansfield in the secret service of the Government, and was by me employed to operate in Virginia in the secret service of General McClellan; that at the time I employed Ellis in the early part of September he was not possessed, as I believe, of any pecuniary wealth, but on the contrary was pressed for small sums for everyday purposes; that within the short space of about three months, and mostly within the time of his last trip to Virginia, made in November, he became suddenly possessed of nearly $4,000, which I found upon his person in the shape of Treasury notes made payable to his own order, and money; that he made three trips to Richmond while in my employ, declining to make another after he had returned from the last and had been North to New York City and State, perfecting as he represented arrangements to go again to Richmond; that he declined going after his return from New York in November because he considered it would be dangerous for him to do so, about which he said nothing on his return from Richmond from his last trip but the contrary.

That on the first trip made by Ellis to Richmond he became acquainted with, and, if his own report can be credited, was taken into the bosom of confidence by the leading officers at Richmond of the rebel Government, this trip being made in the month of September; that in October last he made a second trip to Richmond, taking with him by my consent and with the approbation of Secretaries Seward and Chase and Major-General McClellan a quantity of bank-note paper for the rebel Government, as by supply of that to the Secretary of the Treasury of the rebel Government Ellis could better deceive them as to his real character, and thus obtain what he was sent for—the most interior of their designs; that on the starting upon his third trip he was allowed the privilege of taking more bank-note paper but he declined, representing that he had now (then) become so well known to the rebel Government, and the privilege of carrying letters to and fro having been allowed to Ellis (all such letters passing through and being examined at this office) that he did not care about taking bank-note paper, although it was well known that he could sell it to the rebels for 100 per cent. more than New York value, and he was allowed to have what he could thus make besides his salary; that it afterward turned out that his object for so declining to carry anything which had my approval was that he had engaged to the rebels to carry for them cases of surgical instruments and other articles which he did carry and without my knowledge and which he could not have obtained permission to carry if it had been known to me.

That on his return trip from Richmond in November he received various sums of money from different persons to bring North to their friends and bankers; that among other sums received he was intrusted by Mr. A. H. Herr, of Harper's Ferry, to bring to Baltimore, and for bringing which he received of Mr. Herr $10, a package containing the very large sum of $19,971; that instead of delivering this large sum as agreed to the bankers of Mr. Herr, Baltimore, Ellis opened the package and took therefrom all which was in a convertible shape, such as coupons, &c., and money, appropriating the same to his private use, retaining the drafts and bills of exchange which were payable to order until he was arrested some twenty days after his declining to go South on the fourth trip; that said Mr. A. H. Herr became alarmed about his money, it being nearly all he was worth, and went from Harper's Ferry to Baltimore to see about it; that being a Union man he received aid from Major Tyndale, at Sandy Hook, and traced Ellis to this office, where he developed to me the fraud of Ellis; that upon consultation with General McClellan his arrest was ordered and Ellis taken into custody, when upon his person were found the notes, drafts, bills of exchange and money equal to the amount given in his charge by Mr. Herr, and in addition about $4,000 as of kinds before stated; that Ellis was placed in custody at the Old Capitol Prison, where he afterward signed an order to deliver to Mr. Herr the drafts, bills of exchange and money realized from the sale of coupons, &c., equal in amount to the package given by Herr to Ellis at Harper's Ferry—$19,971; that afterward Ellis provided for the payment of several smaller sums which he had retained from other persons whose friends had intrusted Ellis by allowing me to sell for him part of the Treasury notes (which he claims in the communication hereto attached was invested in from motives of patriotism) for the purpose of paying over the money in the several sums thus so long fraudulently withheld; that Mr. Herr stated—which statement was made in writing, and is now on file in this office—that on the occasion of his intrusting Ellis with the package of money at Harper's Ferry Ellis told him that he was going to return back to Richmond where he had been offered and had accepted an office or situation of valuable character under the rebel Government; that Herr further stated that Ellis said to him on the same occasion that his friends little knew the part he was playing in this "grand drama;" that Ellis told him that that was his fourteenth trip from Washington to Richmond and back; that he (Ellis) had heard of Herr as being a Union man; that he (Ellis) had no doubt of the final success of the South, but after and not without a desperate struggle.

That Ellis was until lately and for some time a resident of New Hartford, N. Y., near Utica, where his mother and sisters reside; that the Rev. H. W. Read, of the Treasury Department, was from New Hartford and has relatives there, among others a brother, James Read, who writes to his brother here under date of January 7 and later dates saying that when Ellis was there (New Hartford) last, after his last return from Richmond, he was boasting how much more he had made out of the rebels than he did out of our Government; that he (Read) thought Ellis was a traitor and spy, and requesting his brother in the Treasury Department to caution the President as Ellis would do anything for money.

That Ellis as I have since learned went to visit our camps on the Virginia side of the Potomac at two different times just before starting to Virginia each time, which act of his was strictly and constantly forbidden to any and all of my operatives whose field of action was within the enemy's lines, leaving no doubt upon my mind that Ellis was what he has acknowledged himself to be—a traitor and a spy; that when to his own admission is added the other corroborating testimony there is every reason to believe that Ellis was not only a most barefaced swindler and cheat but that he was really in the employ of the rebel Government, from whom he must by his own showing have received large sums of money; that during his term of employment by me had he been ever so prudent, which he was not but very extravagant, he could not have legitimately and honestly saved over $500; that as already recited he entered my service for the Government in September in debt and without any money, and left it in November or early December—having made large expenditures about his person and something for his friends—with nearly $4,000 in his pocket besides the fraudulently-kept money, &c., of Mr. Herr, $19,971.

I respectfully submit that Ellis is one of the most dangerous men who could be found, and the interests of the Government sternly demand that he should be held while the rebellion lasts, and that he should be tried for the gross and glaring wrongs and traitorous acts which he has committed, and which might have turned the destinies of a mighty nation. That the money except what has been paid out for account of Mr. Ellis by his own orders and the amounts paid to himself, together with the Treasury notes, have been handed over to the superintendent of the Old Capitol Prison, William P. Wood, esq.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,
E. J. ALLEN.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 27, 1862.

E. D. WEBSTER, Secretary of Commission.

SIR: Among the persons confined in the Old Capitol Prison on suspicion of infidelity to the Government is Mr. F. M. Ellis. He is a townsman of mine, and came here last summer partly on my recommendation to engage in the spy service, for which his friends deemed he had a peculiar fitness. I had known him for two or three years previous. His character for loyalty, integrity and morality I had never heard questioned up to the time of his arrest. He served some time under the direct orders of General Mansfield with great acceptability and usefulness. He was subsequently under the orders of Major Allen, and made three trips to Richmond with great success. He was desired to go the fourth time, but declined for the reason that he did not deem it safe to do so. He was soon after arrested on the order of the provost-marshal, on what charge neither he nor I ever knew.

I saw Mr. Ellis frequently while he was in the spy service, and I never observed anything in his conduct which could justify a suspicion of unfaithfulness to the Government. He showed me his private papers after his last return from Richmond which he had collected together in a scrap-book to preserve as a relic or trophy of his success. This he exhibited freely to his friends. He would hardly have done this if he thought the papers it contained would furnish any evidence of treasonable conduct. That book taken in connection with the reports he made from time to time to the secret-service department will I think furnish conclusive evidence of his innocence. In his behalf I ask that he may have a speedy examination. He has relatives in New Hartford, N. Y., among others a mother-in-law of infirm age, who are dependent on him in a measure for support. If he is innocent, as I believe he is, he should have the earliest opportunity to vindicate himself. As you have known me well for many years I need not furnish any references as to my character.

Yours, truly,

R. A. SHERMAN.

[Indorsement.]

I need hardly say that I have the utmost confidence in the judgment of General Sherman. He knows thoroughly the facts which he states.

R. CONKLING.

COMMISSION RELATING TO POLITICAL PRISONERS,
Washington, March 28, 1862.

W. P. WOOD, Esq., Superintendent, &c., Washington.

SIR: You may discharge Frank M. Ellis, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Military Prison, on his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States and engaging that he will return to the State of New York and will remain in said State or the New England States and will not leave the same without permission from the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

I, Frank M. Ellis, of New Hartford, N. Y., do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Union and Constitution and the Government of the United States as established by that Constitution against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose without any mental reservation or evasion whatever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God. And that I will return to the State of New York, and will remain in said State or the New England States and will not leave the same without permission from the Secretary of War.

FRANK M. ELLIS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of March, 1862.
EDWARDS PIERREPONT.

Case of Michael Thompson and Lewis L. McArthur.

Michael Thompson* was arrested in Washington December 21, 1861, by order of Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal, and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. The charges against Thompson were that he was a spy; that he was closely connected with the principal rebel sympathizers and spies in Washington; that he has been engaged in sending important information of a military and naval character to the rebels, and that plans for ciphers evidently concocted by him with reference to a continuance of such treasonable practices were found in his possession. The said Michael Thompson remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with an order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

This person [Lewis L. McArthur] was arrested in Washington, D. C., December 21, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with being implicated with one Michael Thompson of Washington in collecting and forwarding information for the benefit of the insurgents. Fourteen letters found on board of the captured schooner Lucretia addressed to persons in the insurrectionary States were proven to be in the handwriting of McArthur, and a rebel flag was found concealed in his trunk. The said Lewis Linn McArthur remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., December 21, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: To-day I was arrested and am now confined in the Old Capitol as a prisoner of state. Since coming here I have received intelligence that a secession flag was found in my trunk. I deem it prudent to make the following statement in order that the matter may be made clear: When the seceded States first—or about that period—attempted to establish their own government I was at Irving College, Manchester, Md. A number of the students requested me to make a flag in order that it might be displayed to the public. I complied with their request, made the flag and hoisted the flag in the campus. The president of the college ordered me to take it down. I obeyed and since that time the flag has been lying in my trunk, only two persons having seen it since. M. Thompson saw it but once and then he ordered me to destroy it. It was a relic to me and I refused to obey. He doubtless supposed I had destroyed it. I never intended to use the flag for any rebellious purposes. I am, sir, perfectly willing to make oath to the above statement if need be.

Trusting that your honor may promptly receive and duly weigh this statement, I remain your very humble servant,

LEWIS LINN McARTHUR.

* In connection with these cases see case of Mrs. Greenhow, p. 561, et seq.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that on December 21, 1861, Michael Thompson, attorney at law of this city, was arrested and confined in the Old Capitol under the following circumstances: On the arrest of Mrs. R. Greenhow August 23, 1861, the fragments of a note to her from one G. Donellan were found in her stove, which showed that it had but recently been destroyed. This Donellan had formerly been employed as a clerk in the Department of the Interior. He was then engaged with her in forwarding treasonable communications to the rebels and is now in one of the departments of the rebel Government at Richmond. A copy of the above note is subjoined:

PRIVATE.]

SATURDAY MORNING, July 20, 1861.

Mrs. R. GREENHOW, Present.

MADAM: I depart this morning regretting my inopportune absence; however, there is something to convey which I trust may prove valuable at least. Colonel Thompson, the bearer, a true South Carolina gentleman, will be happy to take from your hand any communication and obey your injunction as to disposition of same with dispatch. It may not be too late immediately you return to ascertain something important regarding the movements of the two or three next succeeding days, and I apprehend there will be something worth dispatching. Colonel T[hompson] will verbally inform you of the extent of my information now and what I conjecture will be done in order to acquaint you of what will be communicated.

Very respectfully,

G. DONELLAN.

On finding the above letter I perceived the necessity of ascertaining who Colonel Thompson was, and consequently directed operations to this end, detailing one of my operatives to attend to this. In the investigations thus rendered necessary my operative became acquainted with a Mrs. Phelps, from whose own avowals to him proof was obtained of her treasonable sentiments and intentions. She also expressed herself particularly anxious to apprise the Charleston people of the supposed destination of Du Pont's fleet. Our operative, passing himself as a Georgia secessionist, said he would make a determined effort to convey said information, and that he should succeed if she would introduce him to some of our friends here who were right on Dixie. She replied that Col. Michael Thompson, a South Carolina lawyer in her confidence, was all right. She offered personally to introduce our operative to him, which the latter declining she gave him a letter of introduction, telling him to speak plain to Thompson as he (Thompson) could be trusted.

Shortly afterward our operative was informed by Mrs. Phelps that Mr. Thompson was very anxious to see him and had asked her if she was sure her Georgia friend (my operative) was not a spy on them, "as," said Mr. Thompson, "the Government detectives are trying all those games." He also remarked that she ought to be very careful whom she trusted, &c. Not deeming it policy at that time that my operative should thus become personally acquainted with Thompson an excuse was at that time made to Mrs. Phelps setting forth the urgent necessity of my operative to return South, and with expressions of deep regret on his part that he could not at that time become acquainted with Col. Michael Thompson he left Mrs. Phelps on his supposed return to the rebel States.

Having thus found that Michael Thompson, attorney at law, 432 G street, was to be relied on as safe to talk with on treasonable subjects and also for forwarding correspondence with the rebels the conclusion was easily arrived at that he was identical with Colonel Thompson, the South Carolina gentleman spoken of in the letter previously inserted in this report from G. Donellan to Mrs. R. Greenhow. "Shadows" were consequently placed upon his person, and this process soon developed his close and intimate connection with all the active and leading rebel sympathizers in this city, among whom were W. T. Smithson (alias Charles R. Cables), Doctor Van Camp,* Lewis L. McArthur, &c.

On the 19th of December last the Navy Department sent to this office a package of letters taken from the schooner Lucretia. Evidence has been adduced proving that said package was to be sent within the enemy's lines at the first opportunity. In this package were found letters from the said Michael Thompson to parties in the rebel States to wit: Martin Wallace, Young's Store, Laurens District, S. C.; Jesse Thompson, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dr. C. P. Woodruff, Woodruff's Post-Office, Spartanburg District, S. C.; Franklin Thompson, esq., Lamar, Marshall County, Miss.; Ellis Thompson, esq., Young's Store, Laurens District, S. C.; Messrs. Young & Simpson, Laurens Court-House, S. C., signed with his initials in cipher; William A. Maury, esq., attorney at law, Richmond, Va.; two letters, one signed in cipher (M. Thompson); General Jacob P. Chase, Warrenton, Fauquier County, Va.; Messrs. Newton & Hall, attorneys at law, Bastrop, La.; Messrs. Matthews & McFee, Bastrop, La.; Messrs. Barrow & Pope, Baton Rouge, La.; F. B. Stubbs, esq., Monroe, La.; W. A. Compton, esq., attorney at law, Bastrop, La.; agreement to procure land patent for Margaret O. Kilkreuse, Carroll Parish, La.; four certificates for land patents addressed to different persons South.

Eight of the preceding letters, the agreement and certificates, were inclosed in a cloth envelope directed to William A. Maury, attorney at law, Richmond, Va. Five letters inclosed checks payable to William A. Maury. William A. Maury is a cousin and son-in-law of Lieutenant Maury, late of the U. S. Navy, and a brother of Rutson Maury,† arrested in Cleveland, Ohio, in the act of taking a mail to the rebel States, now confined in Fort Lafayette. In the letter in the above list addressed to his brother, Jesse Thompson, Chattanooga, Tenn., Michael Thompson narrates the circumstances of his nephew's leaving his law office to enter the rebel army in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to his secession proclivities. Though cautiously worded the undercurrent is obvious throughout. Occasionally it rises to the surface, as when he writes of the "outrages perpetrated upon the Confederate prisoners in this city," and of his nephew leaving for Virginia "one fine Sunday morning, remarking that he would return in company with Beauregard and Davis if he did not get killed." Though knowing his nephew's intention to leave he took no efficient measures to prevent their being carried out. In the letter addressed Franklin Thompson, esq., Lamar, Miss., he asks, "Where is your son who so nobly distinguished himself in the battle of Fort Sumter?" In the package of letters thus seized were several addressed to persons in the rebel States in which treasonable sentiments were avowed and important military information contained.

Subsequently to his arrest on being examined at this office he absolutely refused to state who were the parties engaged in carrying these mails to the rebel States, or to whom he delivered these letters to be conveyed South. On his examination at this office he refused to take the oath of allegiance to this Government. After his arrest his person, house and office were searched and the following treasonable documents obtained, to wit: A letter from G. Donellan (mentioned at the commencement of this paper) addressed to said Thompson, proving the writer and recipient to be on intimate terms. When examined at this office Mr. Thompson admitted that he was an acquaintance of Donellan. In the desk of Lewis L. McArthur, a law student and confidential clerk of Thompson's, was found secreted a plan for a new cipher, in the handwriting of Mr. McArthur, signed by Thompson in cipher (Ξ. 4). The object of certain signs used in this cipher is stated to be—

* See case of Van Camp, p. 561.

† See case of Maury, p. 1041.

To mislead and confound the impertinent scoundrel into whose hands it might improperly fall, and who might desire to read, decipher, understand and pry into State and individual secrets. I think this the easiest alphabet for us, and at the same time the most difficult for the enemy to decipher.

Many of the characters contained in the ciphers found in Thompson's house are similar to the characters in the cipher used by Mrs. Greenhow in her correspondence with the rebels. There was also found in the possession of Thompson other letters of which the following are extracts:

WASHINGTON, July 18, 1861.

MY DEAR MRS. THOMPSON:

Please say to your husband that from the morning papers and the extra Star just being circulated the Southern Army were not apprised of the marching orders of General Scott, who by the by forwards 7,000 axes to clear a road in the rear of Beauregard. I send you the extra Star, as you may not have yet obtained it. General Lee taught General Scott to survey roads in the rear of the enemy's forts in Mexico. This strategy may be resorted to by Scott now if Beauregard is unaware that 15,000 men have already advanced in his rear. A good sober-minded Philadelphian was raving at our house this morning about the Stars and Stripes. I soon jerked off the mask that conceals naked covetousness, and he assured me that the North had no institution to bind them together while the South had the threefold cord of slavery; therefore the North would be utterly disintegrated if secession was tolerated at all.

Affectionately,

M. H. S.

From the handwriting of this letter I have no doubt but that the writer is Mrs. Henry S. Schoolcraft.

DECEMBER 12, 1861.

Colonel EMPTY:

Barely time to write a word or two; to delay were to run hazard of delay of a week. I shall only say what I have said before; all that you do and that our good friend has done are understood in the right quarter and appreciated. I had hoped to be able to write him a full business letter, but the messenger has come for my letters before I am ready. I inclose a cipher; as you will perceive it is different from yours. Yours even can be used on same principle. The trouble and risk of yours was the repetition of the same character in the same word, by means of which any character cipher can always be worked out. This risk I obviate. I hope it will reach you all safely.

Yours, sincerely,

THOMAS JOHN RAYFORD.*

In short the evidence in this case substantiates the following facts: That he has endeavored to create among rebels false impressions concerning our treatment of rebel prisoners, thereby increasing the animosity felt toward this Government by its deluded citizens and stimulating their resistance to legitimate authority; that he was privy to his nephew leaving this city for the purpose of joining the rebel army, but though perfectly able to do so took no means to prevent his intentions being carried out; that he refused to take the oath of allegiance; that he is closely connected with the principal rebel sympathizers and spies in this city, such as William Smithson, Doctor Van Camp, Mrs.

* Thomas John Rayford was in fact Col. Thomas Jordan, of the Confederate Army. See p. 564, case of Mrs. Greenhow.

Phelps and Mrs. Greenhow, and also with other rebel emissaries who were in this city but are now within the lines of the enemy, such as G. Donellan; that he is strongly recommended by them as a safe, confidential and reliable agent for carrying out their treasonable designs, especially for sending important military and naval information to rebels; that accordingly he has been engaged in sending such information, and that plans for ciphers evidently concocted by him with reference to continuing such treasonable practices were found in his possession; that, bound as he is to the insurgent States by every tie of blood, of honor, of sentiment, of society and of interest both personal and political,—a man of subtle intellect, finished education, practical energy, polished manners and attractive address,—he is too dangerous to be permitted to go at large conveying important information to that enemy which we keep an army in the field to subdue. I therefore respectfully recommend as a military necessity that Michael Thompson be kept in close confinement until the conclusion of the war.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant.

E. J. ALLEN.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1862. (Received 11th.)

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: In accordance with the request of the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, directed to you and requesting you to report on the case of Lewis Linn McArthur, law student and confidential clerk of Michael Thompson, I have the honor to report that the said McArthur was arrested and confined in the Old Capitol under the following circumstances, to wit:

When engaged in the arrest of Michael Thompson on December 21, 1861, my operative noticed the similarity of some writing on the desk of his law student (McArthur) to certain treasonable correspondence signed by Michael Thompson found on the steamer Lucretia in course of transmission to the rebel States. McArthur on being asked if the said writing was his replied in the affirmative, on which his arrest was immediately effected. An examination of the correspondence above mentioned demonstrated that fourteen of the letters found on board the Lucretia and directed to parties in the rebel States were in the handwriting of McArthur, signed by Michael Thompson, their contents being unquestionably treasonable. On searching McArthur's desk a paper was found in his handwriting signed by Thompson in cipher (Σ 4)—a plan for a new cipher. The object of certain signs used in it is stated to be—

To mislead and confound the impertinent scoundrel into whose hands it might improperly fall and who might desire to read, decipher, understand and pry into State and individual secrets. I think this the easiest alphabet for us, and at the same time the most difficult for the enemy to decipher.

On a search of McArthur's trunk a rebel flag was found therein. The following extracts are from two unfinished drafts found in his desk in his handwriting addressed to his grandfather:

I hope, however, that this state of things will soon change. Indeed I am perfectly satisfied that we are on the eve of great political developments which will put a veto on this war and hurl the abolition fanatics from their thrones. The ultras will carry the day in Congress and the issue of this war will be slavery or no slavery. The masses of the people will never acquiesce in that.

This draft goes no further. In the other draft we are informed that the country is—

“Rent with civil feuds and drenched with fraternal blood,” all through the fanaticism of the highest officers of the civil Government. Pride, reverence, patriotism and even policy are all set aside in order that the “liberty of the white man may be swallowed up in that of the negro.”

All of which in plain language means this, that the highest officers of the Government are abolition fanatics; that they will be hurled from their thrones or expelled from office; that the people will not support the war, which will necessitate the demands of the rebels to be complied with. This is the change for which he hopes.

From the preceding facts I infer that McArthur's sympathies and sentiments are without a doubt treasonable, and that from the fact that his employer and friend Thompson, who was actively engaged in collecting and forwarding information of the movements of our armies to the rebels, had confidence sufficient in McArthur's devotion to the rebel interests to intrust him with the responsible position of amanuensis or confidential clerk, it may be safely affirmed that McArthur had full knowledge of the criminal correspondence and proceedings of M. Thompson, A. Van Camp, G. Donellan, Mrs. R. O'N. Greenhow, Mrs. Phelps, W. T. Smithson (alias Charles R. Cables) and other rebel spies and emissaries, and was privy to and cognizant of their designs, and that to the full extent of his ability and opportunities he has aided and assisted in their treasonable operations. That his opinions and personal relations are such that he would if permitted undoubtedly continue this treasonable course. I would therefore respectfully recommend that Lewis L. McArthur be kept in close confinement until the termination of the war, or until our armies are so far advanced that he can do no injury to this Government.

I herewith inclose his application to the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, which the latter requests to be returned to that Department accompanied by your report on the same.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

[Memorandum.]

General Porter, provost-marshal, advises McArthur be kept in confinement until the close of the war to suppress the rebellion.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: On January 9, 1862, I had the honor to report to you on the case of Michael Thompson, in which I recommended that “as a military necessity Michael Thompson should be kept in close confinement until the conclusion of the war.” Under the date of January 22 the Secretary of State makes the inquiry of you whether since the above report was made any reason had been discovered for modifying the recommendation therein made. So far from any such reason having been discovered additional evidence has been received at this office since the above report was made proving beyond a reasonable doubt that Michael Thompson has been in direct co-operation and complicity with the most notorious and influential traitors and spies. In justice therefore to this Government, whose whole energies and resources are taxed to put down this rebellion; in justice to the men composing our Army who have sacrificed all the amenities and comforts of life and at great pecuniary and personal sacrifice have come forward to offer all they have, even life itself, for that which to them is dearer than life; in justice to the people at large who have shrunk from no sacrifice required of them in the faith that means thus furnished would be unsparingly used for the punishment of traitors and consequent suppression of treason, I cannot recommend that such efforts should be neutralized and such sacrifices of millions made useless by a mistaken clemency to a few proved traitors and spies. I can therefore only reiterate more strongly my previous recommendation that as a military necessity Michael Thompson be kept in close confinement until the conclusion of the war.

I herewith inclose the application of J. V. Douglass to the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, which the latter requests to be returned to that Department accompanied by your report on the same.

All of which is duly submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

Case of the Crew of the Royal Yacht.

Thomas Chubb was arrested on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured by the U. S. frigate Santee in Galveston Bay, he being one of the crew of that schooner. Having been sent to New York Chubb with his companions who were captured at the same time was by order of the Secretary of State dated December 23, 1861, committed to Fort Lafayette. Lieut. Col. Martin Burke reported by letter February 4, 1862, to the Secretary of State that "Chubb of the Royal Yacht has been released on his parole of honor by order of the honorable Secretary of the Navy."

H. N. Duble was arrested on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured by the U. S. frigate Santee in Galveston Bay November 8, 1861. Having been sent to New York Duble with the crew of the Royal Yacht was committed by order of the Secretary of State dated December 23, 1861, to Fort Lafayette. Duble was charged with disloyalty to the United States Government and with being in active sympathy with the rebels. The said H. N. Duble remained in Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Ira G. Rogers was arrested on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured by the U. S. frigate Santee, he being one of the crew of that schooner. Having been sent to New York Rogers with the balance of the crew captured at the same time was by order of the Secretary of State dated December 23, 1861, committed to Fort Lafayette. An order was issued from the Department of State dated February 1, 1862, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Rogers on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released February 6, 1862.

Ambrose Snow was arrested on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured by the U. S. frigate Santee in Galveston Bay, he being one of the crew of that schooner. Having been sent to New York Snow with his companions who were captured at the same time was by order of the Secretary of State dated December 23, 1861, committed to Fort Lafayette. The said Ambrose Snow remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Joseph F. Frisbee was arrested on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured in Galveston Bay by the U. S. frigate Santee, he being one of the crew of that schooner. Having been sent to New York Frisbee was by order of the Secretary of State dated December 23, 1861, committed to Fort Lafayette. He remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.

John E. Davidson was captured on board the rebel armed schooner Royal Yacht, which was captured by the U. S. frigate Santee in Galveston Bay November 8, 1861. Having been sent to New York Davidson together with the balance of the crew was committed to Fort Lafayette December 23, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

COMMISSION RELATING TO STATE PRISONERS,
New York, April 10, 1862.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army,
Commanding Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor.

COLONEL: You will please transfer the following prisoners, viz: Thomas C. Saunders, James S. Hughes, George Baker, George Hale, John Greenough, J. Kelly, Joseph D. Smith, Robert Redman, from the list of state prisoners to that of prisoners of war.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

COMMISSION RELATING TO STATE PRISONERS,
New York, April 10, 1862.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army,
Commanding Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor.

COLONEL: You will please transfer the name of Henry N. Duple from the list of state prisoners to that of prisoners of war.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 31, 1862.
H. N. DUBLE, Prisoner of War, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: The Secretary of War directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant asking to be paroled in order that you may effect your exchange, and to inform you that arrangements have been made for a general exchange of prisoners which precludes the necessity of special action in your case.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Cases of Mrs. C. V. Baxley and Septimus Brown.

Mrs. Baxley* was arrested in Baltimore about the 30th of December, 1861, by Deputy Provost-Marshal McPhail and committed to the Greenhow Prison in Washington and from thence conveyed to the Old Capitol. She was charged with being a spy and with having lately been to Richmond, Va., with letters to Jefferson Davis and others. When arrested concealed upon her person were found numerous letters which she brought from Richmond; also a commission appointing a Doctor Brown, of Baltimore, a surgeon in the rebel army. John L. Brown writing from headquarters of General Franklin's division, near Alexandria, Va., January 2, 1862, says of Mrs. Baxley: "This woman is the strongest kind of a secessionist. She made her brags to me some five months ago that she had sent some 200 guns to the Southern army." In numerous letters addressed by Mrs. Baxley to the Secretary of State since her imprisonment she admits having carried the letters above referred to to Jefferson Davis, and refers to the communications with General Winder, Mr. Benjamin and other leading rebel authorities, and admits having procured the commission for Doctor Brown by personal application, and as a consideration or reward for the safe conveyance of letters, &c., to the chief of the rebel Government. The said Mrs. C. V. Baxley remained in custody at the Old Capitol in Washington February 15, 1862, when she was transferred to the charge of the War Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, December 29, 1861.

Col. W. W. MORRIS, Commanding Fort McHenry.

COLONEL: Please receive and retain in custody as a prisoner Dr. Septimus Brown.

By order of Major-General Dix:

WM. H. LUDLOW,
Major and Aide-de-Camp.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, December 30, 1861.

General R. B. MARCY, Chief of Staff.

GENERAL: In the temporary absence of Major-General Dix I have the honor to inclose a copy of letter to Brigadier-General Porter sent with the prisoner, Mrs. Baxley, this afternoon. Among other papers found on the person of Mrs. Baxley and which have been sent to General Porter is a commission as surgeon in the rebel army for Dr. Septimus Brown, of this city. The journal kept by Mrs. Baxley and which is also among the papers sent to General Porter is in the form of a daily letter to this Septimus Brown and would clearly indicate the obtaining of this commission as the great object of her journey to Richmond. Doctor Brown* has been arrested and is now in the custody of Colonel Morris at Fort McHenry.

What is the pleasure of the major-general commanding the Army in reference to him? There is no evidence that he sought the commission. He does not seemingly come within the action of the circular order of the Headquarters of the Army of December 16 as he has neither come nor been brought into our lines from Virginia.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. LUDLOW,
Major and Aide-de-Camp.

[Inclosure]

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, December 30, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: In compliance with special instructions this day received from the Headquarters of the Army I send to you as a prisoner to be held in your custody Mrs. Catherine V. Baxley. The papers found on her person and all the circumstances connected with her arrest will be given to you by the provost-marshal of Baltimore, by whom she was arrested.

By command of Major-General Dix:

WM. H. LUDLOW,
Major and Aide-de-Camp.

GOVERNMENT PRISON, Washington, January 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Simply to gratify what I considered a pardonable curiosity—the desire to see Jeff. Davis—I undertook the now difficult and dangerous trip to Virginia by what I am told you are pleased to term the “underground railway.” I carried with me nothing in the world but a few friendly letters packed it is true in my bonnet. I was not trusted with state papers. I am not fitted to be, being very nervous, impulsive and frank; in other words I never calculate.

I reached Richmond after numerous difficulties and delays on the thirteenth day of my departure from Baltimore City—sick, weary and most heartily wishing myself at home. I was of course introduced to the President, and foolishly asked of him the favor of an appointment to a surgeoncy in the Confederate Army for a friend in Baltimore who was quite innocent of the honor intended him. The President strange to say granted the favor asked, and I very unwisely though urged by friends not to do so left for Baltimore with the commission hidden on my person. I brought with me a large number of letters but the commission was the only one I believe that you would term of treasonable import.

I have given you I believe a fair exposition of my quixotic expedition. But it is not so much for myself I would plead but for Dr. Septimus Brown, the gentleman I have gotten into trouble. He had nothing to do with the matter. Why make him responsible for my folly?

* No papers relating to this prisoner have been found except those appearing in this case and the recommendation for his continued detention in Dix to Stanton, February 20, 1862, Vol. I, this series, p. 738. See order for his discharge April 8, 1862, p. 1321.

True I had rather not be confined as I have a child depending on me for guidance and care, just, too, at that age when a child most needs and requires a parent's guiding and restraining hand.

Now, sir, I do not ask mercy; I simply ask for justice. I have heard that William H. Seward was a hard and heartless man, permitting nothing to stand in the way of his boundless ambition; sacrificing alike on the altar of that ambition friends as well as foes, acting always upon the principle that the end justifies the means. Now, sir, I do not believe any such doctrine. I believe there is no man without some good impulse, and surely a woman and a mother pleading to you need not plead in vain.

The "leopard cannot change its spots;" I cannot to save my neck shriek "Union;" but I will go home and meddle no more with edged tools. You can fight hereafter without my aid or intervention.

Respectfully,

C. V. BAXLEY.

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: As nearly as I can remember the following is a true statement of all I have done. I was very anxious to see Jeff. Davis and I determined at any and every risk to do so. I asked friend after friend for letters of introduction. All tried to dissuade me, and positively refused aid or sanction to what they termed my mad freak. At length I succeeded in obtaining simply a letter of introduction, and one of recommendation in favor of a friend for whom I determined (on my own responsibility) to ask a favor of Mr. Davis. I had two requests to prefer—one for a cadetship for my son, the other the one above named. I carried with me a number of letters from friends to friends, sisters, mothers and relatives generally, any one of which I have since been informed could have gone safely by flag of truce.

I had two or three letters for the President, not one containing over a dozen lines—simply letters of greeting from old friends having no bearing whatever on this unhappy war. These I termed my dispatches simply to expedite if possible my trip to Richmond. I could not help feeling amused myself at the gullibility of the people South as well as North. I was made quite a lion of because I was really supposed to have brought important papers to Jeff. General Winder waited on me (my advent having I suppose been heralded) and conducted me (for which I owe him a grudge) somewhat unceremoniously into the presence of His Honor.

Now, Mr. Seward, you are a public man, a business man and a statesman, and is it not reasonable to suppose if I had had in my possession documents of any importance whatever I should have presented them immediately upon my arrival; whereas I reached Richmond on Sunday morning, had letters for the wife of the Belgian minister, a Baltimore lady whose family I knew, drove there, made myself as comfortable as possible, for I was fatigued and sick. On Monday morning wrote a note to ex-President Tyler to call on me as I wished him to introduce me. Mr. Tyler did not get my note, and about 1 o'clock I was waited on by General Winder. It happened very well, though he was not very polished, else probably I should have had to wait a day or two longer, and I was quite as anxious to get home as I had been to get there.

Well, I was introduced to the President, gave him his letters and preferred my requests.

Rebel or not he is certainly a gentleman. Chatted a while very pleasantly, laughed at the account I gave of my many discomfitures and remarked: "You suffered and run all those risks to see that arch rebel Jeff. Davis? Well, in consideration of so much devotion no reasonable request can be denied you." He sent the letter of recommendation before named with his own indorsement to the Secretary of War and a commission was made out and furnished in a few days afterward, Mr. Benjamin remarking to me at the time: "Mrs. Baxley, this is gunpowder should it fall into the wrong hands." A motive of pride, however, induced me to risk it. To say I regret having done so would be superfluous. My conduct has gotten a really innocent person into trouble and that without my own imprisonment is a punishment, for he had often positively assured me that he would not leave Maryland.

I brought quite a number of friendly letters back with me, some of which were marked at the custom-house at Norfolk and some not. I am confident that with the exception of the commission I had nothing of a treasonable character. I had only one sealed letter which the party begged me to deliver to Isaac McKinnon, of Baltimore, only a business letter he assured me. Mr. Deputy Provost-Marshal McPhail got that. I presume he made himself acquainted with its contents: I have no knowledge of the positions, generals, plans of attack or intentions of either Army and this I am willing to subscribe to in the presence of God and before any magistrate or judiciary in the land. I have decidedly and emphatically seen quite as much of the elephant as I desire, and as England assumed I promise from this time forward to be a non-interventionist.

Mr. Seward, I have appealed to you in your capacity of statesman. I now appeal to you as a man. Liberate me, for God's sake. But I would not be selfish; if you must have one victim retain me and liberate Doctor Brown, who I am sure would not have accepted the honor intended. Mr. Seward, my poor little boy came here from Baltimore Saturday night and I begged, wept, prayed and implored he might be allowed to spend the night with me, but was denied. He is looking like a poor little outcast. Liberate me and let me go home to him. I shall die here. Reason is even now tottering. I was angry and indignant at the treatment I experienced at the hands of the deputy marshal and his satellites and made boasts of what I had done [and] what I would do. They were but empty, idle boasts. I have no means to do with, for I even pledged a portion of the remains of other and happier days to defray the expenses of my trip, was partially robbed on the way and obliged to borrow to pay my expenses home. Now, sir, you know all.

Respectfully,

C. V. BAXLEY.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, March 10, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Predicating my application for a release upon your letter which appeared in the papers early in February, announcing that all political or state prisoners who would subscribe to the form of parole as published would be released, I subscribed to the same and forwarded to you through the provost-[marshal] on February 24 or 25. It is urgent, sir, I should be released. I have a child thrown by my incarceration upon the charities of a cold, unfeeling world. My child is entirely dependent upon me for everything. For the past two or three weeks, young as he is (but fourteen years old), he has in order to be nearer me (though he is allowed to see me but once a week for fifteen minutes) been acting in some capacity to a party who furnishes the sutlers. A child who until now has been tenderly nurtured and cared for, [he] came to see me on Saturday in such trim I could scarcely recognize him—dirty, neglected, sick and so thin and careworn—every vestige of my once bright, happy boy gone. My heart ached, and so would yours have done could you have seen him and heard his exclamation, “Ma, if you do not soon get out I shall die.”

This, sir, is some of the bitter fruits of this women-hunting, women-imprisoning process, objectionable to nine-tenths of your own people. Search the Southern prisons from the Gulf Stream to the Potomac and should you find a woman prisoner, except in cases of larceny, murder, &c., call Southern[ers], as they should deserve, cowards. No, sir, the Southern man, gentle or simple, has too exalted an opinion of woman, her attributes and her mission to treat her other than as a woman. He never forgets that to her under God he owes his being.

I may possibly have said more than would seem politic or becoming, but a mother's feelings must plead my excuse. I know, sir, that your power ought to be but is not absolute; 'tis subordinates who hold the reins and wield the power, and while such is the case prayers and pleadings are alike vain and impotent. Use your prerogative, sir; open these prison doors and send forth the women and infants. Give us tangible, visual or mental evidence that your Government is what it assumes to be.

En attendant, I have the honor to subscribe myself, respectfully yours,
C. V. BAXLEY.

Referred to Major Allen for report.*

By order of Secretary of War:

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, March 14, 1862.

DEAR DOCTOR: I do not know how you are affected by this confinement but to me 'tis intolerable. Within the past two weeks through representations made by the superintendent, to whom we appealed and who I believe has at least a suspicion of soul, having been born South, we have been permitted to exercise for half an hour three times a day in the filthy yard thronged by contrabands and surrounded by sentries. Still it is in the open air. I do wish you would write, if but two or three lines, and give to the party who hands you this. It can reach me as this is sent.

Day before yesterday we were informed by Superintendent Wood that in all probability we should be sent to some of the Northern fortresses. The idea of being sent North is death to me. I'd rather they'd shoot me at once. The news from Manassas scared a good many of the cowardly fools whom we are well rid of into taking the oath of allegiance to this magnanimous Government, but our men of stamina have rejected their overtures with scorn. Whilst walking in the yard I addressed sotto voce in passing inquiries to several of our Maryland boys who had just been brought in and find as I supposed it (the evacuation) a strategic affair on the part of our Army. The boys looked pretty rough and rusty—a little depressed at their capture but in good health; say we are not whipped and not going to be.
